Also the German people who had a little bit to do with the development of America celebrated their tricentennial celebration in 1983 called the German American Tricentennial Celebration, and we did not use any Federal money in that effort.

They organized, a Federal commission was created, no Federal money was involved in that.

So I question really whether we should be going down the road of authorizing these sinecures, which is what they are, these Federal slots of employment.

And there is another feature of this employment that should be mentioned: The bill provides, interestingly enough, that the people who get these jobs are exempt from civil service requirements, meaning they do not have to take an examination. All they have to do is pass the examination by the one person that counts; that is the head of the commission.

And of course he will reward his friends; that is politics in America, we do not deny that. They do not have to take the examination. But wait a minute: the bill provides that even though they do not have to pass or take an examination under civil service requirements, now get this, staff are going to be eligible for civil service retirement as a result of their 8 years of public service laboring in the trough, I mean in the work of this commission to determine how we are going to honor Christopher Columbus.

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. DAUB. On that point, are you saying that those hired could have the entitlement of the Ramspeck Act and then bump other Federal employees after their 8 years of employment and take a job without ever having had to take a test in the first place?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Now, I cannot answer that question. Maybe our esteemed colleagues on the majority side can answer that. I do not know the answer to that.

Mr. GARCIA. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GARCIA. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

If I may respond to my colleague from Nebraska [Mr. DAUB], I think our colleague from California is painting a picture that in terms of its accuracy I was hoping to let him finish so that I would be able to respond, because when you take $69,000 as an annual salary and you divide into $220,000, which is the total number of dollars that we are getting annually, I do not see how you can get more than three employees.

Mr. DAUB. That was not my question. My question was, would any or all of those employees, if employed more than 5 years under this commission, would they be entitled to bump into the system under the Ramspeck Act as if they were a Hill employee?

Mr. GARCIA. I would respond to my colleague from Nebraska, I am not prepared to respond to that. I would say to him I will try to get the answer. It seems unlikely, but there is a possibility that may exist, but let us see if we can clarify it for you.

Mr. DAUB. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I thank my colleague for that contribution, but I would like to carry this thought of civil service retirement a little further. Each of the staff would be entitled on eligibility for civil service retirement to obtain $9,628 each year for a lifetime annuity. In other words, if you know the chairman of this commission and get one of these jobs, you are going to get up to about $66,000 a year for the next 8 years and then on your retirement, $9,600 a year; not a bad deal if you can pull it off; all at taxpayers' expense.

I just do not think in view of our deficit situation that this is something we should be talking seriously about.

I want to remind my distinguished colleagues here that last week we saw some of our friends in San Francisco celebrating the Democratic Convention. And let me quote from Mr. Mondale in some of the things that he said in his acceptance speech:

> So tonight we come to you with a new realism, ready for the future and recapturing the best in our tradition. . . . We know that government must be as well-managed as it is well-meaning. . . . One last word to those who voted for Mr. Reagan, you did not vote for $200 billion deficit. . . . Here is the truth about the future. We are living on borrowed money and borrowed time. These deficits hike interest rates, clobber exports, stunt investment, kill jobs, undermine growth, cheat our kids and shrink our future. . . . To the Congress, my message is we must cut spending and pay as we go. If you don't hold the line, I will. That is what the veto is for.

That is what Mr. Mondale said last week in San Francisco. Now, this week in Washington, DC, I wonder how many of my colleagues of the House will give life to those high-sounding principles uttered by Mr. Mondale, the Democratic nominee for President.

And then lest we leave anybody out, Ms. FERRARO had these things to say about these same ideas of deficit spending: "The rules say we must not leave our kids a mountain of debt." Let me comment that here we have the opportunity to remove one rock from this mountain. If we don't remove rocks how can we move mountains? Ms. FERRARO also stated:

> It isn't right that every year the share of taxes paid by individual citizens is going up.

My response to those words are: Are not the taxes of those in Queens and those in Elmore going to pay for this commission's staff when other commissions have been paid by the benevolence of the American public without being taxed for it?

Do we trust the generosity of the American people to give to this worthy cause or do we not trust the generosity of the American people and feel we have to authorize this level of spending?

Members, I think the responsible thing for us to do is to vote down this conference report today. We should be able under the rules of the House, if the procedure permitted, which it did not, to offer an amendment to strike out the money appropriated for this effort. This commission should stand on its own feet just like the German Tricentennial Commission stood, just like the Vietnam Memorial Commission stood; there is no reason or principle why we have to appropriate Federal money. But unfortunately, as we all know on the Suspension Calendar this Member or any Member was precluded from offering an amendment to take out that money.

For that reason, I ask for your "no" vote.

Mr. GARCIA. There are a couple of points I would like to make to set the record straight.

No. 1, there will be an annual appropriation of $220,000 for the seed money for this commission. What we are hoping to do is similar to what we did in 1976, when we went out to the corporate world and were able to get contributions from the private sector, from individuals as well as corporations.

The only difference this time is that we do not want any one corporation to dominate the quincentenary. We ask corporations to contribute up to $50,000 to this commission. There is a cap of $25,000 for individuals who want to contribute. The bulk of the money to support this commission is going to come from the private sector, which my colleague from California is so concerned about.

It is important to understand that when he talks about maximum salaries of $66,400 with seed money of $220,000, we would only end up with three employees to run a commission. That is not the purpose.

Another point, the employees of this commission would not, let me repeat that, would not be under civil service retirement if they have temporary or term appointments or are employed intermittently. The overwhelming majority of the people who will be working at this commission will fall into that category.

It is important that we set the record straight.

Finally, now that we are approaching the 500th birthday of the discovery of the Americas even poor Christopher Columbus has been injected into the campaign; the Presidential campaign of 1984. I would hope that the spirit of Christopher Columbus understands that this is the nature of the hemisphere he discovered.

We are now partisan in determining whether in fact we should have a quincentenary celebration. So I say to my colleague from California that I have all due respect for him. I think he has been consistent because of his votes against the MX missile and the funding for that type of program. It is consistent what he is doing today.

I would, like many of my colleagues, like to see reductions in large appropriations, particularly for defense programs.

Mr. LEVITAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARCIA. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. LEVITAS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would say that I voted against this bill when it was on suspension because I had hoped we would have a chance to amend it along the lines the gentleman from California had outlined.

But I think I am now going to vote in favor of this conference report because I think it is very important that we do take this step to begin to establish the commission that will help us celebrate the 500th year anniversary of the discovery of America.

I would like the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] to recall the words he quoted to the Members of this House from Vice President Mondale's remarks to the Democratic Convention in his acceptance speech. He ended up by saying that if the Congress would not exercise the necessary restraints then he would exercise a veto.

I would say to my friend from California that in the event this bill passes, perhaps we will see whether the President will veto it or not. If the President does not choose to veto it, then we will know where he stands on the issue and if he does, I would certainly, as one Member, give very serious consideration to voting to sustain the veto which I suspect we will not get a chance to have a vote on.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARCIA. I would yield so the gentleman may respond to our colleague.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I am just curious of my friend from Georgia [Mr. LEVITAS] if he would care to speculate as to what Mr. Mondale would do on this bill relative to the exercise of a veto were he in the White House and the bill were presented to him.

Does the gentleman think he would veto this bill?

Mr. LEVITAS. If the gentleman would yield further, I cannot speculate. I had no idea he was going to ask our colleague from New York [Ms. FERRARO] to run, so I certainly could not speculate how he would act on a matter of this sort.

I simply make the point that if the President wants to use a veto, because this is excessive spending, I think we ought to give him that opportunity. And I, for one, pledge to the gentleman and to the President that I would give very serious consideration to upholding that veto for the reasons that the gentleman mentioned.

I would have liked to have seen the President, for example, veto $8½ million for the International Monetary Fund to bail out some of the big banks in this country or some of the other programs.

If the President will exercise the necessary discipline and send us a balanced budget, I would like to vote for that, too, as I know the gentleman from California would.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. If the gentleman will continue to yield, I would hope, as long as we are talking about a collateral matter, that this House, rather than sending this President a continuing resolution which will cover the funding of the Federal Government for the next year, the balance of the year, that we would have the political courage to send this President individual appropriation bills so that the reality of the existence of the veto could in fact be considered by this President.

As it is, we have sent a continuing resolution downtown that, for all practical purposes, denies the President the veto.

Mr. LEVITAS. If the gentleman will yield further, I would simply like to express my appreciation for the opportunity to vote. I wish we had had the chance to strike the funding, but since that is not possible, I think it is important that we adopt this conference report and then begin to focus on some of the other important issues that still face the Congress during the last days of this session.

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, in response to my colleague from Nebraska on his question dealing with the Ramspeck provisions. They will not—and let me repeat that again—they will not have the benefit of this provision which applies primarily to congressional employees.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. COURTER].

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, what I would first like to do is to congratulate my good friend, BOB GARCIA, from across the river, who was very much instrumental in working out the compromises on this piece of legislation which I rise definitely in support of.

I know that we spend a great deal of time in this body talking about the expenditures of money. I do not think I have to take a backseat to too many Members of this House in my desire to act prudently and responsibly when it comes to the expenditures of taxpayers' money. Indeed, often we spend too much. We spend money without really looking at the issue. It is simply theory that we sometimes adopt here that we solve all problems by throwing a few dollars at them hoping that they will go away. But they do not.

We are talking about, in this particular commission, a small sum of money, which Commission is designed to celebrate a crucially important event in the history of our country, 500 years, 500th anniversary of the voyage of Christopher Columbus.

I know that when people from this country go to Europe they marvel at churches that are 600 years old, 800 years old, 1,000 years old. They look at history that goes back 1,000 years, 2,000 years. We do not have that. I suppose the oldest thing we have in this country is this 500th year anniversary. I think it would be a terrible shame and I think it would be a sincere mistake because of the expenditures of a modest sum of money over a 6-year period or an 8-year period that we do not go forward to commemorate a historical event that we ought to be deeply proud of.

As I mentioned before, I would like to thank Members on both sides of the aisle for their cosponsorship. I urge all Members, if there is a recorded vote as some Members indicate there will be, that they vote in favor of establishing this commission so we can move on to saving real money.

● Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on H.R. 1492, to establish a multimember commission for the purpose of planning, coordinating, and conducting activities commemorating the 500th anniversary of the voyages of discovery of Christopher Columbus. The legislation represents our Nation's response to those voyages—voyages that formed the roots of our national existence.

The House Post Office and Civil Service Committee's report (98-150) states that appointments to the Commission are to be divided between Congress and the executive branch to ensure the broadest representation of the American people, especially women and minorities.

During committee consideration of this legislation I offered an amendment to add the words "black people" to the language of the bill since the bill as originally considered had specific references that Italians and Hispanics should take pride in the accomplishment of Christopher Columbus but neglected to include blacks. My amendment was to take note of the fact black people served with Columbus in varying and important capacities. Indeed, a black man, Vincente y Pinzon, served as captain of the Nina.

In lieu of citing the accomplishments of certain groups, the committee decided in favor of language citing "all Americans"—a move which I supported and which was unanimously adopted by the committee. It was my intention, and the committee agreed, that this language should emphasize that "all Americans" in this country should take special pride in the accomplishments of their ancestors with respect to Columbus' voyages. To this end, we need to be reminded of the significant role black people played in this historic event as well as the development of the Western Hemisphere in general and the United States in particular.

I raise this issue today to ensure that once this legislation is enacted that: First, blacks be appointed to the commission; and second, when the commission begins planning the celebrations it should include the contributions made by blacks to the voyages we are commemorating.●

● Mrs. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, though academics may differ as to who should receive recognition for having discovered America, none can argue the important role that Christopher Columbus played in opening up the New World. Today we are voting to establish a commission to commemorate the 500th anniversary of the arrival of the Nina, the Pinta, and the Santa Maria on the shores of Santo Domingo, an historic occasion which marked the beginning of the Americas as we know them today. This lonely Italian seafarer had the courage and tenacity to stake his life on his firm conviction that there was indeed a passage to the east through the west. Only through the foresight of Queen Isabella could his dream come true. We Americans owe a great debt of gratitude to this first Italo-American.

A great tradition was started that day in 1492, which lives on today. Since that time, millions of Italians have come to the shores of the New World to seek a new life filled with opportunities for freedom, and the chance for a better life. In my own State of Rhode Island, the Italian community has participated in, and improved, every aspect of life. Italians have made major contributions in education, the arts, and public service. Such a man was John O. Pastore, an Italo-American who served Rhode Islanders and the Nation with dedication, integrity, and distinction. He is but one of many Italo-Americans who have helped make this Nation what it is today. Other Italo-Americans such as Enrico Fermi, Fiorello LaGuardia, and Arturo Toscanini have all left their mark on American society.

I urge my colleagues to join me today in supporting H.R. 1492. This bill will provide the essential organization and coordination so that we may pay tribute to this Italian sea captain who set out on a sea of disbelief destined to return as the discoverer of the New World.●

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I urge the adoption of the conference report. The 500th anniversary of the journey of Christopher Columbus to the New World will be an occasion for celebrating what our country is all about.

The story of our Nation is the story of immigrants, a story of journeys from the old to the new, from the past to the future. Christopher Columbus led the way for the millions who followed, and in celebrating his journey we celebrate the American experience.

I would like to share with my colleagues the story of two of those who followed the path of Christopher Columbus: My constituents Steve and Margie Cenotti. Their story is told by their granddaughter, Jennifer Butler, of Hamden, CT, in a book which she wrote and published called "A Legacy of Love."

Steve Cenotti's parents, Angelo and Maria Cenotti, left their native village, near Naples, early in this century, and settled in New Haven, CT, where Steve was born. Angelo shoveled coal for $1 a day. When he found work building highways, a job which kept him away from home for months at a time, Maria and the children returned to Italy, where they lived as sharecroppers with nine other families on a communal farm.

Steve returned to New Haven when he was 13. He began school—6 months of kindergarten, the second grade, the fourth grade, then sixth grade, all in 2 years. He went to work as a farm laborer, as a water boy on a road crew with his father, as a delivery truck driver, and then, in 1931, a operator of a gas station.

Margie's parents, Frank and Nancy Testa, had met and married in Italy. They immigrated to Woodbridge, CT, where Frank became a farm laborer and Nancy a maid for "wealthy Yankees." Soon they were able to rent a small farm, where Margie was born. Margie attended a one-room school in Woodbridge—where she graduated first in her class—and then Hillhouse High School in New Haven. By the time she was a teenager, Frank and Nancy had saved enough to purchase their own small farm.

Margie and Steve married in 1933. At her mother's suggestion, Margie began to sell fruits and vegetables from the family farm at the gas station that Steve was running. Steve and Margie were soon able to buy the gas station, and built a house on the property. Over the years, "Margie's Open Air Market" became a New Haven institution. Like so may others in the greater New Haven area, I always knew that I could find the best fruits and vegetables at Margie's.

Margie and Steve worked from sunup to sundown, 7 days a week, until they reluctantly retired and sold their business in 1983. To the greater New Haven community, they left a legacy of 50 years of service to their children and grandchildren, in the works of their granddaughter, "an outstanding example of sharing, hard work, and a legacy of love."

When we celebrate the legacy of Christopher Columbus, we celebrate the legacy of Steve and Margie Cenotti and the generations of immigrants and their sons and daughters who have made this country what it is. In the words of our distinguished colleague from New York, GERALDINE FERRARO:

> America is the land where dreams can come true for all of us. * * * Our faith that we can shape a better future is what the American dream is all about. The promise of our country is that the rules are fair. If you work hard and play by the rules, you can earn your share of America's blessings.

When we celebrate the anniversary of Columbus' journey, we celebrate the achievements of the past and the promise of the future. We celebrate the American dream.

I hope all my colleagues will join me in supporting the creation of the Christopher Columbus Quincentennial Commission to plan for an appropriate, fitting celebration in 1992.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, repeating once again to my colleagues of Italian ancestry, many of whom have placed the Christopher Columbus bill before us, I just want to remind everybody, especially because this is the Year of the Woman, that it was a Spanish woman who gave Christopher Columbus the money to get here.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and the speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 279, nays 130, not voting 24, as follows:

Messrs. DYSON and SHARP changed their votes from "yea" to "nay."

So the conference report was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the conference report just agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

WAIVING CERTAIN POINTS OF ORDER AGAINST CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 5973, DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1985

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 551 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 551

Resolved, That during the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5973) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes, all points of order against the following provisions in the bill for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 2 of rule XXI are hereby waived: beginning on page 2, lines 1 through 15; beginning on page 3, line 23 through page 6, line 10; beginning on page 9, line 15 through page 10, line 5; beginning on page 11, line 9 through page 12, line 6; beginning on page 14, lines 3 through 6; beginning on page 25, line 21 through page 26, line 20; beginning on page 43, lines 7 through 16; beginning on page 47, line 3 through page 49, line 9; beginning on page 52, line 3 through page 53, line 12; beginning on page 56, line 8 through page 57, line 10; beginning on page 63, lines 15 through 21; and beginning on page 65, lines 1 through page 4; and all points of order against the following provisions in the bill for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 6, rule XXI, are hereby waived: beginning on page 17, line 19 through page 18, line 9; and beginning on page 47, lines 3 through 22.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. FROST] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. QUILLEN], for purposes of debate only, pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 551 is a simple rule which waives points of order against certain provisions of H.R. 5973, the Department of the Interior and related agencies appropriation bill for fiscal year 1985, for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 2 and clause 6 of rule XXI.

Clause 2 of rule XXI prohibits a general appropriation bill from containing appropriations for unauthorized purposes or language which has the effect of changing existing law. Waivers of this rule are necessary for 21 appropriating paragraphs of this bill because fiscal year 1985 authorizations for the programs appropriated for in these paragraphs have not been finally enacted, and because some of the paragraphs contain legislative language. I should point out that bills authorizing the programs appropriated for in these provisions are at various stages in the legislative process. Many have been reported by committee and some have been passed by the House or by the Senate, but, until the authorizing legislation is actually signed into law, a waiver of clause 2 of rule XXI is needed to allow consideration of these provisions.

Clause 6 of rule XXI prohibits a general appropriation bill from containing a reappropriation of previously appropriated funds. A waiver of this rule is necessary for two paragraphs of H.R. 5973 because these provisions provide that unexpended balances of funds appropriated for one purpose in a previous fiscal year are made available for a different purpose in fiscal year 1985.

Mr. Speaker, this rule contains no provision for consideration of H.R. 5973. As a general appropriation bill, it has privileged status and may be brought up for consideration without any such provision in a rule. The terms of general debate on the bill will be set by a unanimous consent request by the manager of the bill. Amendments will be considered under the regular rules of the House. Any amendment which is not in violation of those rules will be in order.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5973 appropriates $8.5 billion for the Department of the Interior and related agencies in fiscal year 1985. These funds will support such diverse activities as the operation of our National Park and National Forest Systems, energy research and development and conservation efforts, Indian health services, leasing of mineral and timber rights on federally owned lands, historic preservation, support for the arts and humanities, and establishment of a U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council. All of our districts are touched by these activities. The quality of life for our constituents is improved as a result of these expenditures.

Mr. Speaker, we have a very limited number of legislative days left in our schedule this session. If we are to avoid relying on a massive continuing resolution to fund our Government—and I think that method of establishing fiscal policy is irresponsible and undermines the authority of Congress and its Members—it is absolutely necessary that we move ahead quickly with consideration of the remaining regular appropriation bills. Therefore, I urge the adoption of this rule so that we may proceed to the immediate consideration of the Interior and related agencies appropriation bill.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may use.

Mr. Speaker, the rule has been ably explained. We all admit that there is controversy in regard to the Synthetic Fuels Program. The program was created for a very good reason, and it is no fault of this Congress that the program is not working as well as it should. We should jerk it up, pull some hair, and get the program working. That is what we must do.

It is a matter of national security that we must pass this rule and get down to the business of passing the Department of the Interior appropriations bill. If something should happen in the Persian Gulf, we could be denied the oil that we get from that region. We would then have a tremendous crisis, and it would be because we cannot create synthetic fuels on instant notice.

We must go forward with the program as envisioned in the beginning. If it is cut, in fact, some $9 billion, it does not mean that $9 billion is going to go to the reduction of the deficit. It means that some other agency is going to grab back that $9 billion and spend it. So what we must do, with reason and with caution, is do what is necessary to move the synthetic fuels program forward.

In this Nation we have enough coal to last for centuries. We must be able to convert it with coal gasification and other techniques. We must do whatever is necessary to develop that ability.

I urge adoption of the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. CONTE. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the rule, and urge my colleagues to vote against the rule.

I do so not because of what this rule contains—the routine waivers of points of order against unauthorized appropriations—or because I oppose the Interior appropriations bill. In fact, I will support the Interior bill. I am opposing this rule because of what it does not contain.

Despite the desire of more than 230 of our colleagues to reform the Synthetic Fuels Corporation's Program, this rule does not permit an amendment to be offered to rescind funds from that bloated and wasteful corporation. I had proposed, and printed in the RECORD, an amendment providing for a $9 billion synfuels rescission; Congressmen WOLPE and SYNAR had proposed a $10.2 billion rescission. Whatever the amount, the important thing is that the synthetic fuels program has been like an unguided missile, with too much money landing on too many ill-conceived projects. We need to defeat this rule so that an amendment can be offered to cut back on this disgraceful waste of taxpayers' money.

Mr. Speaker, synthetic fuels were the wave of the future back in 1980. But since then, oil scarcity has turned to glut and the price of imported crude has dropped more than 25 percent. Oil imports are down 33 percent, and the strategic petroleum reserve contains over 410 million barrels of oil. Circumstances have changed, but the Synthetic Fuels Corporation has not.

To my friends who want to see a continued synthetic fuels program, I say that the only way a quorum can be restored on the Board of Directors is with a significantly scaled back corporation. The current stalemate between Congress and the administration will continue unless the program is cut back to a more reasonable level. The only way to save the Synfuels Program is to cut it back.

Just look at the list of projects funded by the Synfuels Corporation and you see a consistent pattern of waste and abuse. You see sweetheart deals, outdated technologies, shaky private support, and obscene price supports. A GAO report released yesterday revealed that the Union Oil shale project will be getting $1 million a day in price supports for 6 years. And that's not all! It's also getting $3.4 billion in tax breaks!

That's the kind of obscenity you expect from Penthouse, but it can't be tolerated from a Federal corporation.

The time has come to stop bailing out the pet projects of the big oil companies. The Synthetic Fuels Corporation has about $13.3 billion left; my $9 billion rescission will still leave enough money for the truly worthy projects—more than enough to demonstrate the synfuels technology.

Mr. Speaker, the choice is clear. Even the supporters of synfuels aren't trying to justify the corporation's actions.

My colleagues over on this side of the aisle are going to campaign this year on the question of fairness, on the question of corporate welfare, on the question of balancing the budget, and on the question of environmental protection. Well, as I said this morning, now is the time to put up or shut up!

People who vote for this rule are voting for the big black Cadillacs and the private airplanes, for the vested interests in this country, and against the poor people.

Are you going to flush another $9 billion down the corporate rat hole while the Democratic Presidential candidate talks about raising taxes?

Are you going to keep subsidizing the big oil companies to the tune of $1 million a day—$1 million a day for 6 years—to build environmentally harmful projects, or are you going to worry about that poor constituent back home going to work every day, 40 hours a week, sweating like hell and paying taxes?

This is going to be one of the most crucial issues that you will vote on this year. If we don't stop this, it's going to be another scandal. Vote no on this rule.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise, as I rarely do, in support of a rule.

Now, my colleagues will remember that some years ago when the Synthetic Fuels Corporation legislation was before this body, I was about as unpopular as an illegitimate child at a family reunion. That was because I felt that the bill at that time went too far and that it unwisely afforded access to the public treasury for enormous sums of money to people who would not spend it correctly. Those expectations have been realized, but still I urge my colleagues to support this rule—for a very special reason. I urge them to support it because when you are out to do in something as irresponsible and as evil as the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, you should do it thoroughly, and you should do it all the way. You should not do it by halves. You should not do it by thirds.

Now, my colleagues here know that I have spent considerable time, in the Subcommittee on Investigations and Oversight of the Energy and Commerce Committee investigating the Synthetic Fuels Corporation and the way that its Board of Directors and officers have behaved. Their behavior has been both shameful and shameless. They have been exceedingly careless with the public money, but they have been extraordinarily careful to live very well at the public expense, while contributing nothing to the public wealth.

Now, these rescissions which would be offered by my good friends and colleagues, and I commend them for their concern, would cut the amount of money that can be spent by the Synthetic Fuels Corporation back to $2 billion, or to some slightly larger sum of money. That is probably a desirable thing, but those rescissions will still leave in place the Synthetic Fuels Corporation.

Now, the Board of Directors and the employees of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation remind me of a very highly pampered congregation of well fed, well cared for hogs. They have slopped exquisitely well at the public trough and they needed apparently very little in the way of instruction on how it is that they should live well at the public expense.

Let me share with my colleagues just a few of the extraordinary excesses we have uncovered at the Synthetic Fuels Corporation.

Salaries. In an unrestrained orgy of spending, Synfuels officials have lavished money on themselves in high salaries, outrageously generous fringe benefits and luxurious headquarters. Eight Synfuels officials earn more than Cabinet secretaries. Five others are paid at the $69,000 Cabinet level, and 55 of the agency's 177 employees make more than $50,000 a year. The Synfuels Corporation president earns $135,000 a year, and one vice president makes $108,000!

Fringe benefits. All Synfuels employees are allowed to sock away 6 percent of their salaries in a savings-retirement plan, to which the Federal Government contributes 50 percent more. The SFC also pays the full cost of medical and dental insurance, and vests employees 50 percent with retirement benefits within 6 months of their employment—and fully vests them within 1 year. These benefits are unheard of in other Government agencies or for that matter in the private sector.

Luxury accommodations. The SFC is headquartered in four floors of prime office space in downtown Washington. The building is equipped with saunas, as well as squash and racquetball courts. Synfuels officials signed a 5-year $10 million lease! To achieve the appropriate degree of splendor, $522,919 was spent by the SFC to refurbish their headquarters. The costs included $14,661 for the services of an interior decorator, $374,739 for furniture, and $83,260 for carpeting the executive suites.

Travel. Synfuels executives have been diligently exploring golf courses, sauna baths and night clubs around the world. The Corporation's travel expenses amounted to almost $600,000 in 1981-82. The vice president for technology is clearly the Marco Polo of Synfuels. Some months he is away from his office for more than 10 working days. He flies to energy industry meetings in such posh resort areas as Palm Springs, Aspen, London, Bermuda, Brussels, and Dusseldorf.

If the rule is rejected and if the amendments are accepted, you will have eliminated potentially a few projects, but you will have left this well-bred congregation of fatted and well-living hogs slopping well and comfortably at the public trough.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I will yield to the gentleman in just a minute, and I do apologize to the gentleman. I have the spirit in me and I have to let it forth.

The hard fact of the matter is that the Board of Directors of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation and all of their friends, cronies, and relatives will continue to build the most extraordinary group of retirement benefits, the most splendid offices, the most delightful vacation programs and the most extraordinary salaries within the power of the Federal Government to give. They will live extremely well at the public expense.

My plea to the body here today is a very simple one. The Synthetic Fuels Corporation is not going to give up in the absence of an adequate number of members for a quorum and there is no prospect that they will get one. And it is unlikely that, in the foreseeable future, there will be any new projects.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, what I would urge my colleagues to do is let us be like the old bull and the young bull. The young bull said, "There are cows in the other field. Let us run down and entertain one." The old bull said, "Son, let us walk down and entertain them all."

My counsel is, let us be patient. Let us wait. Let us attend to the Synthetic Fuels Corporation in a proper way when we can.

In the meantime, they are as ineffectual as they can be. We can attend to them properly through the legislative process instead of through an inadequate mechanism that simply cuts back on the amount of money they can spend on projects. If we were to take that course, we could deal with the absolutely splendid style of living to which they would like to become permanently accustomed rather than merely reducing their overall budget.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, let me ask the gentleman, and we appreciate this assurance, I happened to have been a supporter of the program up to this point.

Mr. DINGELL. I was really not.

Mr. DICKS. But I think it should be reformed. Now, I know it is investigation and oversight, but can we expect substantive changes in the program?

Mr. DINGELL. Oh, let me tell the gentleman this: I have never given my word on this floor that I am going to do somebody in that I did not do so.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT].

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by yielding to the gentleman from Iowa. I understand he has a question he would like to address to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

If I could have the attention of the distinguished chairman of the Energy and Commerce Committee before the gentleman leaves, I was listening to his comments and I get the strong impression that the gentleman is willing to bring forth a measure which would abolish the Synthetic Fuels Corporation.

I wonder if the gentleman could tell us when we might mark up this bill in committee to get rid of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, and I am sure the gentleman from Mississippi will yield so he can answer that question.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, just as soon as we have the proper substance and the proper opportunity, I assure the gentleman that that will be my goal.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to this rule. I wish it were possible to simply defeat the previous question here and amend the rule to make in order the Conte and Wolpe-Synar amendments to rescind $9 billion and $10.25 billion for the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. But unfortunately, the precedents indicate that it is not in order to amend a rule on the floor to make in order a nongermane amendment, so our only recourse is to send this back to the Rules Committee and let them put those amendments in order with the necessary waivers. We lost it on a 4-to-7 vote yesterday.

Mr. Speaker, I am not one who is enamored with waiving rules or making in order nongermane amendments. Ordinarily our plate is full enough without having to introduce additional courses. But I am convinced in this instance the waivers are necessary because we're really not talking about piling more on our plates—we're talking about trimming some fat—$9 to $10 billion in Federal fat to be precise. We're talking about going on a little fiscal diet around here which is long overdue given our deficit situation. We're not talking about a crash diet that will starve the Synthetic Fuels Corporation to death. Even with the rescissions provided in the Conte and Wolpe amendments we're still left with about a $9 billion synthetic fuels program.

Back on June 27 of this year I joined with my leadership colleagues on this side of the aisle in writing to the President in support of the synthetic fuels policy he announced on May 14. In that letter we expressed our agreement with the need to rethink the level of Federal subsidies available for the Synfuels Program. We said, and I quote, "Especially in light of the need to eliminate unnecessary Federal spending, continuing massive subsidies to the corporate sponsors of uneconomic synfuels projects are indefensible." We went on to indicate that the President's proposal to rescind half the moneys available to the Corporation is, and I quote, "a good compromise that all of us can support."

In a June 26 letter to the author of one of the rescission amendments, Mr. CONTE, OMB Director Stockman expressed the administration's strong support for his attempt to offer the rescission amendment to the Interior appropriations bill. In response to those who argue that no outlays will result from the $19 billion in budget authority available for synfuels subsidies, Mr. Stockman wrote, and I quote:

Virtually every dollar committed to a project by the Synthetic Fuels Corporation will lead to a dollar of outlays. The prudent adjustment proposed by the President and embodied in your amendment recognizes this changed reality and would protect the deficit from a synthetic fuels outlay hemorrhage while preserving a program that in total is equal to nearly forty times the annual DOE Fossil Energy research budget.

Mr. Speaker, if there was ever a time for us to waive the rules to help restore some fiscal sanity around this place, this is it. This is not a half-baked proposal. The Conte amendment to rescind $9 billion narrowly lost in the Appropriations Committee by a vote of 17 to 23, while another Conte amendment to rescind $5 billion lost on a vote of 19 to 22. Over 230 of our colleagues have cosponsored H.R. 4098, the Synthetic Fuels Corporation Fiscal Accountability Act which calls for a reform of the program. I have received a letter signed by some 13 national organizations urging that these rescission amendments be made in order—groups that include the Sierra Club, the Wilderness Society, Friends of the Earth, Environmental Action, and the National Audubon Society.

While this vehicle may not be the most perfect one to carry out this policy, we should understand that realistically it's the last train leaving the station this year. You can talk about rules violations and committee jurisdictions until you are blue in the face, but the fact remains that this is the only way we are going to get a vote on this issue and have a chance to save some $9 to $10 billion in one fell swoop. Both of our party platforms will be long on rhetoric about deficits this year, but here's an opportunity to put our votes where our platitudes are.

Let's vote down this rule, send it back to the Rules Committee and bring back a rule that gives us this last chance to strike a major blow for fiscal responsibility in this Congress.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOTT. I would be glad to yield to the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. YATES. I think that there is the opportunity to consider it if OMB would send a Presidential rescission request to the Congress, which it has not done. OMB has professed to be opposed to further funding of synthetic fuels projects, and yet it has not yet sent down an appropriate rescissions request. If that request were sent down here, it could be considered within 1 week, at the longest 25 days need go by before it can come to the floor as a matter of highest privilege.

The fault here lies at the doorstep of OMB.

I would hope, speaking for myself and for the Interior bill, that the rule were sustained, because I would not want the same fate for the Interior bill that befell the Transportation bill. I would not want it wound up in the Transportation Subcommittee.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, if I could reclaim my time, I really think that by defeating this rule now and making these other amendments in order we might help the gentleman in his effort to pass this bill. There is opposition to the bill now because of not having this opportunity that might not be there if given the opportunity of at least debating it.

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. LOTT. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BROYHILL. I would like the attention of the gentleman from Michigan, because my understanding is on that very point that the legal counsel for OMB said that this could not be done legally and that the Congress would have to take the initiative to change the law in order to rescind this.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLPE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I simply would like to indicate that a number of members of the House Budget Committee did approach the administration with a letter requesting precisely the action of their initiative for rescission. We received back a letter in response saying they did not believe they had the authority because of the unique manner in which the SFC was created in the first place and that is the nub of the problem.

Mr. YATES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOTT. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. The problem was OMB did not send down a pure rescission request. It sent down a multiple request, and under the Rules of the House that was referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. LOTT. I urge my colleagues to vote against this rule.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Science and Technology, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FUQUA].

Mr. FUQUA. Mr. Speaker, I think we need to look back in the 1970's and around 1980 when those of us who were here were experiencing gas lines and people were demanding that something be done about it. I think we have to go back, and my good friend from North Carolina and many of the others, the distinguished majority leader, were here. If you go back and look at the circumstances that existed back in that period of time and ask yourselves has that changed, are we energy sufficient: no, we are not energy sufficient. We are in a temporary glut and prices have been depressed.

But we have no assurances that that is going to continue year after year when just recently we saw almost daily that some barge tanker in the Persian Gulf was burning afire, and that could happen again today. Other disruptions could happen to the world's supply of oil.

Next week, with the concurrence of the leadership, we hope to bring up the authorization bill for the Department of Energy and at that time I plan to offer an amendment that would transfer some approximately $2 billion from the SFC into the Department of Energy to be used over a period of years for small demonstration projects, not commercial size and not laboratory size, that could demonstrate nonnuclear technology, could be energy conservation, solar, geothermal, fossil, preparation of fossil fuel, all manners of types that could be utilized for that so that when we do need this technology, whether it be the SFC or SFC, Jr., or whatever, that we will have the better expertise in order to make technical decisions about the important issues that we will be facing.

I hope we will not use a meat ax today and try to remove all of this money. I have not been pleased at the SFC. I am disappointed. But let us not wreck the whole program just because we do not like somebody that is in there or somebody's mismanagement that may have taken place.

So I urge that we support this rule and support the bill. It comes from the Appropriations Subcommittee on Interior. Many other programs, all of the energy programs with the exception of weatherization, will be subject to a point of order, and I do not think we in this House want to assume the responsibility of having the other body write our energy legislation.

We have a responsibility in this House. I think we can do that.

The gentleman from Michigan has indicated his interest in trying to work to improve and make functional the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. I hope we can do that, and I hope that we can approve this rule, we can act in a responsible fashion and try to move to solve our energy problems.

My friends, listen to me. Our problems are only temporary right now as far as thinking they are solved. They are a long way from being solved in this country, and this country is even more dependent on oil today than we have ever been before. We have had problems with acid rain. We have problems with our nuclear industry. Our solar industry, opportunist as it may be, has not been able to achieve what we would like it to do.

We have a lot of problems facing us and I hope we can move this rule and get on with the business of trying to solve our energy problems.

Mr. RUDD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FUQUA. I will be delighted to yield.

Mr. RUDD. I hope the wisdom of the gentleman in the well's remarks will not go over the heads of the people here because the synthetic fuels industry in South Africa, which I recently visited, has proved that we can have synthetic fuels at the rate of about $2.50 a gallon for gasoline.

Mr. Speaker, twice during the 1970's this Nation found itself grossly unprepared to deal with a serious energy crisis. Nevertheless, once the waiting lines cleared at the gas pumps, we quickly forgot the pain. We forgot how vulnerable we really are to manipulation of our energy supplies from abroad.

It is only a matter of time before our own oil and gas reserves are depleted. By the next decade, the United States will likely import between 40 and 45 percent of its petroleum, up from the current one-third. By the year 2010, it is projected that domestic oil reserves will be only 44 percent of their 1982 level representing less than 5 years' production; gas reserves will decline by 60 percent during the same time period, representing less than 6 years' production in 2010.

There is no question that the United States will have to develop a synfuels industry to meet the energy requirements necessary for strong economic growth and national security.

However, the high capital costs and technical risks now required to design, construct and operate synthetic fuels projects are acting as a barrier to involvement by even the largest energy companies.

True, synfuels now cost more than conventional energy resources. The purpose of the Synthetic Fuel Program, however, is simply to provide the know-how, experience and fair amount of plant—with some Government support—so that the United States would not be left helpless in the event of another energy emergency.

I recently had the opportunity to visit South Africa which has been very successful in synfuels production. The South Africans' Sasol II and III plants consume some 32 million tons of coal per year and in turn provide that country with 40 to 60 percent of its transportation fuel needs. The cost of fuel there is about $2.50 per gallon, or about $50 per barrel.

The estimated average international price of crude oil as of mid-July is $28.65 per barrel.

There is obviously a difference in price, but not so large a difference that synfuels could not become a viable option should we again be faced with the sort of energy crisis we experienced twice during the 1970's.

It is also true that the Synfuels Corporation's Board no longer has enough members left to make a quorum and conduct business. The answer, however, is not to abandon the Corporation and its objectives, but to appoint a board of quality individuals and get on with the business of ensuring our Nation's energy self-sufficiency.

I urge my colleagues to vote for the rule. Let's not forget the severe energy crises we experienced during the last decade by abandoning this effort to develop a viable, economical synfuels industry that will help us cope with any future energy crises that may arise.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Members that in the shale areas of this Nation there are 1.8 trillion barrels that are available if we develop it properly. Let us imagine that we allocate $1 a barrel to apply against our national debt. It would wipe it out completely.

Now, what is wrong with going forward with a program that has so much potential?

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE].

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to join with my colleagues to try to correct a mistake that we in Congress made a couple of years back, and I am delighted to join in this effort to curb what is undoubtedly the biggest corporate welfare project that we endorse here in Congress.

I think it is interesting to look at what is being said in response to this effort to save $9 billion. The first thing that has been said is that we should do the whole job, that instead of just trying to save $9 billion we should wipe out the Synthetic Fuels Corporation.

As a member of the Energy and Commerce Committee I was delighted to hear the chairman of that committee offer that as a response. But it is not a very effective response because for the last year and one-half there have been members of our committee, including the ranking member, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BROYHILL], who have tried to get the Synthetic Fuels Corporation dissolved.

But what has happened? Has there been a committee meeting to discuss the issue? No. Has there been a subcommittee markup on the bill? No. Has there been a subcommittee hearing on the legislation? No.

It is very interesting that the chairman of the committee comes here and tells us that we ought to get rid of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation when for the last year and one-half a majority of the members of the committee have wanted to do that and we cannot get any action.

The bottom line is that when we get down to talking about taking action on this issue the leadership on the other side of the aisle circles the wagons to protect this corporate welfare. That is the bottom line. And I think that the Members of this House should realize that despite the rhetoric we have been unable to move on this issue, and this is an opportunity to do it.

The second thing the opponents of our effort say is that we ought not throw out the baby with the bathwater. There is some good that can come from the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, they say, so we do not want to destroy it.

Mr. Speaker, this amendment does not destroy it. It essentially does one thing. It leaves enough money for the research to continue and for the demonstration projects to continue, but it stops the subsidization of commercial production of synthetic fuels. That is an important policy change—a change that is needed.

When Congress established the SFC in 1980, making available $19 billion for related activities, oil prices were projected to reach $75 to $124 per barrel by 1990; America was dependent on imported oil for 18 percent of its energy supply; and the memories of gas lines were fresh in the minds of millions of Americans. Today, since the President took office, the price of imported crude oil has declined more than 25 percent, and oil imports are down 33 percent compared to 1980 levels.

As a consequence of these changes, the presumptions that underlie the current Synfuels Program are inconsistent with the realities of today's marketplace and with the realities of today's Federal budget deficit. It is apparent that continuing the Synfuels Program at the pace envisioned in 1980 will require enormous budget outlays that would not be offset by any economic benefits. A rule should be granted which will enable us to discuss this issue and to debate the level of Federal funding—if any—that is required by the synfuels program. I urge my colleagues to vote against the rule and to support effort to reduce the funding for the SFC.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would observe that at this point the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FROST] has 18 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. QUILLEN] has 16 minutes remaining.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE].

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, this is the first time in the 6 years that I have been in this body that I have risen to oppose a rule. I do not do so lightly. I would not be here if I felt there was not so much at stake, and if there was any reasonable procedural alternative.

But the fact of the matter is that the manner in which the Synthetic Fuels Corporation was created in the first instance has made it totally exempt from the normal appropriations and authorization process that takes place annually.

We are told that simply the desire to reduce the appropriation constitutes legislation on an appropriation bill. But then we are told we cannot even amend the annual authorization bill unless the authorization committee itself acts on the Synfuels Corporation provisions of the current law.

This is the core of the problem: the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, when it was created, was designed to be insulated from congressional oversight. The argument was advancd that it was important to allow some continuity in the development of a Synfuels Program, and the Corporation needed to be insulated from capricious actions of the Congress.

But the purpose of the insulation was to protect us from the exercise of commonsense. There is not a Member of this body that is not aware that there is no more highly publicized example of waste in the entire Federal budget than the Synthetic Fuels Corporation.

And it is not solely a question of management incompetence and conflicts of interest. What is also at issue is the simple fact the technologies that the SFC seeks to commercialize are not yet sufficiently mature. The corporations that are involved simply do not know what they are doing.

Let me emphasize that the issue is not whether one is pro or con synfuel development. I for one believe we ought to have a very significant synfuels research and development effort. I think more funds should be put into the research and development of synthetic fuel. What is at issue in the Synthetic Fuel Corporation debate is whether or not we should be throwing subsidies at corporations not for research and development but for the premature commercialization of synthetic fuels.

The oil and coal interests want those subsidies so that they can avoid the cost and the risk of synfuels development. They would love to have the American taxpayers assume the full cost and the full risk, and that is the issue before us now.

If you are going to support this rule, you are saying that you are prepared to allow the taxpayers to assume the risk and the burden and the cost that should properly be assumed by the corporations.

Let me say one last thing. To those of you who have suggested we should let the normal legislative process run its course, I would point out that last year I introduced legislation that 230 Members of this body cosponsored that would prohibit the Synfuels Corporation from making any further allocations until the Congress had an opportunity to review and approve its spending plan.

Not only did a majority of the Members of this body cosponsor that legislation, but a majority of the members of all three committees to which that bill was referred lent their names as cosponsors. Yet that legislation simply has not moved. This floor vote is the only chance we will have to vote against the wasteful spending of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. I urge a "no" vote on the rule.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MCKINNEY].

Mr. MCKINNEY. We are having fun here today in this election process. I have been fascinated. We have managed to bring it into everything from Christopher Columbus to synthetic fuels and God knows where we will go. But let us put November 1984 behind us for a moment, ladies and gentlemen, and let us take a look at a few basic facts; do not anybody go home and say that by rescinding this money you are going to save the taxpayers not one single dime.

You are not going to save any more money than if you rescinded FHA allowances for underwriting mortgages.

Now, that is fact one.

Fact two, are you going to save money? No. Because you do not even have a quorum on the board of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. They cannot do anything. The money is needed for an expression, however, of our commitment. Think about it for just a moment.

I agree with my good friend from Michigan that the Synthetic Fuels Corporation needs a swift kick somewhere in the barnyard that he was discussing. But what has really happened? You have a Director of OMB, Mr. Stockman, and you have an administration, unfortunately mine, that has seen fit to put members on that Board who wish to destroy the Corporation, who have seen fit to hire a counsel, no longer with them, who saw fit to destroy the Corporation. No wonder the Corporation does nothing, as my friend from Michigan would say, but live high.

However, how soon you forget. My good friend from Massachusetts who I have known for some of the best years of my life said, "Pity the poor working man."

Well, I pity the poor working men when my working men could not get to work because there was no gas, they could not get to work; and their factories were greyed out in Bridgeport down to 40 percent of delivery. So they went home, even if they could get to work, without work.

How quickly we forget.

And have things improved in the Persian Gulf? My God, they are worse. We have a war going on between Iran and Iraq that will make the 100 Years' War look like a simple thing. We have a powder keg of the crazies and looney-bins throughout the entire world in charge of our energy.

The very same people who say we are going to save money, which is not true at this point, are turning around and saying to me, which I will not do; that we should spend hundreds of millions of dollars on defense, sophisticated weapons and so on and so forth, when this Nation is indefensible if it does not have energy independence.

This Nation's foreign policy and its defense posture in the long run are going to be totally controlled by this Nation's ability to produce an independent energy market. It was why in 1977 I came to you on this floor and we outlawed the exportation of Alaskan oil. That is why the majority leader and myself and several others sat for 18 months trying to put some commitment on the part of the greatest Nation in the world to be independent from the crazies and crackpots who, by an act of God, sit on top of the energy in this world.

Think about it. You are asking your people to suffer the greatest budget deficit in the history of this country to sacrifice for weapons and armies which have no sustainability whatsoever without energy independence. We have 80 days, 80 days' worth of fuel in the strategic petroleum reserve; 80 days, think about it.

I have not yet found a fighter plane that will fly with solar power.

My friend, Mr. SYNAR, who I greatly respect, in September 1983, to the Washington Post said, and I quote: "I believe in the free market but I am a pragmatist. Reality dictates that something more than the free market is going to be necessary in a crisis."

Are we so incompetent that through this back door stupid way of trying to limit this corporation, are we so incompetent that we cannot—

Mr. CONTE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKINNEY. I have no time.

I spent 4 years; we must have this authorizing committee bring the Synthetic Fuels Corporation to a sensible stance; we need it.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SYNAR].

Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Speaker, over the last 2 years I have had the responsibility as chairman of the subcommittee on Environment, Energy and Natural Resources of the Committee on Government Operations to have oversight over the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. I have also served as ranking member of the Subcommittee on Fossil and Synthetic Fuels of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, where we have authorization over this same corporation.

It is over this last 2 years that I come to you today with the realization that we must do something now. What I would ask you to do today is cut through the rhetoric which we are going to hear in the next hour with respect to this rule.

This issue does not involve energy security. If it does then I think the Arabs are going to find it very interesting that we are prepared to spend $92 a barrel for oil and we are inviting them to raise the price to that level.

This is simply a question of corporate welfare. I did not say it, the gentleman from Iowa did not say it, Getty Oil said it when they reviewed the Synthetic Fuels Corporation.

Very simply what we have here is the failure by the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, plain and simple.

We cannot and we will not meet the goals this Congress set for this corporation.

But more importantly, synthetic fuels are not commercially viable now. They are not commercially viable now. If they were, the industry would be embracing this corporation. But in reality they are running from it.

The issue here today is, Mr. Speaker, very simple; what are the priorities of this Congress going to be? This year alone 3 million children will be without a school lunch program, 300,000 families off welfare, 1 million people less receiving food stamps, and yet we are about to put $2.7 billion into one corporation, $1 million a day for 6 years.

That is not the type of priorities I think this Congress wants. If you are from Texas and Oklahoma, I want you to go home after this vote and I want you to tell your oil producer that you are prepared to pay $92 a barrel for oil when all they can get is $25 a barrel.

And I want you to go to your gas producer and say you are prepared to pay them only $3, but you are willing to buy from the Synfuels Corporation for $12.50. Not priorities I think that producing State Congressmen can rally around.

What we are doing by this simple rule is this: We are not killing this Corporation because all of us who are concerned about it are commited to the synfuel development in this country. But we have made a commitment of $3 billion up to this point and whichever amendment is allowed to come on this rule will still allow $3 billion more. If $6 billion is not a commitment to synthetic fuels, I do not know what is.

In conclusion, let me say very simply, if you believe in energy security you can support the defeat of this rule because what we are saying is that we do not want energy security at any cost.

If you believe that we must hold the line and set priorities in this Congress, then you can support the defeat of this rule.

But most importantly, if you believe in fairness and equity, you can do no less than to defeat this rule.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to the proposed rule. I do so reluctantly because I have great respect for the chairman and the committee. But I do so adamantly because there is an injustice in this rule, and there is an injustice in the Federal Government that is going to cost the American taxpayer billions of hard-earned dollars if we don't act now. We must cut money from the Synthetic Fuels Corporation and, to do so, we must defeat this rule.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I will stand second to none in concern for this Nation's energy security. I have devoted the lion's share of my time here in Congress to energy issues—in particular the security of this Nation's energy supplies. The issue before us today, however, is not an issue of energy security. It is an issue of how that energy security is most productively achieved at the lowest possible cost to the taxpayer. The question is not whether we need an insurance policy, the question is what kind of coverage that policy provides and how much that policy costs. In my view the Synthetic Fuels Corporation represents little more than marginal security—at best—but at a staggering and mostly unnecessary cost.

As chairman of the Environment, Energy and Natural Resources Subcommittee and ranking majority member of an authorizing subcommittee, I believe that I have followed the Corporation's trials and tribulations as closely as any other Member of Congress. There can be little argument that the SFC's 4-year history has been fraught with incompetence, mismanagement and cronyism. And throughout this period I have often been a vocal critic of the program's direction, or lack thereof. Yet I refrain from supporting specific synfuels legislation, intent on assessing the merits of the program on its substance rather than its reputation. But now, after 4 years, we know precisely what the program is all about. We know what projects the SFC intends to support, what they offer and what they will cost the taxpayers of this Nation. And, most important perhaps, we know what the SFC has been unable to do and what this program will never achieve. The simple fact is, synthetic fuels will not be commercially viable for the foreseeable future. When they are industry will do it—and without billions of dollars in Federal handouts.

Yet we sit here today with no control over this program. At any time, an operating quorum of directors can be reinstated and billions of taxpayer dollars in contracts rushed out the door.

If you consider nothing else today, I urge you to go beyond the traditional rhetoric surrounding this issue, to go beyond the image of the Ayatollah, beyond the image of Persian Gulf strife, and focus on the substance of this program—the projects themselves. It's the projects that make the program.

My Government Operations Subcommittee recently received a GAO report culminating a 6-month investigation into the SFC's proposed assistance to the Union Oil Co. Not long ago, the Union phase II oil shale project was awarded a $2.7 billion letter of intent representing the SFC's largest and most costly project. I will not dwell on all of the questions raised by this report other than to say that the American taxpayer will be paying Union Oil Co. an average of roughly $1 million each and every day for 6 years beginning in 1989 if the SFC finalizes this contract as it intends to do. And what are we buying? We are buying Union Oil a 20-percent rate of return to expand a facility that Union so far has made 20 unsuccessful attempts to operate; $1 million a day to the tune of $2.7 billion. This is exactly what the vote is all about today—priorities and equity. By shutting the door on our opportunity to address this issue now, as the present rule does, we are opening the door for Union Oil Co. and others like it. A vote for the rule is not less than a vote to hand over $2.7 billion to Union Oil.

Should we be concerned now about billions of dollars that won't be paid out of the Treasury until 1989? I think the answer is obvious, since we are looking at outyear budget expenditures every day. Moreover, it is estimated that a 1-percent rise in interest rates now will add $10 billion to interest payments due in 1986; this will cause us to borrow more money and push rates up higher. Where will we be in 1989?

This is a question I was repeatedly asked over the recent recess. During the 3-week period I visited 80 towns in my district and met with thousands of my constituents. Time and time again the message was clear: cut the deficits, bring interest rates down and stop mortgaging our future and our children's future. We all know that we must reduce our deficits, both those we have now and those we are still creating. But, I ask you, where are our priorities? In the last 3 years we have stripped 300,000 families of welfare benefits, 1 million Americans of food stamp assistance, and cut 3 million children from the School Lunch Program. In Oklahoma alone, 7,000 families—mostly workingwomen with dependent children—have been told they are no longer eligible for Federal assistance. And the elderly remain in fear of further Social Security cuts and rising health care expenses—to which the Government responds we can no longer help with. I ask you, where are our priorities?

We now know that the SFC is not merely providing incentives for synfuels development, it is guaranteeing lucrative profit margins that will result in billions of dollars in additional budget outlays. The program has become, as the chairman of Getty Oil warned it would in 1980, nothing more than corporate welfare.

In conclusion, I ask only for the opportunity for the House to reassess the wisdom and merits of the present synfuels program before it's too late. It is after all a $13 billion responsibility, it is our responsibility and it deserves our immediate attention. Yet the Rules Committee has said that we cannot address this issue. We cannot address whether it makes sense to pay Union Oil $1 million a day—because, they say, it is not germane. I would suggest that perhaps there is nothing more germane than precisely this issue. It is an issue of priorities. It is an issue of equity.

The amendment Mr. WOLPE and I wish to offer does not gut the Synfuels Program. The Government has already committed over $3 billion to synfuels projects—leaving $3 billion available under our proposal provides a $6 billion commitment. Hardly gutting the program. Our rescission—a $10.25 billion rescission—would make a clear and responsible fiscal statement. A statement that says: At a time when Congress must hold the line on lunches for schoolchildren and health care for the elderly, we will not stand idly by while Union Oil is guaranteed payments of $1 million a day. This is what we are voting on today. I urge you to vote for fiscal responsibility and against billion dollar corporate handouts. I urge you to vote "No" on the rule.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BROYHILL].

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Speaker, it is time to stop squandering the billions of dollars that have been made available for the Synthetic Fuels Program. Anyone who has followed the continued debate on this issue must come to the inescapable conclusion and that is that billions of dollars are being poured down a rathole.

Now, the gentleman from Connecticut and others have referred to the energy security and they asked whether or not we should be developing an energy supply source that would contribute to the Nation's energy security.

Mr. Speaker, in order to contribute to energy security the technologies that we develop must be, No. 1, reliable, they must be cost effective, they must be environmentally sound. In addition, the industry that we develop must be able to sustain itself and grow on its own.

To date, not one single project that has been put before the SFC has met this criteria. In fact, what we have is a long list of dropouts. Exxon has dropped out, Westinghouse has dropped out, Ashland Oil has withdrawn from their project, SOHIO has dropped out, Mobil has dropped out, Panhandle Eastern, and the list goes on and on.

In other words, if these projects are not economically viable and we cannot sustain them without massive amounts of Federal subsidies, let us not start them. If an energy industry cannot survive, how in the world can it contribute to energy security?

Mr. Speaker, the SFC has before it a number of projects and they project that the product that they will get from these projects will amount to only 135,000 barrels a day. That is if they work. In fact, the Union Oil, phase 1 project, they cannot even get to work.

All I am saying to my colleagues is that by continuing to pump billions of dollars into a program that you are going to have continued billions of dollars to operate is no way to create energy security. All we are doing is just ending up bankrupting ourselves.

Mr. Speaker, all we are asking for is an opportunity to debate this issue. The 1980 Interior appropriations bill included appropriations for this program. They now have $13.3 billion in uncommitted funds. All we are asking is that the Members vote to rescind a little part of this.

The administration's position is that we rescind $9 billion and require that the other projects that are funded from the amounts left, the subsidy, have some relationship to the price of competing fuel.

So join us in voting down this rule so we can get the Rules Committee to bring back a rule that we can live with.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. OTTINGER].

Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Speaker, I have known the chairman of the Energy Conservation and Power Subcommittee of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, a very close friend and I greatly respect my chairman, but I have got to disagree with him on this issue.

The Synthetic Fuels Corporation, established with the best of intent, has proved to be a total failure. It simply is not time in terms of technology or in terms of cost to commercialize synthetic fuels.

I totally support the proposal of my other chairman, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FUQUA] to create a fund to transfer funds from this Corporation and to use them for research and development so we can get this technology and price to a point where the oil companies, who have ample resources, can take it over and it would become a commercially viable option for us.

But to try to commercialize something that is not subject to commercialization, to put money, as the Synthetic Fuels Corporation is proposing to do, in a Union Oil project that the projected product cost will be $92 a barrel and therefore will be totally unsalable, just does not make any sense at all.

I do not think that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE] and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SYNAR] have gone far enough. I think that we ought to do away with the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, put the money back into research and development authorized by the Science and Technology Committee and proceed on that basis. We ought to be developing the technology for synthetic fuels. We ought not to be commercializing it.

The scandals that have arisen in the operation of this Corporation are just outrageous. Of some dozen projects of commitments made only one small project has gone forward and that project, according to its sponsors, would have gone forward without Federal money.

So that the Corporation, after having spent $3 billion of the taxpayers' money or committed it, has not done a thing worth while.

I would urge defeat of this rule.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, it is easy to forget the past. My mind goes back to 1973 when we did not have the gasoline, when we did not have the means to get to work and we would have paid most any price per gallon because it is a necessity.

Today we are arguing about a reduction of a program that has great possibilities. I do not just mean producing oil from oil shale, I mean from coal, and from other synthetic energy possibilities.

If we should gut the Synthetic Fuels Program, then we would be making a terrible mistake.

If we have a corporation in the private enterprise system and we have a bad board of directors and bad managers, it does not mean that you scuttle the Corporation, it means that you scuttle the directors and the managers.

That is what we should do to the SFC. But now let us get down to the business of passing a rule and doing whatever is necessary for the people of this Nation, for our national security. Let us not defeat the rule over a difference of opinion on the means, when we agree on the end—a reliable oil supply for America. Let us work out our differences in conference.

Mr. Speaker, to close debate, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDADE].

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to request my colleagues not to vote down the rule for the Interior appropriations and related agencies bill for fiscal year 1985.

I am pleased to join with my chairman in doing that, the chairman of the Committee on Energy and Commerce in doing that; the chairman of the Committee on Science and Technology, the gentleman from high on my subcommittee, the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee, who is the ranking member on the Rules Committee, the gentleman from Texas on my subcommittee.

Let me say to my colleagues it has been said here today that we tend to have short memories and I am afraid that is true.

This is a piece of legislation that I have worked on for quite some time, and I agree that there are problems with its management. But the way to solve that kind of a problem is to fire the managers, not to kill the program. The way to take care of a poorly managed program is to get rid of the people managing it.

And I have heard my friend from Florida, I heard my friend from Michigan say that they were going to have hearings. And that is the way to do it. Not by killing the rule for this bill.

I do not know how many of my colleagues came to me and talked to me about matters of great importance to them and to their districts and to their States that we are trying to take care of in this appropriation bill. We have done our best, and we have talked to many of you since we marked up. You are all aware of what is in this appropriation bill. And I do fear that if you vote down this rule today we may never see this bill again. We may end up with some kind of a continuing resolution. Is it a secret to anybody that the clock is ticking, the session is coming to an end? I hope not, my friends. It is.

But I want to try to put something else in perspective for you, too. And it is important that we think about it and remember it. Our yearly transfer of wealth for imported oil from this Nation to the exporting oil nations of the world—the Saudis, the sheiks, the shahs, and the rest of them—is $60 billion a year, $60 billion a year of our wealth being transferred out of this Nation.

That figure is pretty much what it was in 1973 when the oil embargo hit. And I hope you remember what my friend from Connecticut said, my distinguished colleague who spent so much of his time working on this side of the aisle to prevent a reoccurrence of that problem. You bet, gas lines; you bet, soaring prices; you bet, economic disruption in this country and around the world.

The International Energy Agency just did a 2-month crisis scenario asking what would happen if there were a "partial"—please note the word—partial disruption of oil supplies in the Persian Gulf—not total, not like the last embargo, a partial embargo. Their scenario produced a world price figure of $98 per barrel of oil with a partial disruption. Think of it.

Call the Library of Congress. We fund them. We asked them to tell us on hypothetical situations what the impact on our Nation is if something happens. Well, I will tell you what they concluded. They concluded that there would be a "catastrophic"—that is their word, not mine—catastrophic drop in the GNP of this Nation, as much as possibly 30 percent of the GNP of this Nation.

Do you want to talk about unemployment? Do you want to talk about inflation? Crank $98 a barrel in the economy of this Nation and see what kind of inflation you have got in this Nation. Look at the unemployment lines that will occur then.

My friends, I try to bring that to you for one reason. That is where all this started. That is where we were in 1980 when this Congress and succeeding Congresses decided not that we need a new market crowd to develop synthetic fuels. Obviously, that is not what we were looking for. We decided in the national interest of this Nation, in the interest of our security, our global security, our economic security, our national security, that we had to embark upon a program that would attempt to insulate us from those parts of the world, as my friend from Connecticut said so ably, which can cause disruption tomorrow—tomorrow. That is the reason that we set this organization up. That is the reason we did not tie it to a commercial reaction. It is not supposed to be competing with the private enterprise in this country.

Let me say to my colleagues, this is a most important issue and I hope that you will think about what we have said here and vote for this rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDADE] has expired.

Mr. QUILLEN. I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McDADE. I thank my distinguished colleague for yielding additional time. I will not try to take it all. I tried to make the point I think that needed to be made, and I hope that when you walk into the door to vote in the Chamber, when you think about your vote, you remember those gas lines, you remember that we are the one Nation of the world that today has aircraft carriers operating in the Persian Gulf. We are the Nation in the world again that has your young men and your sons and your daughters exposed to death and destruction in the Persian Gulf. And it could happen tomorrow. Why are we there? We are there because of this thing called energy, we are there because of our reliance and the free world's reliance on energy supplies around this world. We are there because perhaps the best analogy I have heard is that the world oil pool is rather like a swimming pool and if you pull the stopper, it all flows out.

Remember, my friends, if you want to see this Nation have some kind of independence of its own, security of its own, if you would like to see us in a position where we are not bound to events that may occur in the Middle East, vote for this rule.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KOGOVSEK].

Mr. KOGOVSEK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the rule on H.R. 5973, the Interior Department appropriations for fiscal year 1985.

I am particularly concerned about efforts that would allow a premature floor vote that might cripple the U.S. synfuels program.

Mr. Speaker, this synfuels amendment was rejected by both the full Appropriations Committee and the Subcommittee on Interior Appropriations. The Committee on Rules also rejected this. To allow this action now, would be an extreme circumvention of regular procedures.

Currently, the House Energy and Commerce Committee, chaired by Representative JOHN DINGELL is conducting hearings and considering comprehensive legislation dealing with the U.S. Synfuels Program. A waiver of rules for this rescission of previous years appropriations would be an end run around this committee of jurisdiction especially since, as I understand it, the proposed recission would contain specific language for some type of "market value" or "cost per barrel" test. I believe this proposal would be vague and difficult to implement. We should not consider this on the floor without hearings by the Energy and Commerce Committee.

The bottom line is that this amendment has been offered at least three times and defeated. There is comprehensive legislation pending to address this issue and we should follow our own procedures and rules.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support the Interior Committee appropriation bill.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, for the purposes of debate only, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN].

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule, and I would like to make two points. The gentleman from Oklahoma mentioned earlier that synthetic fuels are not commercially viable now. I think we are all agreed on that point. Is that not the reason the Synthetic Fuels Corporation was created? Is that not the reason the Synthetic Fuels Corporation was created? Is not this agency in existence to help markets be developed, to help the development of products that we are going to need in the long term?

The gentleman from Massachusetts calls it corporate welfare. Let me tell you of a coal gasification plant that may come to my area. The welfare it creates is 2,000 construction jobs a year for 3 years and 800 full time jobs, to take our dirty high sulfur Illinois coal and turn it through an environmentally clean process into anhydrous ammonia fertilizer for our farmers. Is that corporate welfare? I think not. That is helping the economy and jobs.

The job that we have before us today is not to excoriate and find some way to eviscerate this agency but rather put the blame where it lies, in the personnel of the agency. I did not hear my colleagues arguing to cut the appropriation for the Environmental Protection Agency. Well, let us not do it for synfuels. Let us vote for the rule.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 7 minutes to the distinguished majority leader, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT].

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule. I think it would be a gross mistake for us to signal, only 5 years following the Arab oil embargo and the long gas lines of 1979, that we have forgotten all about that and that we are now in retreat from our bold commitment to energy independence.

Just think what signal that would sent to the Qadhafi's and the Khomeini's of this world—that we no longer are serious about making this Nation of ours invulnerable to their pressures.

Let me show you what we are talking about. Synthetic fuels are the way in which the United States can make itself invulnerable and independent of those nations which wish us less than well. By God's grace we have enough resources in this country, if we have the wit and the will to develop them on our own, that we can be energy independent.

We are going to run out of oil and gas. Experts do not disagree. They may disagree on how long. But within one generation, or two at the most, the experts in geology tell us that our voracious appetite for energy and power will have exhausted all those resources that it took nature some millions of years to lay down under the Earth in the form of oil and gas deposits.

But what do we have? Out in the Rockies of Colorado on the western slope, we have as much oil in the shale rock as exists in the Persian Gulf. Think about it. These four vials that I hold in my hand offer a clear demonstration of what has been developed under this Synthetic Fuels program.

Here in the first vial we see rock cracked from the shale on the western slope of the Rockies. In the second vial, that cracked rock has been retorted; it has been subjected to a high-pressure, high-intensity heat, and reduced to an ash.

The third vial shows the crude oil which that crushed ash yields. In the final vial, we have the pure golden distillate from the refined crude oil.

There is enough of this in the Colorado Rockies to replace all the oil in the Persian Gulf. Are we foolish enough not to develop efficient means of extracting it before we run out of oil and gas reserves?

Let us think about coal. The United States could be the Middle East of the world in coal. We have about one-third of all the world's known coal reserves. This little lump of coal which I hold in this second display contains every property of crude oil. This vial contains crude oil gained from crushing and exposing coal to a high-pressure process; hydrocoal. The liquid in that little vial is a high-grade, low-sulfur content oil. This was produced 12 years ago.

It is not that we do not have the technology; it is not that we need research. We need to develop it. Is it too early? There are those who say, "We do not have time to develop a commercial product." Well, the Germans developed a commercial product as long ago as World War II. They kept the Luftwaffe and the Weirmacht operating for many, many months after they would have been out of business had it not been for their very crude processes of using that soft, brown coal from the Ruhr Valley, and making high-octane aviation gasoline out of it. It is not anything new.

We were warned as early as 1952 by the Paley Commisssion that we were going to run out of oil and gas, and if we had had any vision, we would have begun then developing commercially useable synthetic fuels. We did not do it but South Africa did.

With only one forty-fourth of our gross national product, that little country already has developed commercially viable synthetic fuels from coal. They make gas, butane, propane, plastics, fertilizer. They make everything that we can make out of crude oil. They do not have any crude oil, but they are not vulnerable to the Arabs. Have we less vision than they?

I agree that those who have been appointed to the Synthetic Fuels Corporation have not behaved in the way that they should. Their sin has not been that they spent too much; but that they have done too little. They were commissioned by this Congress with a mandate to develop actual production of not less than 500,000 barrels a day by 1985, and not less than 2 million barrels a day by 1990. Their sin is that they have not prosecuted the program vigorously enough. Their sin is that they have ignored the congressional mandate.

Someone said, oh, we have allowed $6 billion to go forward in loan guarantees. Now, to rescind loan guarantee money is not to reduce the deficit by one thin dime, any more than if we were to rescind the money for FHA loan guarantees. You would not save any money; you would build fewer houses. That would be the result of this. We would not save money, we would stretch the time getting to our goal of energy independence.

If you think that $6 billion available in loan guarantees is too much, stop to think that we are being drained by $60 billion every year because of our vulnerability to Arab oil.

In 1941, we had vision. We ran out of rubber. The Japanese took over our rubber supplies. Franklin Roosevelt called Bernard Baruch and Bill Jeffers together and said we must develop synthetic rubber. Nobody knew how to do it; we did it because we gave it enough priority. We made a crash program out of it, and 3½ years later, when the Allies rolled into Berlin, they rolled on rubber tires made from an indigenous American synthetic rubber industry.

We can be that Nation again. That is the message that we need to send to the Khomeini's and the Qadhafi's of the world. Not that we are so penurious that we worry about a little bit of money in loan guarantees and quail at the relatively small cost of becoming energy independent.

They are not afraid of our weapons; they might be afraid of our energy independence. And in the long run, our independence as a nation depends as much upon that as it does upon the weapons.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 148, nays 261, not voting 24, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Anthony for, with Mr. Horton against.

Mr. Young of Missouri for, with Mr. O'Brien against.

Messrs. COURTER, SOLARZ, HOYER, and PANETTA changed their votes from "yea" to "nay."

Messrs. SOLARZ, EDWARDS of Oklahoma, and HANCE changed their votes from "nay" to "yea."

So the resolution was not agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, I missed the last vote because I was in a meeting room where the voting lights did not come on. If I had been present, I would have voted against the rule on the Interior appropriation bill.

EDUCATION AMENDMENTS OF 1984

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 550 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 11) to extend through fiscal year 1989 the authorization of appropriations for certain education programs, and for other purposes, and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. All points of order against the consideration of the bill for failure to comply with the provisions of section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (Public Law 93-344) are hereby waived. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed two hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Education and Labor, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Education and Labor now printed in the bill as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule by titles instead of by sections and each title shall be considered as having been read, and all points of order against said substitute for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 7 of rule XVI are hereby waived. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instruction.

After the passage of H.R. 11, the Committee on Education and Labor shall be discharged from the further consideration of the bill S. 2496, and it shall then be in order in the House to move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the said Senate bill and to insert in lieu thereof the provisions contained in H.R. 11 as passed by the House, and all points of order against said amendment for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 7 of rule XVI are hereby waived. After the passage of S. 2496, it shall be in order to move that the House insist upon its amendment to the said Senate bill and to request a conference with the Senate thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WHEAT] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TAYLOR], pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 550 is an open rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 11, the Education Amendments of 1984. The rule provides 2 hours of general debate to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Education and Labor. Section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act is waived against consideration of the bill.

The rule makes in order the Education and Labor Committee amendment in the nature of a substitute now printed in the bill as original text for the purpose of amendment. The amendment in the nature of a substitute is to be considered by titles, instead of by sections, with each title considered as read. Clause 7 of rule XVI is waived against the substitute. One motion to recommit with or without instructions is provided.

After passage of H.R. 11, the Education and Labor Committee is discharged of further consideration of S. 2496. The rule makes in order a motion to strike out all after the enacting clause of S. 2496 and to insert the text of H.R. 11 as passed by the House. Clause 7 of rule XVI is waived against the House amendment to the Senate bill and a motion is in order for the House to insist upon its amendment to the Senate bill and to request a conference with the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, the rule waives section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act which requires authorizing legislation to be reported by May 15 prior to the beginning of the fiscal year. This technical waiver is necessary because certain programs which are receiving appropriations for fiscal year 1984 are currently unauthorized. The bill merely authorizes programs that are already funded by fiscal year 1984 appropriation acts. But a violation of the Budget Act still occurs.

The rule also waives clause 7 of rule XVI, germaneness, against the Education and Labor Committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. This waiver is necessary because the original bill was a straight reauthorization of several education programs and the committee amendment is broader in scope than the original bill. Among other things, the committee amendment also contains a substantial revision of the Bilingual Education Program which was not included in H.R. 11, as introduced.

The rule also waives clause 7 of rule XVI, germaneness, against the House amendment to the Senate bill, S. 2496, because the Senate bill only deals with adult education and, again, the House amendment is broader in scope than the Senate bill.

H.R. 11 reauthorizes 11 education programs that expire at the end of fiscal year 1984. The programs extended are: the Adult Education Act; the Bilingual Education Act; the Impact Aid Program; the Women's Educational Equity Act; the Indian Education Act; the Asbestos School Hazards Detection and Control Act; the Emergency Immigrant Education Program; the National Assessment of Educational Progress; the National Center for Educational Statistics; general assistance to the Virgin Islands; and, the Territorial Teacher Training Program. These programs are reauthorized for 5 years, through fiscal year 1989, except adult education, which is extended for 2 years through fiscal year 1986.

Mr. Speaker, the bill substantially revises the Bilingual Education Program and makes clarifying changes in the Indian Education Programs, the Women's Education Equity Act, and the National Assessment of Educational Progress. The other programs are extended without significant changes.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 550 is an open rule. While there may be controversy surrounding specific provisions of the bill, the rule provides Members the opportunity to offer amendments. I know of no opposition to the rule and I urge its adoption.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 550 is a rule that provides three waivers of the rules of the House in order to permit consideration of a hastily drawn, haphazard package of amendments to various education programs.

The rule is an open rule and it provides for 2 hours of general debate. Those are the noncontroversial aspects of this rule. The waivers in this rule, as well as the provisions of the bill itself, deserve a closer look.

The rule waivers a basic element of the Budget Act, and it includes two waivers of the germaneness rule for the substitute reported from the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. Speaker, the Budget Act waiver in this rule is of section 402(a) of the act. That section requires a committee to report authorization bills in advance of the fiscal year for which they create new budget authority. In this case, the bill authorizes new budget authority for fiscal year 1984, but was not reported prior to May 15, 1983.

As a matter of fact, this bill was not reported from the Committee on Education and Labor until May 15, 1984, 1 full year past the deadline contained in the Budget Act.

Now what do these circumstances indicate to my colleagues, one might ask. They indicate that the Committee on Education and Labor did not consider the elements of this bill, H.R. 11, to be necessary for inclusion in the budget resolution for the current fiscal year, fiscal 1984.

Mr. Speaker, it might be argued that the Budget Act waiver in this rule is a technical matter, because all the bill does is authorize programs not previously enacted for fiscal year 1984.

That is the reason the waiver is provided, because the committee did not meet its reporting deadline in 1983.

But that is not the only Budget Act problem with this bill. During our consideration of the rule in the Committee on Rules, we were told that this bill is $725 million over the amount contained in the first budget resolution passed by this House for fiscal 1985.

The Members will surely recall that budget debate, and remember the comments made that the budget was going to be a pay-as-you-go budget, with only modest increases for necessary defense and health programs.

This rule paves the way for consideration of a bill that is being brought up outside of that pay-as-you-go process. If the Members who supported that first budget resolution are serious about their concept of pay-as-you-go, they will surely want to defeat this bill.

The rule provides a waiver of the House rule governing germaneness, not just once but twice. First, the committee substitute is made germane to the original bill. Then, the committee substitute is made germane to the Senate-passed bill, now resting on the Speaker's table.

The rule also makes in order a motion that the House insist upon whatever is left of H.R. 11 following our amendment process, so that the managers can move directly to a conference with the other body.

Mr. Speaker, the members of the Committee on Education and Labor are once again up to their old tricks. They want to repeal portions of the Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981 that placed caps on the rate of spending growth for some of these programs. They want to take a simple, 3-page reauthorization bill and turn it into a 95-page omnibus education package. Their package, which is the committee substitute, not only makes substantive changes in existing law but also creates entirely new programs not contemplated during our earlier budget deliberations.

Mr. Speaker, I make these comments merely to warn the Members that we will have lengthy, protracted debate on this bill.

If the Members thought our debate on the Rehabilitation Act extension was quarrelsome, then I suggest they brace themselves for yet another conflict on this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, since the rule allows for amendments to H.R. 11, and since there will be responsible amendments offered, I am not going to oppose this rule.

I sincerely hope, however, that this rule does not further widen the breach between our ability to gain control of Federal spending and our proclivity to engage in politically partisan program building.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, as I previously stated, this is a straightforward and open rule providing for 2 hours of general debate on the educational amendments of 1984.

I have no further requests for time. I know of no controversy on the rule, and I urge its adoption.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 550 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 11.

The Chair designates the gentleman from New York [Mr. McHUGH] as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole and requests the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHARP] to assume the chair temporarily.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 11) to extend through fiscal year 1989 the authorization of appropriations for certain education programs, and for other purposes, with Mr. SHARP (Chairman pro tempore) in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the first reading of the bill is dispensed with.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS] will be recognized for 1 hour, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] will be recognized for 1 hour.

The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 9 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 11, the Education Amendments of 1984, reauthorizes 11 education programs that contribute to our national commitment to promote equity and improve quality in education. Most of these programs expire at the end of fiscal year 1984, so we must act favorably upon this legislation to ensure their uninterrupted funding.

H.R. 11 extends and amends the following education programs: adult education, impact aid, Indian education, bilingual education, women's educational equity, asbestos school hazard detection and control, emergency immigrant education, the National Assessment of Educational Progress, the National Center for Education Statistics, general assistance for the Virgin Islands, and territorial teacher training. Thus, it is an omnibus education bill, encompassing large formula and small discretionary programs. Current appropriations for these programs range from $585 million for impact aid to $1 million for territorial training.

The legislation extends all of these programs for 5 years, through fiscal year 1989, except adult education, which is extended for 2 more years.

The reason we have packaged all of these programs together in an omnibus bill goes back to the passage of Gramm-Latta II, the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981. At the same time it made budget cuts, that law extended the programs in this bill and many other elementary and secondary education programs through fiscal year 1984, regardless of their expiration dates. Thus, the committee was confronted with the unique situation of having most of our major authorization laws come up for renewal at the same time. Given the limited amount of floor time in the congressional schedule this year, it would simply not have been feasible to attempt to bring separate reauthorization bills for all of these programs to the floor.

The programs in the bill have undergone scrutiny by the Subcommittee on Elementary, Secondary, and Vocational Education during 21 days of hearings this Congress. The bill is the product of open discussion and compromise and has bipartisan support.

All of these programs augment our efforts to provide access to individuals who might otherwise be overlooked by our educational system and to generally enhance excellence in education. The amendments in H.R. 11 seek to strengthen these programs and address problems we have uncovered in their administration through the oversight process.

We took care in committee to keep the cost of this bill reasonable. For most of the larger programs—including impact aid, adult education, bilingual education, and immigrant education—we authorize such sums as may be necessary. This will enable Congress to annually determine, through the appropriations process, a suitable funding level for each of these programs, taking into account current economic conditions. For the Indian Education Program, Congressman KILDEE will be offering an amendment later to ensure that the committee's intent of authorizing a modest amount for that program is carried out. For the Asbestos School Hazard Detection and Control Program, the bulk of the authorization—$75 million for loans to school districts to remove and abate asbestos—will be paid back to the Federal Government. The remainder of the programs, the smaller, discretionary programs, do contain specific authorizations, but they are not excessive; the largest is the $50 million authorized for women's educational equity. I would like to highlight some of the major provisions of the bill.

IMPACT AID

Among the major provisions of H.R. 11 are those related to impact aid. This program, which reimburses school districts whose revenues and costs are affected by the presence of federally connected children and Federal property, took a 39-percent cut between fiscal years 1980 and 1982. We are still well below the 1980 level of appropriations, not even counting inflation. The quality of education has eroded in many impacted school districts because of these cuts. Some have been forced to try to charge tuition to military families, to borrow funds, to ask the Department of Defense to take over the responsibility for operating their schools.

H.R. 11 extends this program in order to guarantee high quality education for dependents of military personnel, Indian children, and other federally connected children. The bill reauthorizes the payments for category "B" children, whose parents either live or work on Federal property, but not both. Although the "B" payments were scheduled to expire under the provisions of the 1981 Reconciliation Act, the committee believes these students, and the loss of commercial property tax related to the presence of Federal property associated with these children, continue to place a burden upon local school districts. Let me emphasize that we are not proposing full funding of category "B," but are merely proposing to continue these "B" payments at the same authorization as last year, which is one-third of full funding.

A second impact aid amendment in H.R. 11 raises from $20 million to $21 million the ceiling for section 2 payments to school districts experiencing a partial loss of tax base due to the Federal acquisition of property.

BILINGUAL EDUCATION

In the bilingual education program, after long and arduous discussion, we have arrived at a bipartisan compromise. Under this compromise, we retain the basic focus of the program, to teach English language skills to children of limited English proficiency, but we permit a specified amount of funding to be used to support some programs which are alternatives to the bilingual education method. These alternative programs do not have to include instruction in the students' native languages; 4 percent of all funds up to an appropriation of $140 million and 50 percent of any new money above the current appropriation of $140 million, but not to exceed 10 percent of the total Federal funding, may be used to support these alternative programs.

We have also incorporated a number of amendments into the bilingual program to tighten up the accountability and improve the quality of the projects. These provisions would reward excellent programs with special grants, improve evaluation criteria, support research on effective techniques for educating youngsters of limited English proficiency, and make information about successful practices more readily available.

The bill attempts to update bilingual education by establishing new programs for integrating English-speaking children into the bilingual classes to help them learn foreign languages while the other children learn English; for training parents and other family members of children of limited English proficiency; and for bilingual preschool, gifted and talented, and special education programs.

The legislation also continues the emphasis in current law on training persons to fill the shortages of qualified teachers of bilingual education.

ADULT EDUCATION

The Adult Education Act of 1966 distributes funds to States to establish and support programs to help educationally disadvantaged adults acquire basic skills and obtain high school equivalency. Although evaluations show this program to be enormously successful, we are only reaching 2 million adults each year of the over 20 million adults who are functionally illiterate. Therefore, the committee bill extends the program without amendments for 2 more years, authorizing such sums as may be necessary for fiscal years 1985 and 1986. We extended this program for a shorter period than the other programs so that the committee might have more time to study the impact of several pending amendments to this act.

WOMEN'S EDUCATIONAL EQUITY

The Women's Educational Equity Act provides discretionary grants to public and private nonprofit organizations and agencies for projects to promote quality education for women and girls at all levels of education. With a limited appropriation of less than $6 million, the program has been successful in such areas as developing new curriculums, increasing access of females to educational programs, and establishing model training programs for educational personnel. The committee bill continues this program and makes several clarifying changes to ensure that it is administered as intended.

ASBESTOS SCHOOL HAZARD DETECTION AND CONTROL

Although there has been a Federal program on the books since 1980 authorizing funding for detection and removal of hazardous asbestos materials in elementary and secondary schools, this program has never been funded. The authorization is due to expire this year. Since the extent of the problem has not diminished—with as many as 14,000 schools around the country containing hazardous asbestos materials requiring removal—the committee bill extends this authorization so that we might continue to seek appropriations.

OTHER PROGRAMS

H.R. 11 extends the Indian Education Act and also makes needed improvements in the manner in which the Bureau of Indian Affairs administers the Indian education program.

The bill also extends without substantial change the Emergency Immigrant Education Program created by Public Law 98-151, to help school districts heavily impacted with immigrant children. The one-time appropriation of $30 million for immigrant children is clearly inadequate to address the educational needs of approximately 1.1 million legal and illegal immigrant children in this country.

Other programs extended without major revision include the National Center for Education Statistics—the Federal agency responsible for collecting and disseminating educational information—and two small programs of special assistance to the outlaying areas. The National Assessment of Educational Progress, a Federal program which provides data on the achievement of students in basic skills and other vital areas, is extended with a provision encouraging data to be made available on a State-by-State basis.

The committee also adopted amendments to reform the manner in which audit disputes are resolved within the Department of Education and to place certain education programs under more appropriate divisions within the Department of Education.

Thus, H.R. 11 is a broad but well-balanced package of necessary improvements and extensions in education law. With the growing enthusiasm for educational improvement and educational support all around the country, we cannot afford to let our constituents down and fail to reauthorize these vital programs this year. We ask each Member of this body to join with us and cast an affirmative vote for education this year.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. I thank the gentleman for yielding and I thank him for his leadership on the subcommittee that approved most of H.R. 11.

Mr. Chairman, many of us on the committee including the ranking member from Pennsylvania attempted to improve H.R. 11 in its omnibus form, but we were unsuccessful in many ways in doing so.

Mr. Chairman, as I rise in opposition to H.R. 11 in its present form, I take note that this is being offered under an open rule and I would note to this House that this bill severely needs an open rule. I would also note we have waived the Budget Act.

I would note this bill not only waives the Budget Act but, in fact, it throws out and waives the entire budget that the majority of this House adopted last spring.

Indeed, what is wrong with H.R. 11 is, H.R. 11 is an omnibus bill containing a series of unrelated categorical grants, joined only because they have some impact on education and in addition, are all being reauthorized. But there is no need to reauthorize these grants this year and even if there were a need, there is no need to reauthorize these categoricals in an omnibus form, in a comprehensive form.

I support certain programs which are important. I support bilingual education, but if they are important, they are important enough to consider each on its own merits and not lump them together in an omnibus form.

What these programs have in common is the vast increases in the spending that is authorized, spending that has been estimated by the Congressional Budget Office because most of the programs are authorized for such sums. The spending has been estimated by the Congressional Budget Office to go from $900 million a year in fiscal year 1984 to over $2.7 billion for fiscal year 1985 and upward from there.

Now I understand that my friend, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE], will be offering an amendment to reduce that amount in the Indian programs by $1 billion. I would note perhaps that is a good first step. It is clarifying the intent of the committee.

But that still increases the authorization levels of this one bill by almost 100 percent over this House's budget resolution that we have adopted, by increasing the authorization levels by $700 million in this one bill.

I would suggest to the House that the key amendment that will be offered after all others are offered and considered will be offered by the ranking member of the subcommittee from Pennsylvania which will reduce the funding back to the budget levels adopted by this House.

Many of us on this side of the aisle did not vote for that budget. All we are asking the House to do is to at least live within its own budget and reduce the spending levels back to the budgeted levels. I think that is fair; I think that is reasonable. I do believe that this House should not go on record in its very first week back after recess, after passing resolution after resolution at our conventions and townhall meetings that we are opposed to the deficit, this House should not go on record as breaking apart and destroying the budget, by adopting this $700 million increase, an increase of almost 100 percent in the first year.

Now on the subject of bilingual education, Mr. Chairman, I would tell the House that I support the section on bilingual education. It is a very special part, it is very special to my part of the country as it is I think to all sections of the country. I support the bill's present format for bilingual education and the intent of bilingual education.

Mr. Chairman, this Congress had allowed, in prior bilingual education Federal law, the Federal curriculum to become very rigid. In many States, school districts from Texas, and elsewhere had gone ahead of Congress in adopting more flexible curriculum in the classroom to find new ways to use bilingual education for the purpose of helping students acquire proficiencies in English.

Until bilingual education in this form is adopted, that is not in the current Federal law.

There is a compromise. You have heard about the compromise. The compromise is better than the status quo; it is a substantial improvement over the current Federal bilingual education law; it is a substantial improvement over anything the committee had considered previously.

The compromise consists of several parts. First, for the very first time in Federal aid to bilingual education, we have stated the acquisition of English to be the purpose of bilingual education. That is important, that is what parents are asking for, that is what students need in the classroom.

Second, we have adopted for the first time flexibility in curriculum. We have adopted flexibility so that school districts can, as they are doing around the country, use Federal assistance to design new types of curriculums, including structured immersion, fast track transition, English as a second language to design the curriculum that is best for that school district and for the students in that classroom. I think that is important.

Compromise includes some limited funding for these forms of alternative instruction. It would be my preference, and I worked for it, that funding should have been more. I would point out to the House that the funding amount for alternative instruction is not nearly so important, the amount is not as important as the fact that for the first time we have legislated in Federal law the alternative instruction of new kinds of curriculums, such as structured immersion and English as a secondary language, and fast track transition.

I commend my colleague from Michigan, Mr. KILDEE, and my colleague from Puerto Rico, Mr. CORRADA, and my colleague from Arizona, Mr. MCCAIN for their work in reaching this compromise, reaching this new and improved bill on bilingual education. And I do hope that the House passes that section of the bill.

It is my belief that H.R. 11 ultimately is not going to be passed into law. It is my hope with the good sense and good will on both sides of the aisle on bilingual education, that at some point in this session of the Congress we can bring the bilingual section of this bill back to the floor of the House and pass it as a freestanding piece of legislation.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE].

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support for H.R. 11, the Education Amendments of 1984. I support extension of all the programs in H.R. 11. However, I would like to call particular attention to title II of the bill which extends the Bilingual Education Act.

The purpose of bilingual education is to enable the student to achieve proficiency in English. The native language is used to assure that in the meantime students are able to meet promotion and graduation requirements. Limited English proficient youth comprise 10 percent of the U.S. student population. This means that 1 in every 10 students comes from a non-English-speaking home with English language skills limited to the extent that they cannot benefit from the education they receive in an all English classroom unless their English language skills are improved. Bilingual programs currently operate in over 80 languages and serve a diverse group of students including Hispanics, Asians, Indian Eskimos, Italian, French, and Portuguese speakers, along with recent immigrants from Poland, Greece, and the Arab countries. However, in spite of the gains which have been made since the original enactment of the Bilingual Education Act in 1968, less than 10 percent of limited English proficient children are getting the bilingual education services they need.

The bilingual provisions of H.R. 11 represent a carefully crafted, bipartisan compromise developed through the efforts of myself, Mr. CORRADA, Mr. BARTLETT, and Mr. MCCAIN. The compromise expands the scope and flexibility of the Federal bilingual effort through the creation of new grant programs and, for the first time, allows Federal dollars to be spent in support of alternative instructional approaches. At the same time, it allows for the continuation of the proven transitional method of instruction. Even where the transitional methods are used, local school districts design the programs and determine the extent to which instruction will be provided in native languages.

As is the case with all true compromises, this is a fragile one reached after a long negotiation process. It has the support of the Congressional Hispanic Caucus and many prominent groups in the area of bilingual education and education generally.

Limited-English-proficient students are a Federal constituency in the same way as handicapped children, disadvantaged children, and other special-needs groups of children. Improving the quality of education available to the Nation's 3.6 million children of limited English proficiency is especially important because they have been found to be one of the most under educated of all groups of American children. The bilingual provisions of H.R. 11 provide instructional flexibility while improving the program to ensure these children receive the necessary services which will allow them to fully benefit from the education they receive.

I also would like to call attention to the title V provisions which are a continuation of congressional efforts to improve the education opportunities of native American students. The provisions of title V are a result of 5 years of oversight activity by the Education and Labor Committee involving hearings, meetings with administration and Indian education professionals, and my own visits to Indian schools located on reservations. It has the strong support of the Indian education and tribal community. Title V involves no new authorization or costs. It simply refines current law to see that congressional mandates of the past are carried out.

I urge the adoption of H.R. 11.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I am rather disappointed with the manner in which this bill has been brought before us. First of all, I think it is important to say that none of the bill had to be reauthorized with one exception, impact aid, and that is being handled separately in the DOD authorization bill. But, actually, all of these pieces of legislation that are included here did not have to—I repeat—did not have to be reauthorized at this particular time.

In other words, we had plenty of time to do something that we should have done for a long time and that is come up with a comprehensive program dealing with education.

We have the public interested now in education improvement and so we should take the time that we need in order to find out what we are doing, whether we are doing something that is good for education, whether it is bad, whether there are ways to improve it. But the important point is we had time to do that. We did not have to extend these bills at this particular time.

However, we decided to go ahead. When we started, it appeared to be something that most of us could support because we were just talking about an extension, a simple extension. But as time went on, with only 1 day's hearing on every area of this piece of legislation, we decided in many instances to rewrite some very complicated and comprehensive legislation.

Today we find ourselves supporting many areas of the bill, but are faced with one vote because we have lumped them all together, which means that we do not have an opportunity to support those areas where we know we are doing well.

But again my major concern is that we are passing a comprehensive piece of legislation that did not have to be reauthorized at this particular time. We had plenty of time to think through it. We had plenty of time to rewrite it in an orderly and timely fashion.

Let me give my colleagues several examples. I am a strong supporter of bilingual education, for instance. But in bilingual education we do something that we do not do in any other piece of legislation. We mandate a method of instruction. I am not questioning how good or how bad that method of instruction may be. I am merely saying that it is certainly a questionable practice that we on the Federal level mandate a method. We do not do that, and I hope we will never ever do it, in any other program, but we do it in this particular bill.

So my problem with the bilingual title in this bill is that we are mandating a teaching method.

Second, I am afraid that we have added enough things to that particular title even though the appropriation is relatively modest that we are really taking money away from those who are most in need for a bilingual education program.

We have added several things to that bill. As I said, with a small amount of money. It seems to me we are not going to target those who are truly in need.

Now in another astounding move which I do not understand, which takes away this responsible partnership in search for a way to curb excesses of the past, the committee has now authorized programs that are $1.7 billion above the budget that this House passed, that the majority presented to the House, and the House accepted. It does not sound very fiscally responsible to me and both sides of the aisle are guilty of spending a great deal of time talking about fiscal responsibility. But here we are talking about a program that will be $1.7 billion above the budget that this House, under the majority leadership, passed.

Now, to Mr. KILDEE's credit, he will be offering an amendment that will reduce part of the bill by $1 billion and we will then still be over $700 million above the budget.

I will offer an amendment which will give every program in this bill an increase and, at the same time, remain within the majority budget that was adopted here on the floor of the House.

For instance, it would give adult education a $3.5 million increase over present spending. It would give bilingual education a $4.6 million increase over present spending.

It would give impact aid a $20.5 million increase over present spending Indian education, a $2.4 million increase, and on and on down through the list. It will give an increase to every area that we are dealing with in this bill and still will remain within the budget that again I mention was presented by the majority and adopted by the House of Representatives.

And I am talking about a 1-year situation only. If things are much better next year, we will have a golden opportunity, then, to increase what I am already increasing considerably.

So again let me say there are two problems I find with this piece of legislation. One is the fact that we did not have to reauthorize. We could have taken the kind of time that we needed to do a good job, with one exception, which was impact aid. That is being taken care of by the DOD authorization bill. And, second, we are talking about $1.7 billion over the House budget resolution when we adopt H.R. 11 if we do not pass some of the amendments that will be offered. The one that I am most concerned about is the one that I will offer that I said will give all of these programs an increase and still remain within the budget that the House adopted.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAYES].

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GARCIA. I thank my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 11, and specifically the section in the measure pertaining to bilingual education. This portion of the bill extends the Bilingual Education Act for such sums as may be necessary. The bill, as reported by the Education and Labor Committee, represents a bipartisan compromise, which allows Federal dollars to be spent in support of alternative instructional approaches to bilingual education while continuing support for the basic transitional method. This compromise represents a sensible and cautious approach to exploring the effectiveness of alternative methodologies, and provides flexibility to school districts serving large numbers of language minority students.

Mr. Chairman, for too long equality of educational opportunity for disadvantaged children has come in for particularly heavy attack. The section of H.R. 11 dealing with bilingual education will allow us to begin the process of evaluating different methodological approaches for teaching limited English proficient children.

Mr. Chairman, bilingual education is an instructional tool that has developed over the past decades to help students whose first language is not English overcome their linguistic and academic difficulties and perform as well as their English-speaking peers in school. The theory is that, by enabling students to master cognitive skill in the language they know best before making the transition to English, bilingual classes will prevent academic retardation.

My colleagues, there are an estimated 3.6 million pupils in the country judged to be in need of some form of special language assistance to enable them to cope with the regular school curriculum. The Federal Government began funding demonstration programs in bilingual education in the late 1960's and now reach roughly 315,000 children. It is safe to say that the total amount of money spent in the field, would scarcely make a dent in the national budget for compensatory education programs. Over $3 billion, for example, was appropriated in 1980 just for title 1, the largest of such federally supported programs of special assistance to educationally deprived children in low-income areas.

Of all linguistic minority groups, Hispanic Americans, by virtue of their numbers in the population if for no other reason, would seem to have the most at stake in the survival of bilingual education. School enrollments of Hispanic children in some of our major cities alone tell a vivid story; in New York City, they currently comprise 30 percent of the school population: in Los Angeles 45 percent; in San Antonio 52 percent; in Miami 32 percent; in Denver 31 percent; in Hartford 35 percent. In the face of these figures, the question of how best to meet the educational needs of the children, a large proportion of whom speak only Spanish, or are not sufficiently proficient in either English or Spanish, becomes one of paramount importance for the country in the years ahead.

Unfortunately, Hispanic children as a whole have not fared well in the public education system. Typically they are two to three grade levels behind other students. A mere 30 percent manage to complete high school nationwide. In urban ghetto areas, the school dropout rate for Hispanics reaches as high as 85 percent. Less than 7 percent have completed college. In 1975–76, Hispanics received only 2.8 percent of the B.A. degrees awarded, 2 percent of masters degrees, 2.6 percent of the law degrees, 2.3 percent of the medical degrees, and 1.2 percent of all doctorates.

Not surprising, the income figures for Hispanics are very low. In 1978, Hispanic Americans in general had a median annual family income of $12,600 compared with $17,600 for the Nation as a whole. Puerto Ricans were the worst off, with a median family income of only $8,300 and 30 percent living in poverty. Only 8 percent of Hispanics held professional and technical positions, compared with 16 percent of non-Hispanics. Most were found in low-paying jobs in the service and manufacturing industries and in agriculture.

Mr. Chairman, as for minority children, their education is far too important a matter to be left to chance, vague hopes, rhetoric, or politics. All of us have an undeniable stake in their induction into the larger American society and their preparation to be effective, productive citizens. They are an inescapable part of the Nation's future and therefore of all our futures. I urge your support for H.R. 11.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the bill, H.R. 11. Education has always been the fundamental cornerstone of a nation. It is the building block that America as a nation has prided herself in. The ability to provide an excellent and equitable education to various sectors of the population and to meet the special needs of each sector is a unique asset of this country. H.R. 11, the Education Act Amendments of 1984, reinforces that cornerstone by reauthorizing several important programs including: the Adult Education Act, the Bilingual Education Act, the Impact Aid Program, the Women's Educational Equity Act, the Indian Education Programs, the Asbestos School Hazard Detection and Control Act, and the Emergency Immigrant Education Program.

Of particular concern to me is the Bilingual Education Program, which has been rewritten after heated debates at the subcommittee and committee level. The new version of the Bilingual Education Act represents a fair compromise from those on both sides of the issues. Most importantly it insures the continuance of a vital and necessary component on our educational agenda.

According to a National Institute of Education [NIE] study, there are currently an estimated 3.6 million children in the United States with limited English proficiency. The Bilingual Education Act was enacted in an effort to meet the needs of these children. Since it was initiated in 1969 the program has grown from that of 76 basic programs with 26,521 participants to 565 programs in 1980 with 350,000 participants. In the 16th Congressional District of Texas alone, bilingual programs reach approximately 27,000 students ranging from kindergarden to the 12th grade. Even with this tremendous growth, many limited English proficient children still remain underserved or completely unserved. At best, the figures show that only 10 percent of the children in need of bilingual education are receiving it.

Despite the obvious need for bilingual education, the Reagan administration cut the program by 20 percent in 1982 and sought to cut funding to $94.5 million in fiscal year 1983. Congress was able to retain the $138 million that had been previously appropriated, enabling the program to continue at skeletal levels. The administrations intent has been to phase out the Bilingual Education Program, as is evidenced by its fiscal year 1984 budget proposal of $95 million.

I find it ironic that after the President's Commission on Education published "A Nation at Risk," the administration chooses to address the problem by ignoring the educational needs of 3.6 million children. It is not accidental that the President's Commission found that "functional illiteracy among minority youth may run as high as 40 percent," when one considers that a significant number of our minority youth's native language is one other than English. The Commission's call to take up the challenge is not being responded to by this administration in the area of bilingual education. The words to the student in the Commission's report "You forfeit your chance for life at its fullest when you withhold your best effort in learning. When you give only the minimum to learning, you receive only the minimum in return" are frustrating to those students who are not able to receive even the minimum in education because of language difficulties. They cannot give their best effort in learning because we as a nation are not providing them our best effort in instruction.

The Bilingual Education Program embodied in H.R. 11 is an attempt to provide our best in instruction and maximize the best in education for our children. Because of the continued debate among educators regarding the best method to instruct limited English-proficient students, a new provision has been added to the Bilingual Education Act. H.R. 11 allows 4 percent of current moneys and up to 50 percent of new moneys to be used in alternative approaches to bilingual education in which the use of the native language is not required. With this provision, flexibility and exploration into alternative approaches for teaching students are encouraged, without jeopardizing existing programs.

The National Commission on Education concluded by stressing that the national interest is best served by a literate and informed public and challenged us to strive for academic excellence. Bilingual education is a crucial component in the strategy to rescue our nation at risk. It will become increasingly more important as the United States attempts to deal with the recent influx of immigrants from Asia and Central America. Ignoring this reality could result in the formation of a large underclass of language minority citizens excluded from full membership in society. Clearly there is no doubt that the cost of ignorance done away with by this program would far outweigh its absence. As a policy maker and a former educator, I am prepared to take up the challenge by supporting H.R. 11, and encourage my colleagues to join me.

Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Chairman, it is with great pleasure that I rise to offer my strong support for the bilingual education program, which is included in the education amendments of 1984.

This vital program authorizes the allocation of much needed additional funds for bilingual programs, teacher training and retraining, research, and evaluation commensurate with the growth of the population of children who require bilingual education. Of even greater importance, this bill significantly increases the amount of available data on children of limited English proficiency and provides for additional information regarding the characteristics and outcomes of the bilingual programs designed to serve them through an increased emphasis on data collection, evaluation, and monitoring.

Improving the quality of education available to the Nation's 3.6 million children of limited English proficiency is especially important because they have been found to be one of the most undereducated of all groups of American children. Prior to 1968, when bilingual education programs were begun, the dropout rate among non-English-speaking students was spectacularly high. In some ethnic groups, fewer than 20 percent of the students completed high school. Since 1968, however, participants in bilingual education programs are four times as likely to finish high school and the number entering college has increased.

This bill does not call for special treatment for people with limited English skills. It simply provides them the opportunity to compete on an equal basis with other members of our society.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 11 is essential if we are to continue providing an opportunity for children of limited English proficiency and equal chance for succeeding in, and contributing to, this great Nation.

I urge my colleagues to join with me and vote for this most important legislation.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I rise to join my colleagues in support of H.R. 11, the Education Amendments of 1984. First however, I would like to commend Education and Labor Committee chairman, CARL D. PERKINS, and his staff, on their tireless efforts in preparing this measure for floor consideration. Mr. Chairman, as we well know, any measure reauthorizing 11 programs not only merits a considerable amount of staff time but also merits a considerable amount of time and attention of the chairman of the authorizing committee. Both Chairman PERKINS and his staff deserve the praise of every Member of this Chamber.

The bill before us, H.R. 11, is a vital component in our Federal commitment to promoting equity and improving the quality of education offered to our citizens. The programs which this bill reauthorizes are due to expire at the end of the current fiscal year. They include: The Adult Education Act; Bilingual Education Program; the Impact Aid Program; the Women's Education Equity Act; the Indian Education Program; the Asbestos School Hazard Detection and Control Act; the Emergency Immigrant Education Progress Act; the National Center for Education Statistics; general assistance for the Virgin Islands and the Territorial Teachers Training Programs. H.R. 11 extends all of these programs for 5 fiscal years through fiscal year 1989, with the exception of the Adult Education Act which is extended through fiscal year 1986.

The programs incorporated in the bill are people-based programs that aim at helping individuals become productive members of our society. Education is our country's greatest resource and we must not hesitate to make a short-term investment that in turn will yield long-term results beneficial to the entire Nation. I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to support this legislation in order to allow all Americans the chance to improve themselves through educational advancement and hard work. By doing so they will give hope and optimism to millions of Americans who without such assistance will view the American dream of self sufficiency as a dream deferred.

H.R. 11 continues a variety of programs that seek to address the needs of millions of Americans by providing them with the basic skills necessary for survival in our present society. One of the aims of this measure is to achieve educational parity for individuals who have special needs that can only be met through special attention. In that regard, the reauthorization of the Bilingual Education Act is particularly noteworthy.

With the ever increasing number of limited English proficient children entering our school systems, a strong bilingual education program is essential to bringing them fully into the American mainstream. The National Center for Education Statistics estimates that the limited English proficient population aged 5 to 14 will increase by 400,000 in this decade and by another 600,000 in the 1990's. The number of Hispanic children by some projections may double by the year 2000. Unfortunately, the current Federal Bilingual Education Program is only addressing a small portion of the total number of students in need of bilingual attention. H.R. 11 not only attempts to increase the number of students who are included in bilingual education programs, it also rewards quality programs and allows for the exploration of other approaches for teaching children of limited English proficiency.

Mr. Chairman, while all the programs reauthorized by H.R. 11 are extremely important, I would like to close my remarks by discussing the merits of the Impact Aid Program contained in the bill. The Impact Aid Program provides financial assistance to school districts in federally affected areas which include military bases, governmental offices, Indian lands, and public low rent housing projects. Established in 1950, the Impact Aid Program has assisted school districts in meeting the financial burden of educating children when there is a shortfall in the local tax base due to Federal ownership of property.

Unfortunately, year after year the program is slated to receive reduced funding and even termination. For example, allocations for the Nation's largest school districts have dropped from $62.4 million in fiscal year 1980 to $18 million in school year 1983–84. Many of the children affected by these cuts are disadvantaged, including poor children in low rent housing and children on Indian land. Given the economic condition of many of our school systems and the financial restraints imposed on them by State and local governments, the need for the Impact Aid Program is as vital today as it was when it was first established in 1950.

Mr. Chairman, by passing H.R. 11, the Members of this Chamber will strongly reaffirm the Federal committment to the partnership between local and State government in the area of education. Education must be accessible to all citizens regardless of race, sex, religion and national origin. I strongly urge my colleagues to support passage of the bill so that all our citizens may have the chance to improve themselves and realize the American dream.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I want to take a minute to answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING]. He asked the question: Why do we need to reauthorize this year if these programs can be automatically extended?

While it is true that the General Education Provisions Act allows for an automatic 1-year extension of expiring education programs, the Appropriations Committee is already making appropriations in their bill for fiscal year 1985. So, in a sense, they are already using that authority. But if we wait until next year, by the time we could get a bill out committee, passed by the House, passed by the Senate, and signed by the President, several months, if not most of the year, will have elapsed and the Appropriations Committee would have no authority to put any money for fiscal year 1986 in the bill. They will undoubtedly start working on that next spring or early summer.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on that statement?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GOODLING. Is that why we had to reauthorize for 5 years, because it would take us so long to get around to doing anything?

Mr. PERKINS. Let me say to the gentleman that we always want stability in all these programs. And if we never let anyone know where we are going, we will always be up in the air and we will just cause unrest throughout the educational communities of the country. We have got to give some stability. We ought to authorize ahead of time. The only logical thing to do is to go ahead with this authorization.

Mr. GOODLING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. GOODLING. It seems to me that we have some oversight responsibility, too. We should look a little more closely to see whether they are doing what we want them to do. Perhaps we should be making some changes. We might even come up with some new ideas. Wouldn't that be a surprise?

Mr. PERKINS. Let me state that we always look very closely and very carefully, and we do not authorize hastily, as the gentleman stated.

Let me state that the hearings on the oversight that the gentleman has referred to, you say we did not take enough time on H.R. 11: Bilingual education, June 7, June 28, August 3, August 4, 1984, May 28, 1984; adult education, oversight, May 13, May 14, 1983; in Kentucky also on asbestos, I think the gentleman was with me, H.R. 11, March 22, 1984; asbestos in schools, oversight, April 27, 1983; H.R. 11, April 3, 1984; Indian education, oversight, February 22, June 21, June 24, 1983; H.R. 519, April 9, 1984; women's educational equity, April 5, and we go on and on on all these programs. Impact aid, March 27, 1984.

I just want to point out that no committee has ever, in my opinion, more thoroughly considered or I do not think the Education and Labor Committee has more thoroughly considered all these programs. They have been considered in committee.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PERKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I just want to remind the gentleman from Pennsylvania and others that the department starts working on a 1986 bill the first of October. If you do not have a 1986 authorization in place, they submit whatever they want in the way of an appropriation without being restricted to any guidelines whatever. They can block everything into one block if they want to, and say, this is our proposal. Then you get an appropriation proposal that is not worth considering hardly.

Really, you have got to have a 1986 authorization in place by October 1, or you are tardy.

Mr. PERKINS. I want to thank the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] for his contribution. If we had not taken this action, I think we could have been accused of being derelict in responsibility, and we are moving now and we are doing, I think, what should be done.

Mr. Chairman, at this time I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN].

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. I thank the chairman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the emergency immigrant education section of the bill, the Emergency Immigrant Education Act. This section was originally introduced by the honorable majority leader and myself in March, and has since been incorporated into this bill. As one who represents some of the poorest school districts in our Nation, those which reside along the United States-Mexico border, where such legislation and Federal assistance is most warranted, I know the necessity of this bill. And, I know the long fight this Congress has been through to get this assistance. For those who do not remember, the legislation was originally included as an amendment offered by the majority leader to the continuing resolution last November.

Following its passage, and the signature of the President, the administration sought a rescission of the funds. Several months later, the General Accounting Office ruled that the funds for the purpose of the Emergency Immigrant Education Act had been properly authorized and appropriated by the Congress and there could be no rescission under the Congressional Budget Act; 9 months after the signature of the President and 4 months after the GAO ruling, the Department of Education finally came out with the regulations for application for funds for the 1983-84 school year. Published in the Federal Register on June 28, 1984, the Department of Education gave the Nation's school districts a mere 44 days, until August 10, 1984, to comply with the regulations and submit their applications for assistance.

This administration, which has opposed this necessary assistance all the way down the road, has thrown yet another obstacle in the path of the starving school districts' efforts to survive. And what is odd is that this administration, which cannot control our borders, does not believe it shares any responsibility for its own inability to control the borders.

Mr. Chairman, I would now like to engage in a colloquy with the distinguished chairman of the Education and Labor Committee, Mr. PERKINS.

Mr. Chairman, in the legislation which passed the Congress last year, and became law, and in this legislation we discuss today, there is a section which deals with the estimation of the number of immigrant students a State education agency counts in its local education agencies, or school districts. In section 706(c) (1) and (2), the bill states that "Determinations by the Secretary under this section for any period with respect to the number of immigrant children shall be made on the basis of data or estimates provided * * * by each State educational agency * * *" and that "No such determination with respect to the number of immigrant children shall operate because of an underestimate or overestimate to deprive any State educational agency of its entitlements * * *."

My question, Mr. Chairman, is whether this section is to be interpreted to mean that State education agencies will be allowed to revise those applications with incorrect estimations, and will not be denied aid—especially in light of the forthcoming deadline which might cause inadequate preparation of information because of the complexity of the regulations?

Thank you for the clarification, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. PERKINS. Let me state to the distinguished gentleman that I agree fully with the gentleman's explanation of this provision. You would have the opportunity to revise.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. I thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to our leader on the Subcommittee on Elementary, Secondary, and Vocational Education, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ERLENBORN].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ERLENBORN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BARTLETT. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, on another subject, not the subject that the gentleman from Illinois is going to discuss, but for purposes of clarifying the record, I would like to address my good friend and colleague from Texas, on immigration education. In fact, there is a good deal of controversy over immigrant education. I support immigrant education as does the gentleman from El Paso. But the President of the United States signed that appropriation into law, appropriated the funds and expended the money on May 16 together with the support of the senior Senator from the State of Texas, and a number of others who are closely allied with the administration. It was the President who in fact expended the funds. I did want to take the opportunity to set the record straight at this point.

Mr. ERLENBORN. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 11 as reported by the Committee on Education and Labor is a seriously flawed piece of legislation and I would hope that this body will, in its wisdom, adopt a series of amendments that will be offered by me and my colleagues from the committee.

The Congressional Budget Office has estimated the cost of the bill in fiscal year 1985 to be $2.7 billion and rising to $3.1 billion in fiscal year 1989. It should be noted that largely because of the 1981 budget reconciliation authorization caps placed on the same programs that are contained in H.R. 11, current—fiscal 1984—spending is less than $945 million.

In addition to the funding issue, Mr. Chairman, H.R. 11 goes well beyond the simple three-page bill that was originally introduced by Chairman PERKINS. During committee consideration of H.R. 11, many substantive changes in law were made to existing programs and entirely new programs were created as well. The bill, when reported, had grown to over 95 pages. This was in spite of the fact that the spring hearing schedule allowed Members usually only 1 day of consideration for each title of the bill—many of which have become extremely complex and highly controversial.

There are other specific provisions of the bill to which I object. For example, the current Adult Education Act would be extended for 2 years. Such an extension is unnecessary in light of the automatic extension provided under existing law. Further, in cooperation with the administration, I have introduced an adult education proposal which allows greater flexibility for States and localities and participation of young adults below the age of 16.

Another concern I have is over the Women's Educational Equity Act Program [WEEA] which is currently funded at $5.67 million. H.R. 11 authorizes $50 million per year for 5 years. For fiscal year 1985 this represents a potential tenfold increase. The bill provides $250 million for fiscal year 1985–89.

Furthermore H.R. 11 takes the unprecedented step of mandating a reorganization of the Education Department by establishing separate offices for migrant education and equity training. WEEA, currently situated in the Office of Elementary and Secondary Education, would be transferred to the Office of Educational Research and Improvement. Such an action would undermine the authority of the agency head and transfer what has previously been an executive role to the Congress. I plan to address that issue with an amendment to delete this provision from H.R. 11 at the appropriate time.

H.R. 11 extends the impact aid program and includes a continuation of category "b" payments to schools for children whose parents either work or live on Federal property. In the Reconciliation Act of 1981 we achieved the goal of curtailing this program which had eluded every President from Eisenhower through Carter, although all of them tried. In this bill we provide for the continuation of category "b" payments which are due to be phased out at the end of fiscal year 1984, effectively destroying this hard-won reform. Importantly, school officials have known for 3 years that "b" payments are to end this year.

In title II of H.R. 11, the committee rewrote the entire Bilingual Education Act and missed a golden opportunity to truly reform this program. The changes in H.R. 11 reflect the continuing emphasis on transitional bilingual education as the method of instruction endorsed by the Federal Government. It is unfortunate that the Education and Labor Committee does not put enough trust in the process of local decisionmaking to allow local needs, priorities, and concerns to dictate how students of limited English language proficiency can best learn to read and write English. I fear that the Bartlett-McCain compromise incorporated in the bill does not do nearly enough in this regard. I plan to address some of these concerns with amendments which would ensure that parents have the final say in whether or not their children participate in bilingual programs and would ensure that these limited resources are targeted to those most in need of instruction.

H.R. 11 includes a wholesale adoption of H.R. 5190, a bill not even introduced until March 20, 1984. It would make significant changes in the way the Bureau of Indian Affairs administers various education programs. Only one hearing was held and inadequate time was allowed for consideration of this legislation known as the Indian Education Amendments of 1984. This is not an emergency; no expiring authorization is at issue here. There is no way to justify H.R. 5190 being attached to H.R. 11.

Finally, the committee's action in removing any authorization cap on the Indian Education Program administered by the Department of Education is totally irresponsible. The program, which is currently funded at $68 million and which has never received more than $86 million, is estimated by CBO to be authorized at $1.46 billion in fiscal year 1985 under the provisions of H.R. 11. These figures speak for themselves regarding the lack of concern our committee gave to H.R. 11 and lack of concern that the committee always, with the actions of the majority, shows to any restraint in a fiscal sense.

I understand that even the majority members of the committee are embarrassed by these figures at this time, and that they will offer an amendment to reduce the Indian education authorization by $1 billion. Even if they do, H.R. 11 would still be $725 million above the projections derived from the House-passed first concurrent budget resolution.

In this regard, I urge the House to adopt an amendment that will be offered by my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] that would have the effect of making H.R. 11 consistent with the budget resolution.

I would like to emphasize that no program in H.R. 11 is in danger of being discontinued at the end of the current fiscal year. Under the General Education Provisions Act, education programs expiring at the end of fiscal year 1984 are automatically extended for 1 additional year. For all of these reasons, I find it impossible to support H.R. 11 in its present form and hope that the Members favorably consider my amendments and those of my colleagues which would vastly improve this bill.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ERLENBORN. I would be happy to yield to the gentlewoman from New Jersey at this point.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I particularly want to associate myself with the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois on the Bilingual Education Program. I will be supporting the gentleman's amendments. I think we are doing a grievous harm to those students who most need this kind of educational help and assistance by building in the rigidity in this program under this law. The gentleman's amendments will open the process up and give far more beneficial educational advantages to the students who need them.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 11, the Education Amendments of 1984, is one of the first major education bills to be acted upon by Congress since the flood of troubling education reports issued last year. A recurring theme in those reports was that there is a Federal responsibility to provide leadership to the States and localities in addressing education needs. I rise to point out that in one key aspect of the bill—reauthorization of the Bilingual Education Act—we have missed an opportunity to provide such leadership and have given the American public good reason to believe that we are incapable of doing so.

Listen to the following story which represents something that is happening all over America: Xavier Mancias has just finished first grade in McAllen, TX; 2 short years ago, when beginning kindergarten, Xavier could only speak Spanish. Since that time, he has been one of several students involved in a pilot project that teaches students English by immediately immersing them in the language from the start—teaching all subjects to them in English. This contrasts with the school's previous program—the so-called transition method—which used Spanish to teach the students while gradually teaching them how to speak English.

McAlister's previous program would generally run through the second grade before students would finally receive all of their instruction in English. Compare the new immersion program: By the end of kindergarten, Xavier and his classmates were speaking entire sentences in English and were ready to start reading in English, which is what they did this past year.

At a time when we are struggling with a serious immigration question, this is indeed good news to hear that this program seems to be working. Here's the bad news: The McAllen School District is prohibited from using Federal bilingual education funds for this project—funds which are supposedly intended to eliminate the language barrier between our society and those with limited or no English-speaking ability.

One of the most prestigious reports last year—that of the Twentieth Century Fund Task Force—recommended that Federal funds now going to bilingual programs be used to teach non-English speaking children how to speak, read, and write English.

Consequently, I find it baffling that in this area we are not only failing to provide leadership to the States, but we are actually being left behind as they have given up on the Federal Government and adopted progressive approaches of their own, such as the McAlister project.

The Twentieth Century Fund Task Force has stated an obvious goal. We are the only Nation in the world that is made up almost exclusively of immigrants or their descendants. The so-called melting pot, which has incorporated the best elements of all other cultures, is the very foundation for our social and economic success. But, in order to achieve this synthesis, we must be united on certain things, with a common language at the core.

Our diverse origins have created serious strains on our system. As an example, only 11 States now print drivers tests in English only; 10 States print the tests in both English and Spanish; 21 States print the tests in at least three languages. My own State of New Jersey prints its tests in the following languages: English, Spanish, French, Italian, Vietnamese, Greek, Portuguese, Korean, Polish, and Romanian. In a melting pot, a certain amount of this is to be expected, but we must recognize that the fabric of human relationships is built by communication, and this is simply impossible if we aren't speaking the same language.

This value is clearly recognized at the State and local level. In my own State of New Jersey, Governor Kean has taken dramatic steps toward increasing English fluency by requiring English proficiency for high school graduates.

I do not suggest that the proponents of the current bilingual education program minimize the importance of learning English. I am confident that is a value that we all share. But I believe that goal is being seriously undermined by the fact that, for one reason or another, we have fixed upon one method of instruction—the transition method—while ignoring the total lack of any statistical support for its success.

I could stand up here and make a strong case for the use of the so-called immersion technique, which I have described in the McAlister situation and which is being used in various forms throughout the country. However, for me to attempt to set this technique up as the ultimate preferred method would miss the entire point of the findings of the various bilingual education studies—that there is no tried and true method. Reliable statistics are simply not there to make the convincing case for any single approach.

In 1980, the Department of Education under the previous administration conducted an evaluation of the various studies of the effectiveness of bilingual education. Bear in mind that this was the same Department that was attempting to require schools to use transitional methods, even if they received no bilingual education funds.

The authors of that evaluation recently summarized their findings:

[Transitional education] has had mixed success. Although it has worked in some settings, it has proved ineffective in others and has had negative effects in some places. Furthermore, alternative instructional methods have been found to succeed—even to be superior to [transitional methods]—in some schools.

A great deal has been said about the forward steps taken by this bill in recognizing alternative approaches to bilingual education. Indeed, it is a positive step forward to allow some of the funds to be used for alternative methods. Anything, however slight, is an improvement over the rigidity of the present law. But let us not overstate the case. We are talking about a mere 4 percent of the current funding level to be used for alternative methods. This contrasts with the administration's proposal to allow school districts to select the approach they consider best for their students, as long as they provide evidence in their grant application that the method selected is the most desirable for the children served.

At a time when all sides seem to agree that the one role the Federal Government can play in education is to provide leadership, I find this bill a regrettable missed opportunity. Instead, I see the leadership taking place in States like New Jersey and Texas, where creative approaches are being applied without the benefit of Federal funds. We are not even following the States in this, we are simply being left behind. If one wanted to make the case that the Federal Government is incapable of fulfilling a strong leadership role in education, he need look no further than this bill for an example.

Mr. ERLENBORN. I thank the gentlewoman for her support and her contribution.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ERLENBORN] has consumed 8 minutes. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] has 39 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS] has 34 minutes remaining.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Puerto Rico [Mr. CORRADA].

Mr. CORRADA. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 11, which would extend a series of education programs through fiscal year 1989. I commend my colleague, Chairman CARL PERKINS, for his leadership in moving this complex bill through the Education and Labor Committee, and for his unwavering concern for the quality and character of education in this country.

H.R. 11 includes reauthorization of many vital programs, such as the Women's Educational Equity Act, Adult Education, the Impact Aid Program, and the Bilingual Education Act. I would like to speak particularly about the provisions it contains to extend Federal efforts to educate language minority students.

At the current time, there are more than 3.6 million limited-English-proficient [LEP] students in the United States. These students live in every State of the Union. Many LEP students attend schools in Puerto Rico. Approximately two-thirds of these students are Hispanic. A smaller but significant percentage of LEP students are of Asian ancestry or are descendants of America's first inhabitants. A large and growing number of LEP students have come to this country recently, often to escape armed conflict or the denial of fundamental political rights in their native lands. In all, limited-English-proficient students come from homes and communities where over 90 languages other than English are dominant.

Although local school districts and States are making an effort, schools in general are not meeting the need of LEP children. Only about one-third of the 2.64 million children aged 5 to 14 identified in a 1978 study are receiving either bilingual education or English as a second language instruction, according to the Department of Education. This means 1.8 million LEP students currently go without any bilingual aid at all, and are left to sink or swim in an educational system based on a language they do not understand. Between now and the end of the century, the number of language-minority students will increase dramatically. According to a report prepared for the Department of Education, the total school age population is expected to increase by 16 percent between now and the year 2000. During this same period, the language-minority student population and the number of LEP students is expected to increase by approximately 40 percent.

The Nation continues to pay the price for its past educational neglect of language-minority students. Hispanics, for example, complete a median of 10.4 years of schooling, 2 years less schooling than that completed by the white, non-Hispanic population; 40 percent of the Hispanic population between the ages of 18 to 24 leaves high school without receiving a diploma compared with 14 percent of the white, non-Hispanic population.

The educational merit of bilingual education has already been documented at the State level. Recently, the New Jersey State Department of Education released a report based upon pre- and post-test scores of students enrolled in that State's bilingual program. The report concluded that in all grades tested, results consistently showed that third-year bilingual students significantly outscored first and second year students in English language skills. More importantly, the study also demonstrated that bilingual students had made significant gains relative to English-speaking children in 8 of the 12 grades tested.

In 1982, the Michigan State Board of Education released results of a statewide study of bilingual education. During the 1980–81 school year, 31,991 Michigan students were identified as having limited English-speaking ability. Of these, 19,528 students were in groups large enough to require bilingual education under State law. The Michigan study showed the achievement in both English reading and mathematics of students in bilingual education programs grew at a faster rate than the average rate for comparable students. According to the State Superintendent of Public Instruction Phillip E. Runkel "almost one-third of the students—31.5 percent—improved so much that they became ineligible for the program at the end of the year."

In Puerto Rico, the bilingual education programs supported by title VII have proven to be successful in equipping English-speaking students with the language skills they need to succeed in our classrooms where instruction is generally provided in Spanish.

The Bilingual Education Act is the only Federal mechanism in place today to assist State and local education agencies in the capacity-building activities they must undertake to fulfill their obligations under Federal civil rights statutes. Contrary to what I have heard from many so-called experts, I believe that expenditures for bilingual education programs will help to decrease future budget deficits. In fiscal terms, it is self-defeating to reduce expenditures for vital and effective education programs such as title VII. Language-minority students need bilingual education programs to succeed in school and to become economically productive members of our society.

Without a specific bilingual education program to address their needs, countless language-minority students would drop out of school. Most of the language-minority students who continue in school would graduate without the skills they need for survival in our increasingly competitive economy. This, in turn, would deprive the Federal Government of future tax revenues and, at the same time, increase future Federal outlays for public assistance and unemployment compensation.

Bilingual education is an effective method for developing the English language skills language-minority students need for academic success. Furthermore, it addresses the educational needs of a growing population whose labor market difficulties are more severe than that of other groups. The roots of disproportionate employment figures are not clearcut, but a recent study by the National Commission for Employment Policy stated that "a lack of fluency in English is the major source of the labor market difficulties" faced by Hispanics. For this reason, bilingual education takes on central importance for the economic future of our people.

I would also note that bilingual education can be used to serve the Nation's international interests. Although the primary purpose of title VII is to ensure that language-minority students receive equal educational opportunities, bilingual education programs also preserve and expand our Nation's inadequate linguistic resources. This year, the House passed legislation to promote national security and economic growth through foreign language improvement. During the hearings on this bill, military leaders, intelligence officials, and corporation directors testified that America's shortage of bilingual personnel jeopardized the successful conduct of foreign affairs and international trade. The Department of Defense, for example, presented statistics which showed that in 1980 it was able to fill only 58 percent of the DOD positions which required fluency in Spanish. Bilingual education can be a useful tool in correcting our current linguistic deficiencies, and improving the Nation's capabilities in maintaining a strong defense, effective diplomacy, and meaningful international trade.

The reauthorization of the Bilingual Education Act contained in H.R. 11 continues the funding priority for transitional bilingual education, but allows also for programs of academic excellence, adult literacy, and development bilingual education. In response to a continuing concern expressed in hearings on bilingual education, H.R. 11 would significantly increase the amount of available data on LEP children and provide for additional information about the characteristics and outcomes of the bilingual programs designed to serve them through an increased emphasis on data collection, evaluation, and monitoring.

Currently, only programs which employ transitional bilingual education methods—that is, those which use the child's native language to some extent in delivering the regular curriculum content—can receive funding under the Bilingual Education Act. Many believe this to be the best approach to educating the language-minority child, because it does not sacrifice cognitive development for rapid acquisition of spoken English. However, we are largely bereft of objective evaluations comparing TBE with other methodologies such as English as a second language [ESL] and immersion, which have been useful in certain situations around the country.

H.R. 11, however, includes, for the first time, a provision which would allow Federal dollars to be spent for alternative approaches. The language included in the committee bill came after long negotiations between myself and my colleagues DALE KILDEE, STEVE BARTLETT, and JOHN MCCAIN, and represents a careful and thoughtful approach to examining the effectiveness of the various methodologies.

As vice chairman of the congressional Hispanic caucus, I would like to note that the compromise language contained in H.R. 11 has the support of groups such as the Mexican-American Legal Defense & Education Fund [MALDEF], the National Council of La Raza, the League of United Latin American Citizens, the National Associaton for the Bilingual Education [NABE], the National Puerto Rican Coalition, the Joint National Commission of Languages, the National Association for Asian & Pacific American Education, the National Congress of American Indians, and the National Association for Vietnamese American Education. Additionally, the National Education Association [NEA] and the National School Board Association [NSBA] have indicated their endorsement for the bilingual education provisions of H.R. 11.

I strongly urge my colleagues to support the adoption of H.R. 11.

Mr. Chairman, I can tell my colleagues definitely that this bill improves significantly and makes more efficient current law on bilingual education, and I urge colleagues to support this bill in all of its parts and commend again, of course, Chairman PERKINS for his excellent work, and those on the minority side for bringing this bill to the House.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Nevada [Mrs. VUCANOVICH].

Mrs. VUCANOVICH. Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate my colleagues who have worked so hard in drafting this compromise language affecting bilingual education, and I support this compromise.

The Bilingual Education Act was enacted in order to provide a method of teaching those children who have a limited proficiency for the English language. There are two main reasons why title VII of this bill deserves our full support.

First, it provides for State and local boards of education, a considerable degree of flexibility in determining what type of bilingual program best serves their local needs.

And, second, it allows continued support for the traditional transition method. I know this method is preferred by many of my constituents from the Hispanic community. In either case, the final decision is left up to local boards of education. Thus keeping decisionmaking authority as close to local school officials as possible.

More and more families are entering the United States each year from foreign countries. I believe it is the responsibility of the Federal, State and local governments to teach these students the English language and American cultural values. By insuring that these new students learn English proficiently, we are not only helping them adjust to their new homeland, but we are ensuring that they will adapt to the American way of life and in turn contribute to its economy.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman. I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 11. It is omnibus legislation which has much to commend it. I am particularly in support of the Women's Educational Equity Amendments of 1984, and the 2-year extension of the Adult Education Act.

Women are equally represented in the primary, secondary, and higher educational institutions of America. Why then do we still need WEEA? WEEA is intended to make sure that when girls and women participate in the educational process, they will not be underrepresented in courses in math, science, computer science, and other fields that have been traditionally labeled "for men only" in the minds of students. By encouraging girls and women to enroll in courses in math and science, WEEA has helped to ensure that all students in our Nation will reach their full potential and be eligible for the jobs that interest them. WEEA has been especially helpful as a source of funding for projects that help minority women and handicapped women who want to participate fully in the educational process and the labor force.

WEEA provides grants for programs and projects that encourage girls and women to learn subjects that their older sisters and mothers did not have the opportunity to learn. These projects can serve as a model to educators all over our country.

This year, members of the Education and Labor Committee voted to improve the WEEA program in several ways. The purpose of WEEA is clarified, the activities that it supports are specified more clearly, and the funding level for the small grants program is increased to keep pace with the inflation that has occurred since the bill's previous levels were established in 1978. H.R. 11 also clarifies the role of the National Advisory Council on Women's Educational programs, and specifies the kinds of expertise needed by the members of the Advisory Council. This description of the criteria for members of the Advisory Council is especially important for two reasons: First, several members that were appointed in recent years had political experience but no expertise in education; and second, since 1978, the number of citizens with special expertise in educational equity has increased dramatically, so that we can now choose from a large number of citizens who have the kinds of backgrounds most appropriate and helpful for the Advisory Council.

Why is WEEA still important? There are several reasons:

First, girls continue to do more poorly than boys in certain high school subjects. Even when they demonstrate equal ability on aptitude tests;

Second, men and women remain relatively segregated in many technical college and university courses, particularly in math, science, engineering, nursing, and teacher education; and

Third, men still far outnumber women in many graduate and professional schools, even though recent studies have indicated that college educated women and men have increasingly similar educational goals.

These are the kinds of problems that WEEA has successfully addressed in the past, and can address in the future. WEEA has funded programs aimed at helping all girls and women, and has especially improved the educational opportunities of minority, handicapped, and low-income women and girls. For these reasons, WEEA deserves to be reauthorized and strengthened, by making several changes that reflect the successes and shortcomings of the original WEEA legislation.

I am also in support of the limited 2-year extension of the Adult Education Act.

We have witnessed much concern during this Congress for education. Much of this concern was sparked by evidence that our competitive economic edge was becoming blunted. Declines in productivity and international economic superiority were attributed, in part, to the detrimental effects of poorly educated workers. As a consequence of this concern about educational quality, the Congress has been working to develop suitable legislative solutions.

Most of the solutions being proposed are aimed at correcting problems that exist in elementary and secondary education, but it is not only our youngsters who are experiencing educational difficulties. Conservative estimates place the number of adult illiterates at about 23 million, with an additional 2.3 million adults joining that number annually.

These millions of adults are functionally illiterate: They do not possess the skills and the essential knowledge that would enable them to carry out important social, economic, and civic responsibilities. These millions of adult illiterates are caught in low-skilled jobs or they are unable to secure employment because literacy is essential to obtaining and retaining a job, as well as advancing in the work force. It is impossible to know exactly the costs of this high degree of illiteracy, but some recent estimates indicate that the benefits of literacy outweigh its costs by a factor of 5. It may be, then, that what we spend on efforts to obliterate illiteracy will yield a return on the investment of five times the cost.

Adult education is an important component of our national educational effort because literate functioning is a prerequisite to personal and economic success. Adult education is important because our rapidly changing industrial marketplace requires workers who are sufficiently literate to respond efficiently and effectively to the demands of their jobs.

Because quality education is so essential, I am pleased to support passage of H.R. 11. Just as importantly, however, because adult education is so important, I am pleased that the committee accepted my amendment to only reauthorize this act for 2 years.

The Adult Education Act was established in 1966. While some changes were made in 1978, there has not been a critical examination of the programs created by this act in nearly 20 years. Adult education is just too important to be slighted this way. The 2-year extension will enable existing programs to continue to receive funding through 1987 and will also allow the Congress sufficient time to hold hearings to examine the effectiveness of the Adult Education Act and to plan responsibly for needed change.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from the Virgin Islands [Mr. DE LUGO].

Mr. DE LUGO. Mr. Chairman, I wish to commend the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PERKINS], for the excellent work he has done on this legislation, and I commend all the members of this committee.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 11 which proposes to reauthorize a number of important educational programs. Of special concern to me are two provisions specifically regarding education in the U.S. Virgin Islands: reauthorization of general assistance to the Virgin Islands and teacher training for all of the territories.

General assistance to the Virgin Islands was intended to partially compensate the Virgin Islands for problems created by Congress through the passage of Federal legislation—Public Law 91-225—and a subsequent U.S. district court ruling—Hosier against Evans—which added 7,000 noncitizen students into the territory's public schools.

Since 1979, only $10.54 million of the originally authorized $25 million have been made available to improve public school education in the U.S. Virgin Islands. The intent of Congress was to correct the problems caused by the tremendous increase in the Virgin Islands school population, but frankly, we are still struggling to get on our feet.

While public education has experienced declining enrollments nationally, the Virgin Islands school enrollment has been growing steadily. Presently, over one-third of the territory's estimated 100,000 population is of school age.

Our academic concerns are also increased by the return to public schools of a large number of children previously attending nonpublic schools. Over 20 percent of Virgin Islands children, as compared to a composite national average of 8 percent, attend nonpublic schools. However, the downturn of the economy and the resulting increase in unemployment in the last 3 years has caused many families to transfer their children from private schools to public schools, placing an even greater demand on the public school system.

Since 1970, the Government of the Virgin Islands has committed between 25 to 33 percent of its operating budget to support public education. Currently, the Department receives approximately $64 million of the $233 million general fund appropriations. The Government of the Virgin Islands is nonetheless committed to the improvement of education and supports and recognizes the needs of its Department of Education.

In spite of financial constraints, previous capital improvement projects have added a total of 13 schools since 1970 that are serving 10,808 children. Additional construction projects have resulted in the completion of 99 classrooms at previously existing schools. The Government of the Virgin Islands has spent close to $100 million to deal with the physical needs caused by the increased enrollment.

Past expenditures have not been sufficient to meet the physical demands, and, at the present time overcrowded conditions still exist.

The U.S. Virgin Islands consists of three major islands and a number of smaller islets and cays separated by 40 miles of open sea. The 35 public schools administered by the Virgin Islands Department of Education are located on the three major islands. Because of this physical separation, a duplication of services, personnel, materials, and equipment is necessary and results in increased costs. The distance from the U.S. mainland also results in increased costs to purchase materials, supplies, and equipment. On most of our purchases an additional 15 to 20 percent is expended for transportation charges. These additional charges also apply to the purchase of building materials which are used for the construction of new schools and renovations and alterations of existing facilities. As a result of these factors, the dollar does not go as far in the Virgin Islands as it would on the mainland. This amplifies our need for this assistance.

I ask you to consider the Virgin Islands' position in the Caribbean, especially in light of the recently enacted Caribbean Basin Initiative. Virgin Islanders are proud of their U.S. identity. Part of that identity is our relation to the mainland school systems and its standards. We are located in the midst of islands newly independent, some leaning toward Communist ideologies. From this perspective we consider it important to assert a strong U.S. model. A direct indicator is the care we take in the education of our children.

The funds provided under general assistance will be used to upgrade our physical facilities through classroom renovation and construction, develop curricula and expand remedial efforts. This plan will serve as the catalyst to effect mandatory changes in our public school system. It is designed to provide additional tangible educational benefits to our children and to develop changes in our current educational curriculm practices.

The Territorial Teacher Training Program is beneficial to all of the territories. This program has helped the offshore possessions to acquire a more stable teaching force.

The territories have been forced to recruit large numbers of teachers from the continental United States. Many leave after very short tenures. The teacher training programs provide effective teaching methods and techniques for our own people to use, and have been an important first step in attempting to fill the demand for elementary and secondary school teachers.

While each territory has devised varying programs to meet its individual situation, these plans have the common goals of training recruited teachers, specialists, and administrators to understand and cope with the unique cultural and social aspects of the community, and to improve teaching methodology. This has resulted in an increase in teacher effectiveness and a decrease in the high teacher turnover rates. In addition, the Departments of Education in the respective territories have identified highly qualified teacher aides, paraprofessionals, and gifted secondary students and encouraged them to pursue careers in the teaching field.

A total of 160 individuals have been involved in the Teacher Training Program in the Virgin Islands; 28 have received degrees, 16 of whom received their degrees in June of this year. This fall, 140 students are expected to enroll in the program.

While major steps have been taken, there is still a need for additional funding to complete the job of training local teachers in the territories. I urge you to reauthorize these two programs, both of which have a vital impact on the ability of the U.S. Virgin Islands to educate its children.

In closing, I wish to join my colleagues of the Hispanic Caucus in endorsing the bilingual education provisions of this bill. I am particularly pleased by the set-aside in this program for a flexible instruction approach.

This is a good bill, a necessary one. I urge its passage. In particular, I urge that we guarantee the education of the children of the Virgin Islands, so that they may rightfully embark into the future alongside all other children of America.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of this legislation to reauthorize a number of important education programs. Of particular importance to my home State of New Mexico is the reauthorization of programs under the Indian Education Act and the Bilingual Education Act.

While H.R. 11 extends programs under the Indian Education Act for 5 years, the bill also makes a number of changes in the laws governing Indian schools including the establishment of procedures to be followed before closing schools. This is an important and long overdue change in light of the recent BIA ordered closing of the Sanostee Boarding School in Sanostee, NM. This school is a focal point for community activities in Sanostee and its sudden closure has caused great concern among the students who don't know where or if they will be attending school next year. H.R. 11 would require the BIA to report to Congress 1 year in advance of any proposed school closing and to thoroughly examine student needs and provide for alternative facilities prior to the closing. I would hope that the Bureau will apply these standards retroactively with respect to the Sanostee Boarding School and make every effort to reopen the school or provide for an alternative site acceptable to the Sanostee community.

Mr. Chairman, I also want to express my strong support for the reauthorization of the Bilingual Education Act.

My district in New Mexico is 40 percent Hispanic. The first language of many of our children is Spanish; the Spanish language is an integral part of our culture and heritage, of which we are all very proud.

You can well imagine the problems a young Spanish-speaking child, 5 or 6 years of age, faces when he or she starts school and cannot understand the instructions of the teacher, cannot keep pace with the class, cannot understand the stories being read. Before the Bilingual Education Act became law in 1968, more than 80 percent of these students dropped out of school. Achievement test scores for students with limited proficiency in English were 2 years below the expectancy norms. Limited familiarity with English made it extremely difficult for these children to attempt reading and writing and to develop conceptual skills. Implicit in English-only instructions was nonacceptance of the child's culture, heritage, and ethnicity. Extraordinarily high dropout rates meant low paying jobs for many, many children simply because they were raised speaking a different language than mainstream America.

Bilingual education programs have reduced the school dropout rates of Hispanic students by more than 50 percent. Bilingual education ensures that a child receives uninterrupted instruction while learning English as a second language. It increases the feeling of acceptance and self esteem which, in turn, leads to an improved self-concept and more successful performance. Most importantly, bilingual education programs increase the child's capacity for learning as the transition to a new language is made.

The need for continuing bilingual education in our schools is indisputable. Les ruego a mis colegas que se junten conmigo para asegurar todas oportunidades educacionales a cada hijo Americano. I urge my colleagues to join with me in ensuring full and educational opportunity for all of America's children.

I urge Members to support H.R. 11.

● Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 11, the Education Amendments Act of 1984. This bill will reauthorize 11 important education programs, programs such as Adult Education, Bilingual Education, and the Women's Educational Equity Act, that are vital to our Federal commitment to promoting equity and improving quality in education.

I recently received a letter from Mr. Bill Honig, the superintendent of public education for the State of California, in which he praised this legislation and urged the House's favorable consideration of the passage of this bill. Mr. Honig cited section 809 of the bill as particularly vital to the State of California. This provision will provide urgently needed improvements in educational auditing procedures. This mere codification of the intent of Congress will provide at least 60 California school districts from an audit claim totaling $28 million.

I particularly praise the reauthorization and extension of the Emergency Immigrant Education Program and the Bilingual Education Act. In addition, I commend Representatives BARTLETT, CORRADA, KILDEE, and MCCAIN for their outstanding efforts in improving the Bilingual Education Act which includes alternative instructional approaches while continuing support for the traditional transitional methods.

My State of California alone is home for nearly 50 percent of all refugees that immigrate to the United States. Our school districts are burdened by a continuing influx of immigrant children, whose education involves increased costs. Without funding through such programs as the Emergency Immigrant Education Act and the Bilingual Education Act, we would be unable to provide our new residents with much-needed educational services to assist them in assimilating and participating in our society.

Children of limited-English proficiency are a Federal constituency in the same way as handicapped children, disadvantaged children, and other special-needs groups. A student's right to intelligible instruction is a fundamental right that is protected by Federal law. As the number of students of limited-English proficiency increases daily, it becomes evident that we are losing the full depth of our Nation's potential by failing to utilize their talents and capabilities. It is through such programs as the Emergency Immigrant Education Program and the Bilingual Education Act that we can prevent academic retardation and negative self-concepts and can effectively enhance the student's whole future capability for learning. Our investment in these programs today can only reap benefits for our Nation tomorrow.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting the Education Amendments Act of 1984. If we are serious about our commitment to promoting equity and improving quality in education, it is crucial that we pass this important legislation. Inequality in education cannot be tolerated, for our Nation's national security, economic strength, and quality of life is dependent upon the literacy of all its citizens.●

● Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Chairman, in 1962, then-President John F. Kennedy, speaking on the importance of education in this Nation's efforts to stay a world leader in the space race, said: "A child miseducated is a child lost. The damage cannot be repaired. Civilization, ran an old saying, is a race between education and catastrophe."

Things really haven't changed much since 1962. We are still racing to stay a world leader, except that today our concern is not so much the space race as it is the technology race. And the importance of education is even more certain.

This Nation is changing. We still are the world's melting pot. We are still a Nation made up of Americans from other nations, of other languages. But our national needs are still the same: skilled people to fill skilled jobs.

H.R. 11, the 1984 education amendments, is a key element in our Nation's ability to compete in the present-day battle to keep from becoming a second class power.

H.R. 11 extends the lives of 11 educational programs, from bilingual education to emergency immigration education assistance, from women's educational equity to Indian education, from asbestos school hazard detection and control to the national assessment of educational progress and adult education.

Two of these programs, in my mind, rank foremost in importance: Bilingual education and adult education.

Last year, some 216,000 children—of the estimated 1 to 3 million eligible for bilingual education—received instruction in some 80 different languages.

There are those who argue against bilingual education programs, suggesting that earlier immigrants didn't receive this special training and adjusted quite well. To these critics, I say that those were different times: Life was simpler; work was simpler; it was easier to find a niche in society even if you didn't have a complete command of the English language or American customs.

Today, as we all know, life is much more complex. We are a mobile society. The new immigrants to our shores find it more difficult to adjust to American life, and America needs this human resource more quickly because we, as a nation, are in a war for survival. The new technology requires minds that can adapt.

To quote President Kennedy once more:

When the youngest child alive today has grown to manhood, our position in the world will be determined first of all by what provisions we make today—for his education, his health, and his opportunities for a good home and a good job and a good life.

I contend, Mr. Chairman, that the bilingual education programs to be extended until 1989 in H.R. 11, with the changes proposed by the House Education and Labor Committee, will help us achieve what John Kennedy had hoped we would.

The second vital part of this bill deals with adult education. It is no secret in this country that we are living longer. It is also no secret that Americans are staying in the work force longer, and changing jobs more often—some for personal achievement; others because of necessity such as those steelworkers who have been laid off with little prospect for ever returning to work in the steel industry.

We in this Nation must provide an opportunity for those citizens who have either dropped out of high school or seek training in new areas because of necessity to return to school and pick up the pieces of their lives.

It is critical to the future of America that those who left early or need new skills as well as those just entering school get the kind of education that will enable them to become solid, working citizens, contributing to this country.

For, without this skilled resource, our people, America certainly will not be able to compete in today's or tomorrow's world.●

● Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Chairman, I strongly support H.R. 11, as reported out of the Education and Labor Committee, and oppose attempts to weaken the compromise reached with regard to the extension of the Bilingual Education Program.

Title II of H.R. 11, which provides for revisions of the Bilingual Education Act, represents a well-crafted bipartisan compromise. This compromise, while retaining the effective aspects of the current law, provides for greater program flexibility in assisting students with limited English proficiency to acquire English language skills and academic achievement.

First of all, title II continues support for the current transitional bilingual education programs which use English language instruction, in combination with the student's native language, to improve academic performance and English proficiency. Further, it strengthens those programs by requiring "structured English language instruction" together with the student's native language.

In addition, title II of H.R. 11 provides for the use of alternative instruction such as English as a second language or structured immersion in the English language. It also specifies that research will be conducted on the use of alternative methods of acquiring English language proficiency under the Bilingual Education Act. It further opens up funding of alternative instruction methods within the teacher training and technical assistance components of the act.

This bipartisan compromise goes even further in strengthening the English language objective by authorizing English literacy programs for the parents and out-of-school members of the family. This is a substantial improvement over the earlier act, for it clearly outlines the importance of the family in providing an English proficiency setting for the student and in providing needed language skills for employment and job advancement.

Finally, this compromise authorizes a new program, called developmental bilingual education, which allows English-speaking students as well as non-English-speaking students to acquire a second language. This new program is especially important in light of the failure of our school system to provide for the study of foreign languages. I would like to point out that Secretary of Education Terrel Bell also affirmed the need to improve language instruction for all students, regardless of their language background. He called the study of foreign languages a national priority and an integral part of our push for academic excellence.

It is for these reasons that I rise in strongest support of H.R. 11 as a well-developed approach to bilingual education, and urge opposition to any weakening amendment to this effort.●

● Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, today this body considers H.R. 5231, the Academic Equity and Excellence through Bilingual Education Act of 1984, which forms part of H.R. 11, the omnibus reauthorization bill for several education programs.

Bilingual education—an education by which the student becomes proficient in the English language—is necessary to our Nation's future. Children with limited English proficiency have been found to be one of the most undereducated groups of all American children. It is to our advantage to assist these children as early as possible in their education. It is an investment in our Nation's future. As students become proficient in English, they will be better able to take a more active part in the economic and social life of this Nation. In turn, future generations will benefit from those students who take part in bilingual education.

In all, limited-English-proficient students come from homes where over 90 languages other than English predominate. Only about one-third of the 2.64 million children aged 5 to 14 identified in a 1978 study are receiving either bilingual education or English as second language according to the Department of Education. This means that approximately 1.8 million children nationally go without bilingual education and are left to survive in an education system based on a language they do not understand.

Department of Education statistics show that while the total school-age population is expected to increase between now and the year 2000 by 16 percent, the expected increase in limited-English-proficient students in the same time is 40 percent. The need for this legislation, therefore, is quite evident.

By passing this legislation, we will reaffirm the commitments Congress has made to all the children of this Nation.●

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. Chairman, as an original sponsor of H.R. 5231, legislation reauthorizing the Bilingual Education Act, I rise in strong support of the pending legislation, H.R. 11, which revises and extends the authorizations for several important education programs including title VII, the Bilingual Education Program.

All of these programs are critical to maintaining the current Federal role in education and continuing Federal support for proven programs which demonstrate Congress' commitment to educational excellence. In the past year, the Nation's public schools, its teachers and many Federal programs have been subjected to criticism. We have been judged a nation at risk and much name calling and blame placing have characterized our struggle to provide quality and equity for all students in our public schools. Amidst this name calling and blame placing, some of us in this House have continued the difficult and often thankless task of assuring that the foundation programs, at the Federal level, which assure to all of America's schoolchildren and some adults equality of educational opportunity and a quality education, are continued. H.R. 11 represents the final products of one of those efforts.

I would like to pay special tribute to the chairman of our full Committee on Education and Labor, my distinguished friend from Kentucky, and to my colleague and friend from Pennsylvania, Mr. GOODLING. These two gentlemen, more than any others, have fought the good fight for education and defended our foundation programs against budget cutters and conservative policymakers who would abandon this Nation's commitment to the expansion of educational opportunity and the quest for quality in elementary, secondary, vocational and higher education.

I am especially pleased that my four colleagues on the committee, Mr. KILDEE and Mr. CORRADA, who will be leaving the House soon, as well as Mr. BARTLETT and Mr. MCCAIN, have joined together—in a bipartisan fashion—to support a compromise on the bilingual educational provision. The bilingual education provisions should be supported by all Members because they are important to education, to international understanding and world peace, and to our national security.

Language minority students comprise about 14 percent of the 39 million U.S. public school population, or about 1 in 7 students. Their numbers are growing rapidly in relationship to the declining student population. Bilingual education takes on even greater importance as the number of students able to benefit from or requiring bilingual instruction grows. In Chicago, IL, for example, 23 percent of the district's 434,042 students are language minority or lack English proficiency sufficient to function in the classroom. Current projections of language minority by the National Center for Education Statistics [NCES] indicate that their numbers could reach 101.8 million by the year 2000—up from 78.3 million in 1980. No matter what kind of program approach is adopted, increasing numbers of language minority students in the classroom pose important issues for educators: First, availability and competencies of bilingual teachers and other personnel; second, certification standards for selection and retention of bilingual teachers; and, third, inservice and community support services for teachers and principals.

At a time when the national need dictates that we should be increasing the exposure of our citizens to other languages and cultures, that exposure is declining. Cultural isolation is a luxury America can no longer afford. Cultural pride should not be continued with regionalism. Let's look at the facts:

Of those who graduate from public high school today, fewer than 4 percent have more than 2 years of a foreign language. By comparison, France, which we sometimes criticize for cultural isolation—or arrogance—requires all students to take at least 4 years of a foreign language starting in the sixth grade. In 1974, there were one-half million fewer U.S. high school students enrolled in foreign languages than in 1968 despite the growth in total student enrollment during those years. Of 22,737 secondary schools in the Nation, 4,344 do not teach any foreign language, and the number of schools that do teach foreign languages is declining.

The United States continues to be the only nation where you can graduate from college without having had 1 year of a foreign language during any of the years of schooling. It is even possible to earn a doctorate here without studying any foreign language.

Because of our rich ethnic mix, the United States is home to millions whose first language is not English; 1 of every 50 Americans is foreign-born. We are the fourth largest Spanish-speaking country in the world. Yet almost nothing is being done to preserve the language skills we have or to use this rich linguistic resource to train people in the use of a language other than English.

Of the 11 million U.S. students seeking graduate and undergraduate degrees, fewer than 1 percent are studying the languages used by three-fourths of the world's population, and only a small number of that small number will ever achieve a reasonable degree of competence. For example, there are 300 million people who speak Hindi, but fewer than 300 Americans are studying that language.

Forty-four percent fewer students enrolled in college foreign-language programs between 1963 and 1974, despite the fact that during that same period the Nation became much more dependent upon exports for jobs.

One-fifth of the Nation's 2-year colleges offer no foreign language. For 2 years—1973 and 1974—I taught at Sangamon State University in Illinois, in most respects a fine school. But not a single foreign language course is taught there. By contrast, most of the developed nations—and many of the developing nations—offer every elementary school student the chance to learn a foreign language.

In 1915, 85 percent of the Nation's colleges required that a student pass a competency test in a foreign language before he or she could enter. As of 1975, only 10 percent of the Nation's colleges or universities even required that the school record show that the student had taken a foreign language.

Language study is an essential part of personal growth, international understanding and our Nation's national security. For these reasons, I have long supported bilingual education and foreign language study in elementary, secondary and postsecondary schools. Jack Anderson's Washington Post column of July 15, 1984, "The CIA's Bilingual Education" makes a critical point—in a somewhat humorous fashion—a Mexico City-based CIA agent had to take along an interpreter when he met with an important Mexican party official to obtain secret information because the agent could not speak Spanish. Former CIA Deputy Director Administrator Bobby Inman made the point more cogently in testimony on my Foreign Language Assistance Act:

> I spent the last 4 years as Director of the National Security Agency. I was for a year in the job that General Larkin has and, before that, 2 years as the Director of Naval Intelligence. Throughout all of those assignments, the importance of foreign language capabilities has been brought home steadily, first the need for foreign language capabilities to exploit open source unclassified information available to us. Much is available which we never get translated, to sift through the huge volume for its potential use in educating this country on political and economic areas of concern to us or technical concerns developed in what are currently nonadversarial countries.
> In our human intelligence needs it is not just an ability to understand the language that is important, but rather there must be the ability to converse with total fluency, to understand the nuances of conversation, and to be able to persuade others in their own language why they should give help to the United States in understanding events in their own countries or in other areas of the world where they can provide us assistance.

While the bilingual education provisions of this bill won't solve all of America's economic, social and national defense problems, it will, along with H.R. 2708, the Foreign Language Assistance for National Security Act, begin to improve language instruction and cultural understanding.

The compromise worked out by my colleagues on the committee is an excellent one. It:

Would allow use of Federal funds for alternative instruction, such as English as a second language [ESL] or structured immersion;

Specifies that 4 percent of the current level of funding plus 50 percent of new funding will be reserved for alternative instruction, up to 10 percent of the total appropriation;

Establishes funding for alternative instruction at various appropriations levels:

$140 million: $5.6 million for alternative programs;

$150 million: $10.6 million for alternative programs;

$165 million: $16.5 million for alternative programs;

Recognizes that the primary purpose of bilingual education programs is to teach students English;

Specifies that research will be done into alternative methods to teach children English, as well as into traditional bilingual education;

Encourages States and local school districts to develop and implement appropriate instructional programs for limited English-proficient students, and

Allows the Secretary to give funding priority to school districts which find it impracticable to implement traditional bilingual education or which already have such programs and want to try new approaches.

I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 11.

Mr. Chairman, I also rise today in support of the amendment offered by my colleague, Mr. FORD of Michigan, that modifies certain provisions of H.R. 11, regarding Department of Education audits of State and local agencies conducting educational activities with Federal program funds.

I am aware of problems in Illinois and elsewhere that have been created by the audit procedures administered by the Department of Education. Specifically, the Illinois State Board of Education has charged that the appeals process for violations determined by the Department through the education appeals board has violated due process rights guaranteed by Congress. In order to correct this, the provisions of H.R. 11 allow the right of discovery under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure to apply to the process for appeal of audit findings. It also provides that the Department of Education must support a case with actual evidence rather than a mere conclusionary statement contained in a letter of final audit determination.

The amendment offered by Representative FORD clarifies several of the requirements of section 809, while preserving the intent of this important section.

I commend my colleague for working diligently to provide protections for States and local school districts, while assuring that Federal moneys are expended appropriately. I urge approval of this amendment.●

● Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Chairman, while I am opposed to H.R. 11 overall, largely due to the excessive authorizations called for in the legislation, I am particularly concerned with title II of the bill relating to bilingual education. Although H.R. 11 earmarks for the first time Federal funds for instructional methods other than bilingual education for students of limited-English proficiency, the legislation essentially continues the one-sided reliance on a single approach, bilingual education, for the instruction of these special students.

Few would disagree that proficiency in English is essential to educational, professional, and social opportunities for America's newcomers. Certainly there are difficulties in providing adequate instruction to those of limited-English proficiency and special programs may be needed. The education of the estimated 1.7 to 3.6 million school-aged children with limited English ability is a problematic task which must take into account a variety of unique linguistic, educational, and social factors.

Despite the diversity of limited-English-proficient students throughout America, for almost a decade we have highlighted bilingual education as the method for increasing limited-English-proficient students' proficiency in English; H.R. 11 continues this one-sided reliance on the bilingual approach through fiscal year 1989. However, although bilingual education has been the teaching strategy utilized to the virtual exclusion of alternative instructional approaches, largely due to the "Lau remedies" developed in 1975 by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, little conclusive evidence has been produced which supports the effectiveness of bilingual education. One of the most recent and comprehensive reviews of bilingual education conducted by the Department of Education in 1980, concluded, "the case for the effectiveness of transitional bilingual education is so weak that exclusive reliance on this instructional method is clearly not justified."

Mr. Chairman, with so little evidence available to support bilingual education's effectiveness in promoting English language learning among limited-English-proficient students, it makes little sense, in my view, to continue expending millions of Federal dollars each year on this one approach. With the need for restraint and frugality in all areas within the Federal budget, it hardly strikes me as prudent policy to devote scarce Federal dollars, as the legislation before us does, to an instructional approach which has not been proven to be the most effective method in encouraging English proficiency among limited-English-proficient students.

Moreover, I have serious reservations about the Federal Government prescribing to school districts a specific approach to remedy the problem of educating America's LEP students. Clearly, local school districts are in a stronger position than the Federal Government to identify and meet the unique needs of students. As in most areas of education, the need is for less, not more, Federal control of what goes on in the classroom. Federal policy should give States and local school districts more flexibility to decide which programs best meet not only the specific needs and circumstances of their students, but which meet their budget priorities as well.

The legislation before us today fails to recognize this, allowing just 4 percent of the funds authorized to be used for projects which use instructional methods other than bilingual education for teaching their limited-English-proficient children. H.R. 11's continued emphasis on the bilingual approach reflects, in my view, Congress' inability to address the disturbing questions surrounding this instructional method and to broaden the educational methods used to instruct our Nation's special limited-English-proficient students. Mr. Chairman, to continue to rely on an approach which does not necessarily facilitate the learning of English, and thus which may actually impede the assimilation of our Nation's linguistic minority children into the American mainstream, will tragically serve to keep many of America's linguistic minorities forever on the fringes of America's English-speaking mainstream.●

● Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Chairman, H.R. 11, the bill before us today, would reauthorize 11 education programs that are vital to continuing the Federal Government's commitment to promoting equity and improving quality in education. These programs represent a significant investment in our Nation's future. In order to ensure the fullest return, they must have the strongest support and backing that this Congress can give.

I am particularly pleased to see provisions in this legislation which address two very important issues facing our country. One is title IV which reauthorized the Women's Educational Equity Act at $50 million a year for fiscal years 1985 through 1989. The other is the extension of the Asbestos School Hazard Detection and Control Act through fiscal year 1989 at an authorization level of $22.5 million for grants to local school districts for asbestos detection activities and $75 million for interest-free loans to districts for asbestos abatement projects.

The Women's Educational Equity Act is the only Federal grants program addressing sex equity at every level of education. Grants are made available to public agencies, nonprofit organizations and individuals for projects of national, general or statewide significance in advancing educational opportunities for women. A second-tier system of grants for projects of local significance has never been implemented due to insufficient funding. I hope that the modest increase over current funding represented by this legislation will allow adequate money to encourage this second set of WEEA goals.

Since its inception, WEEA has supported projects to increase educational opportunities for disabled women and girls, to expand access of women to positions in school administration and to promote the enrollment of women in mathematics, science, and nontraditional vocational courses. In 1970, boys outnumbered girls 13 to 1 in interscholastic sports. Today, that difference has been reduced to 2 to 1. In 1972, women comprised 43 percent of 4-year college student bodies. In 10 years, that proportion had increased to 52 percent.

Despite a record of progress, there is still much to be done to eliminate inequities and discrimination that remain in the educational system. In 1972, women held only 10 percent of the full-time professorships at public and private institutions. Since then, there has been no increase. Women occupy only 25 percent of administrative and policymaking positions at the State and local educational levels although they make up 66 percent of all school teaching positions. The Bureau of Labor Statistics estimates that 90 percent of today's girls will be employed outside the home. Without a strong educational background, they will be directed toward lower paying jobs.

Clearly, the Federal commitment to educational equity for women and girls must be preserved and strengthened. The reauthorization of WEEA is a cornerstone of this commitment.

I also applaud the committee's inclusion in H.R. 11 of provisions which speak to a very grave and serious danger that threatens millions of schoolchildren and educational employees. A Department of Education report has estimated that 14,000 schools may contain asbestos hazards requiring removal. Each schoolday, our Nation's children and teachers are exposed to this deadly substance which could result in a massive future health problem in increased incidences of cancer and other fatal diseases.

The Asbestos School Hazard Detection and Control Act was passed in 1980 to promote the detection and removal of asbestos from our Nation's schools. Tragically, repeated efforts to secure appropriations have failed, with the administration refusing to request funding in the budget every year since this bill's enactment. Last year, an amendment to the Health and Human Services appropriations bill was made in this body to include funding for this program. Regrettably, the Senate eliminated this money in conference committee.

The reauthorization of this law through fiscal year 1989 is imperative. Funding of this program is a matter that Congress can no longer ignore. All the advances in education and expansion of learning opportunities are worth very little if, in the process, our children's health is destroyed. Let us support this extension and insist on its complete funding.●

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of our time.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Pursuant to the rule, the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute now printed in the bill shall be considered by titles as an original bill for the purpose of amendment, and each title shall be considered as having been read.

The Clerk will designate section 1.

The text of section 1 is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Education Amendments of 1984".

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to section 1? If not, the Clerk will designate title I.

The text of title I is as follows:

TITLE I—ADULT EDUCATION ACT AMENDMENTS

GENERAL EXTENSION OF AUTHORIZATION

SEC. 101. (a) Section 311(b) of the Adult Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1208a(b)) is amended by striking out "October 1, 1983" and inserting in lieu thereof "October 1, 1986".

(b) Section 313(b) of such Act is amended by striking out "October 1, 1984" and inserting in lieu thereof "October 1, 1986".

(c) Section 315(a) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 315. (a) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1985 and 1986 to carry out the provisions of this title.".

(d) Section 318(f) of such Act is amended by striking out "four" and inserting in lieu thereof "seven".

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to title I? If not, the Clerk will designate title II.

The text of title II is as follows:

TITLE II—REVISION OF THE BILINGUAL EDUCATION ACT

SEC. 201. The Bilingual Education Act (20 U.S.C. 3221 et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

"TITLE VII—BILINGUAL EDUCATION PROGRAMS

"SHORT TITLE

"SEC. 701. This title may be cited as the 'Bilingual Education Act'.

"POLICY; APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 702. (a) Recognizing—

"(1) that there are large and growing numbers of children of limited English proficiency;

"(2) that many of such children have a cultural heritage which differs from that of English proficient persons;

"(3) that the Federal Government has a special and continuing obligation to assist in providing equal educational opportunity to limited English proficient children;

"(4) that the Federal Government has a special and continuing obligation to assist language minority students to acquire the English language proficiency that will enable them to become full and productive members of society;

"(5) that a primary means by which a child learns is through the use of such child's native language and cultural heritage;

"(6) that, therefore, large numbers of children of limited English proficiency have educational needs which can be met by the use of bilingual educational methods and techniques;

"(7) that in some school districts, establishment of bilingual education programs may be administratively impractical due to the presence of small numbers of students of a particular native language or because personnel who are qualified to provide bilingual instructional services are unavailable;

"(8) that States and local school districts should be encouraged to determine appropriate curricula for limited English proficient students within their jurisdictions and to develop and implement appropriate instructional programs;

"(9) that children of limited English proficiency have a high dropout rate and low median years of education;

"(10) that the segregation of many groups of limited English proficient students remains a serious problem;

"(11) that both limited English proficient children and children whose primary language is English can benefit from bilingual education programs, and that such programs help develop our national linguistic resources;

"(12) that research, evaluation, and data collection capabilities in the field of bilingual education need to be strengthened so as to better identify and promote those programs and instructional practices which result in effective education;

"(13) that parent and community participation in bilingual education programs contributes to program effectiveness;

"(14) that because of limited English proficiency, many adults are not able to participate fully in national life, and that limited English proficient parents are often not able to participate effectively in their children's education, the Congress declares it to be the policy of the United States, in order to establish equal educational opportunity for all children and to promote educational excellence (A) to encourage the establishment and operation, where appropriate, of educational programs using bilingual educational practices, techniques, and methods, (B) to encourage the establishment of special alternative instructional programs for students of limited English proficiency in school districts where the establishment of bilingual education programs is not practicable or for other appropriate reasons, and (C) for those purposes, to provide financial assistance to local educational agencies, and, for certain related purposes, to State educational agencies, institutions of higher education, and community organizations. The programs assisted under this title include programs in elementary and secondary schools as well as related preschool and adult programs which are designed to meet the educational needs of individuals of limited English proficiency, with particular attention to children having the greatest need for such programs. Such programs shall be designed to enable students to achieve full competence in English. Such programs may additionally provide for the development of student competence in a second language.

"(b)(1) For the purposes of carrying out the provisions of this title, there are authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1985 and each of the four succeeding years such sums as may be necessary.

"(2) There are further authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of section 732, such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 1985 and each of the four succeeding fiscal years.

"(3) From the sums appropriated under paragraph (1) for any fiscal year which do not exceed $140,000,000, the Secretary shall reserve 4 percent for special alternative instructional programs and related activities authorized under this Act. From the sums appropriated under paragraph (1) for any fiscal year in excess of $140,000,000, the Secretary shall reserve 50 percent for special alternative instructional programs and related activities authorized under this Act, except that the amount of funds reserved for special alternative instructional programs and related activities pursuant to this paragraph shall not exceed 10 percent of the funds appropriated under paragraph (1).

"(4) From the sums appropriated under paragraph (1) for any fiscal year, the Secretary shall reserve at least 60 percent for the programs carried out under part A of this Act; and of this amount, at least 75 percent shall be reserved for the programs of transitional bilingual education carried out under section 721(a)(1).

"(5) From the sums appropriated under paragraph (1) for any fiscal year, the Secretary shall reserve at least 25 percent for training activities carried out under part C.

"(6) The Secretary shall reserve from the amount not reserved pursuant to paragraphs (4) and (5) of this subsection such amount as may be necessary, but not in excess of 1 percent thereof, for the purposes of section 752.

"DEFINITIONS; REGULATIONS

"SEC. 703. (a) The following definitions shall apply to the terms used in this title:

"(1) The term 'limited English proficiency' when used with reference to individuals means—

"(A) individuals who were not born in the United States or whose native language is a language other than English,

"(B) individuals who come from environments where a language other than English is dominant, as further defined by the Secretary by regulation, and

"(C) individuals who are American Indian and Alaskan Natives and who come from environments where a language other than English has had a significant impact on their level of English language proficiency, subject to such regulations as the Secretary determines to be necessary; and who, by reason thereof, have sufficient difficulty speaking, reading, writing, or understanding the English language to deny such individuals the opportunity to learn successfully in classrooms where the language of instruction is English or to participate fully in our society.

"(2) The term 'native language', when used with reference to an individual of limited English proficiency, means the language normally used by such individuals, or in the case of a child, the language normally used by the parents of the child.

"(3) The term 'low-income' when used with respect to a family means an annual income for such a family which does not exceed the poverty level determined pursuant to section 111(c)(2) of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965.

"(4)(A) The term 'program of transitional bilingual education' means a program of instruction, designed for children of limited English proficiency in elementary or secondary schools, which provides, with respect to the years of study to which such program is applicable, structured English language instruction, and to the extent necessary to allow a child to achieve competence in the English language, instruction in the child's native language. Such instruction shall incorporate the cultural heritage of such children and of other children in American society. Such instruction shall, to the extent necessary, be in all courses or subjects of study which will allow a child to meet grade-promotion and graduation standards.

"(B) In order to prevent the segregation of children on the basis of national origin in programs of transitional bilingual education, and in order to broaden the understanding of children about languages and cultural heritages other than their own, a program of transitional bilingual education may include the participation of children whose language is English, but in no event shall the percentage of such children exceed 40 percent. The program may provide for centralization of teacher training and curriculum development, but it shall serve such children in the schools which they normally attend.

"(C) In such courses or subjects of study as art, music, and physical education, a program of transitional bilingual education shall make provision for the participation of children of limited English proficiency in regular classes.

"(D) Children enrolled in a program of transitional bilingual education shall, if graded classes are used, be placed, to the extent practicable, in classes with children of approximately the same age and level of educational attainment. If children of significantly varying ages or levels of educational attainment are placed in the same class, the program of transitional bilingual education shall seek to insure that each child is provided with instruction which is appropriate for his level of educational attainment.

"(5)(A) The term 'program of developmental bilingual education' means a full-time program of instruction in elementary and secondary schools which provides, with respect to the years of study to which such program is applicable, structured English-language instruction and instruction in a second language. Such programs shall be designed to help children achieve competence in English and a second language while mastering subject matter skills. Such instruction shall, to the extent necessary, be in all courses or subjects of study which will allow a child to meet grade-promotion and graduation standards.

"(B) Where possible, classes in programs of developmental bilingual education shall be comprised of approximately equal numbers of students whose native language is English and limited English proficient students whose native language is the second language of instruction and study in the program.

"(6) The term 'special alternative instructional programs' mean programs of instruction designed for children of limited English proficiency in elementary and secondary schools. Such programs are not transitional or developmental bilingual education programs, but have specially designed curricula and are appropriate for the particular linguistic and instructional needs of the children enrolled. Such programs shall provide, with respect to the years of study to which such program is applicable, structured English language instruction and special instructional services which will allow a child to achieve competence in the English language and to meet grade-promotion and graduation standards.

"(7) The term 'family English literacy program' means a program of instruction designed to help limited English proficient adults and out-of-school youth achieve competence in the English language. Such programs of instruction may be conducted exclusively in English or in English and the student's native language. Where appropriate, such programs may include instruction on how parents and family members can facilitate the educational achievement of limited English proficient children. To the extent feasible, preference for participation in such programs shall be accorded to the parents and immediate family members of children enrolled in programs assisted under this title.

"(8) The term 'programs of academic excellence' means programs of transitional bilingual education or developmental bilingual education which have an established record of providing effective, academically excellent instruction and which are designed to serve as models of exemplary bilingual education programs and to facilitate the dissemination of effective bilingual educational practices.

"(9) The term 'Office' means the Office of Bilingual Education and Minority Language Affairs.

"(10) The term 'Director' means the Director of the Office of Bilingual Education and Minority Languages Affairs.

"(11) The term 'Council' means the National Advisory and Coordinating Council on Bilingual Education.

"(12) The term 'Secretary' means the Secretary of Education.

"(13) The term 'other programs for persons of limited English proficiency' when used in this title means any programs within the Department of Education directly involving bilingual education activities serving persons of limited English proficiency, such as the programs carried out in coordination with the provisions of this title pursuant to subpart 3 of part B of the Vocational Education Act of 1963, and section 306(a)(11) of the Adult Education Act, and programs and projects serving areas with high concentrations of persons of limited English proficiency pursuant to section 6(b)(4) of the Library Services and Construction Act.

"(b) In prescribing regulations under this title, the Secretary shall, through the National Advisory and Coordinating Council on Bilingual Education, consult with State and local educational agencies, organizations representing persons of limited English proficiency, and organizations representing teachers and other personnel involved in bilingual education.

"(c) Parents of children participating in programs assisted under this title shall be informed of the instructional goals of the program and the progress of their children in such program.

"PART A—FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR BILINGUAL EDUCATION PROGRAMS

"BILINGUAL EDUCATION PROGRAMS

"SEC. 721. (a) Funds available for grants under this part shall be used for the establishment, operation, and improvement of—

"(1) programs of transitional bilingual education;

"(2) programs of developmental bilingual education;

"(3) special alternative instructional programs for students of limited English proficiency;

"(4) programs of academic excellence;

"(5) family English literacy programs;

"(6) bilingual preschool, special education, and gifted and talented programs preparatory or supplementary to programs such as those assisted under this Act; and

"(7) programs to develop instructional materials in languages for which such materials are commercially unavailable.

"(b)(1)(A) A grant may be made under subsection (a) (1), (2), (3), or (4) of this section only upon application therefor by one or more local educational agencies or by institutions of higher education, including junior or community colleges, applying jointly with one or more local educational agencies.

"(B) A grant may be made under subsection (a) (5) or (6) only upon application therefor by one or more local educational agencies; institutions of higher education, including junior or community colleges; and private nonprofit organizations, applying separately or jointly.

"(c)(1) Any application for a grant authorized under subsection (a) of this section shall be made to the Secretary at such time, and in such manner, as the Secretary deems appropriate.

"(2) Applications for grants authorized under subsections (a)(1), (a)(2), and (a)(3) of this section, shall contain information regarding—

"(A) the number of children enrolled in programs conducted by the local educational agency;

"(B) the number of children residing in the area served by the local educational agency who are enrolled in private schools;

"(C)(i) the number of children enrolled in public and private schools in the area served by the local educational agency who are limited in their English proficiency; (ii) the method used by the applicant to make this determination; and (iii) evidence of the educational condition of the limited English proficient students, such as reading, mathematics, and subject matter test scores, and, where available, data on grade retention rates, rates of referral to or placement in special education programs, and student dropout rates;

"(D) the number of limited English proficient children who are enrolled in instructional programs specifically designed to meet their educational needs, as well as descriptions of such programs;

"(E) the number of limited English proficient children enrolled in public or private schools in the area served by the local educational agency who need or could benefit from education programs such as those assisted under this title;

"(F) the number of children who are to receive instruction through the proposed program and the extent of their educational needs;

"(G) a statement of the applicant's ability to serve children of limited English proficiency, including an assessment of the qualifications of personnel who will participate in the proposed project and of the need for further training of such personnel;

"(H) the resources needed to develop and operate or improve the proposed program;

"(I) the activities which would be undertaken under the grant and how these activities will improve the educational attainment of students and expand the capacity of the applicant to operate programs such as those assisted under this Act when Federal assistance under this section is no longer available; and

"(J) the specific educational goals of the proposed program and how achievement of these goals will be measured.

"(3) Applications for grants authorized under subsection (a)(3) of this section from applicants who desire to obtain priority in the awarding of such grants may contain information regarding (A) the administrative impracticability of establishing a bilingual education program due to the presence of small number of students of a particular native language, (B) the unavailability of personnel qualified to provide bilingual instructional services, or (C) the applicant's current or past efforts to establish a bilingual education program.

"(4) Applications for grants authorized under subsection (a)(4) shall contain information regarding—

"(A) the number of children served by the existing bilingual education program and evidence of their educational condition prior to enrollment in the program;

"(B) a description of the existing program as well as the educational background and linguistic competencies of program personnel;

"(C) the extent to which the program has promoted student academic achievement as indicated by objective evidence, such as improvements in language, mathematics, and subject matter test scores; grade retention rates; rates of referral to or placement in special education programs; student dropout rates; and, where appropriate, postsecondary education and employment experiences of students;

"(D) the extent of parent involvement in and satisfaction with the existing bilingual education program; and

"(E) how the activities carried out under the grant would utilize and promote programs of academic excellence which employ bilingual educational practices, techniques, and methods.

"(5) Applications for grants authorized under subsection (a)(5) shall contain information regarding—

"(A) the number of limited English proficient parents and out-of-school family members of limited English proficient students who would be served by the English literacy program;

"(B) the activities which would be undertaken under the grant and how these activities will promote English literacy and enable parents and family members to assist in the education of limited English proficient children;

"(C) the extent to which the persons to be served by the program have been involved in its development;

"(D) applicant's prior experience and performance in providing educational programs to limited English proficient adults and out-of-school youth;

"(E) with respect to applications by a local educational agency, the extent to which limited English proficient students enrolled in the educational agency are served by programs specifically designed to meet their needs; and

"(F) with respect to other applicants, a description of how the applicant will coordinate its program with a local education agency to ensure that the program will help limited English proficient family members promote the academic progress of limited English proficient children.

"(d)(1)(A) Grants made pursuant to subsections (a)(1), (a)(2), and (a)(3) of this section shall be for three years.

"(B) During the first six months of grants made pursuant to subsections (a)(1), (a)(2), and (a)(3) of this section, an applicant shall engage exclusively in preservice activities. Such activities may include program design, materials development, staff recruitment and training, development of evaluation mechanisms and procedures, and the operation of programs to involve parents in the educational program and to enable parents and family members to assist in the education of limited English proficient children. This subparagraph may be waived by the Secretary if he determines that an applicant is prepared to successfully operate the proposed instructional program.

"(C) Upon reapplication, grants authorized under subsections (a)(1), (a)(2), and (a)(3) of this section shall be renewed for two additional years unless the Secretary determines that—

"(i) the applicant's program does not comply with the requirements set out in this title;

"(ii) the applicant's program has not made substantial progress in achieving the specific educational goals set out in the original application; or

"(iii) there is no longer a need for the applicant's program.

"(2) Grants made pursuant to subsections (a)(4) and (a)(5) shall be for three years.

"(3) Grants made pursuant to subsections (a)(6) and (a)(7) shall be for a period of one to three years.

"(e) An application for a grant authorized under subsections (a)(1), (a)(2), and (a)(3) of this section shall—

"(1) be developed in consultation with an advisory council, of which a majority shall be parents and other representatives of the children to be served in such programs, in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary;

"(2) be accompanied by documentation of such consultation and by the comments which the Council makes on the application;

"(3) contain assurances that, after the application has been approved, the applicant will provide for the continuing consultation with, and participation by, the committee of parents, teachers, and other interested individuals which shall be selected by and predominantly composed of parents of children participating in the program, and in the case of programs carried out in secondary schools, representatives of the secondary students to be served; and

"(4) include evidence that the State educational agency has been notified of the application and has been given the opportunity to offer recommendations thereon to the applicant and to the Secretary.

"(f) An application for a grant under subsections (a)(1) and (a)(2) of this section may be approved only if the Secretary determines—

"(1) that the program will use qualified personnel, including only those personnel who are proficient in the language or languages used for instruction;

"(2) that in designing the program for which application is made, the needs of the children in nonprofit private elementary and secondary schools have been taken into account through consultation with appropriate private school officials; and consistent with the number of such children enrolled in such schools in the area to be served whose educational needs are of the type and whose language and grade levels are of a similar type which the program is intended to address, after consultation with appropriate private school officials, provision has been made for the participation of such children on a basis comparable to that provided for public school children;

"(3) that the program will be evaluated in accordance with a plan that meets the requirements of section 733 of this title;

"(4) that Federal funds made available for the project or activity will be used so as to supplement the level of State and local funds that, in the absence of those Federal funds, would have been expended for special programs for children of limited English proficiency and in no case to supplant such State and local funds, except that nothing in this clause shall—

"(A) preclude a local education agency from using funds under this title for activities carried out under an order of a court of the United States or of any State respecting services to be provided such children, or to carry out a plan approved by the Secretary as adequate under title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 with respect to services to be provided such children, or

"(B) authorize any priority or preference to be assigned by the Secretary to the funding of the activities under this title;

"(5) that the assistance provided under the application will contribute toward building the capacity of the applicant to provide a program, similar to that proposed for assistance, on a regular basis which will be of sufficient size, scope, and quality to promise significant improvement in the education of children of limited English proficiency, and that the applicant will have the resources and commitment to continue the program when assistance under this title is reduced or no longer available;

"(6) that the applicant will provide or secure training for personnel participating, or preparing to participate, in the program and that, to the extent possible, college or university credit will be awarded for such training; and

"(7) that the provision of assistance proposed in the application is consistent with criteria established by the Secretary, after consultation with the State educational agency, for the purpose of achieving an equitable distribution of assistance under this part within the State in which the applicant is located, taking into consideration—

"(A) the geographic distribution of children of limited English proficiency,

"(B) the relative need of persons in different geographic areas within the State for the kinds of services and activities authorized under this title,

"(C) and with respect to grants to carry out programs described in subsections (a)(1), (a)(2), and (a)(3) of this section, the relative ability of particular local educational agencies within the State to provide such services and activities, and

"(D) with respect to such grants, the relative numbers of persons from low-income families sought to be benefited by such programs.

"(g) An application for a grant under subsection (a)(3) of this section may receive priority based upon the information provided by the applicant pursuant to clause (A), (B), or (C) of subsection (c)(3) of this section.

"(h) In the consideration of applications from local educational agencies to carry out programs authorized under this section, the Secretary shall give priority to applications from local educational agencies which are located in various geographical regions of the Nation and which propose to assist children of limited English proficiency who have historically been underserved by programs of bilingual education, taking into consideration the relative numbers of such children in the schools of such local educational agencies and the relative need for such programs. In approving such applications, the Secretary shall, to the extent feasible, allocate funds appropriated in proportion to the geographical distribution of children of limited English proficiency throughout the Nation, with due regard for the relative ability of particular local educational agencies to carry out such programs and the relative numbers of persons from low-income families sought to be benefited by such programs.

"(i) Programs authorized under this title in the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico may, notwithstanding any other provision of this title, include programs of instruction, teacher training, curriculum development, research, evaluation and testing designed to improve the English proficiency of children, and may also make provision for serving the needs of students of limited proficiency in Spanish.

"(j) If the Secretary determines that an applicant for assistance under this title is unable or unwilling to provide for the participation in the program for which assistance is sought of children of limited English proficiency enrolled in nonprofit, nonpublic schools, as required by subsection (f)(2) of this section, the Secretary shall—

"(1) withhold approval of such application until the applicant demonstrates that it is in compliance with those requirements; or

"(2) reduce the amount of the grant to such applicant by the amount which is required for the Secretary to arrange (such as through a contract with a nonprofit, nonsectarian agency, organization, or institution) to assess the needs of the children in the area to be served for programs of the type authorized in this title and to carry out such programs for the children.

"INDIAN CHILDREN IN SCHOOLS

"SEC. 722. (a) For the purpose of carrying out programs under this title for individuals served by elementary, secondary, or postsecondary schools operated predominantly for Indian or Alaskan Native children, an Indian tribe or a tribally sanctioned educational authority may be considered to be a local educational agency as such term is used in this title, subject to the following qualifications:

"(1) The term 'Indian tribe' means any Indian tribe, band, nation, or other organized group or community, including any Alaska Native village or regional or village corporation as defined in or established pursuant to the Alaskan Native Claims Settlement Act (85 Stat. 688) which is recognized for the special programs and services provided by the United States to Indians because of their status as Indians.

"(2) The term 'tribally sanctioned educational authority' means any department or division of education operating within the administrative structure of the duly constituted governing body of an Indian tribe, as well as any nonprofit institution or organization which is chartered by the governing body of an Indian tribe to operate any such school or otherwise to oversee delivery of educational services to members of that tribe and which is approved by the Secretary for the purposes of this section.

"(b) From the sums appropriated pursuant to section 702(b), the Secretary is authorized to make payments to the applicants to carry out programs of bilingual education for Indian children on reservations served by elementary and secondary schools operated or funded by the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

"(c) The Assistant Secretary of the Interior for the Bureau of Indian Affairs shall submit to the Congress, the President, and the Secretary by September 30 of each year an annual report which provides—

"(1) an assessment of the needs of the Indian children with respect to the purposes of this title in schools operated or funded by the Department of the Interior, including those tribes and local educational agencies receiving assistance under the Johnson-O'Malley Act (25 U.S.C. 452 et seq.); and

"(2) an assessment of the extent to which such needs are being met by funds provided to such schools for educational purposes through the Secretary of the Interior.

"PART B—DATA COLLECTION, EVALUATION, AND RESEARCH

"USE OF FUNDS

"SEC. 731. Funds available under this part shall be used for (1) collecting data on the number of limited English proficient persons and the educational services available to such persons, (2) evaluating the operation and effectiveness of programs assisted under this title, (3) conducting research to improve the effectiveness of bilingual education programs, and (4) collecting, analyzing, and disseminating data and information on bilingual education.

"GRANTS FOR STATE PROGRAMS

"SEC. 732. (a) Upon an application from a State educational agency, the Secretary shall make provision for the submission and approval of a State program for the collection, aggregation, analysis, and publication of data and information on the State's population of limited English proficient persons and the educational services provided or available to such persons.

"(b) State programs under this part shall provide for the annual submission of a report to the Secretary containing data and information on such matters as the Secretary shall, by regulation, determine necessary and proper to achieve the purposes of this title, including the matters specified in section 721(c)(2). Such reports shall be in such form and shall be submitted on such date as the Secretary shall specify by regulation. State programs shall provide for the dissemination of information regarding these matters to the public, and particularly to persons of limited English proficiency.

"(c) State programs authorized under this section may also provide for—

"(1) the planning and development of educational programs such as those assisted under this title;

"(2) the review and evaluation of programs of bilingual education, including bilingual education programs that are not funded under this title;

"(3) the provision, coordination, or supervision of technical and other forms of nonfinancial assistance to local educational agencies, community organizations, and private elementary and secondary schools that serve limited English proficient persons;

"(4) the development and administration of instruments and procedures for the assessment of the educational needs and competencies of persons of limited English proficiency;

"(5) the training of State and local educational agency staff to carry out the purposes of this title; and

"(6) other activities and services designed to build the capacity of State and local educational agencies to serve the educational needs of persons of limited English proficiency.

"(d) Except as provided in the second sentence of this subparagraph, the Secretary shall pay from the amounts appropriated for the purposes of this section pursuant to section 702(b)(2) for each fiscal year to each State educational agency which has a State program submitted and approved under subsection (a) of this section such sums as may be necessary for the proper and efficient conduct of such State program. The amount paid by the Secretary to any State educational agency under the preceding sentence for any fiscal year shall not be less than $50,000 nor greater than 5 percent of the aggregate of the amounts paid under section 721 for programs within such State in the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year to which this limitation applies.

"(e) Funds made available under this section for any fiscal year shall be used by the State educational agency to supplement and, to the extent practical, to increase the level of funds that would, in the absence of such funds, be made available by the State for the purposes described in this section, and in no case to supplant such funds.

"PROGRAM EVALUATION REQUIREMENTS

"SEC. 733. (a) The Secretary shall issue, within six months of the date of enactment of this section, regulations which set forth a comprehensive design for evaluating the programs assisted under part A of this title. Such regulations shall be developed by the Director in consultation with the National Advisory and Coordinating Council on Bilingual Education. Such regulations shall provide for the collection of information and data including—

"(1) the educational background, needs, and competencies of the limited English proficient persons served by the program;

"(2) the specific educational activities undertaken pursuant to the program; the pedagogical materials, methods, and techniques utilized in the program; and with respect to classroom activities, the relative amount of instructional time spent with students on specified tasks;

"(3) the educational and professional qualifications, including language competencies, of the staff responsible for planning and operating the program; and

"(4) the extent of educational progress achieved through the program measured, as appropriate, by (A) tests of academic achievement in English language arts, and where appropriate, second language arts; (B) tests of academic achievement in subject matter areas; and (C) changes in the rate of student grade-retention, dropout, absenteeism, referral to or placement in special education classes, placement in programs for the gifted and talented, and enrollment in postsecondary education institutions.

"EVALUATION ASSISTANCE CENTERS

"SEC. 734. The Secretary shall establish through competitive grants to institutions of higher education at least two evaluation assistance centers which shall provide, upon the request of State or local educational agencies, technical assistance regarding methods and techniques for identifying the educational needs and competencies of limited English proficient persons and assessing the educational progress achieved through programs such as those assisted under this title. Grants made pursuant to this section shall be for a period of three years.

"RESEARCH

"SEC. 735. (a) The Secretary shall, through competitive contracts under this section, provide financial assistance for research and development proposals submitted by institutions of higher education, private for-profit and nonprofit organizations, State and local educational agencies, and individuals.

"(b) Research activities authorized to be assisted under this section shall include—

"(1) studies to determine and evaluate effective models for bilingual education programs;

"(2) studies which examine the process by which individuals acquire a second language and master the subject matter skills required for grade-promotion and graduation, and which identify effective methods for teaching English and subject matter skills within the context of a bilingual education program or special alternative instructional program to students who have language proficiencies other than English;

"(3) longitudinal studies to measure the effect of this title on the education of students who have language proficiencies other than English, and the effect of this title on the capacity of local educational agencies to operate bilingual programs following the termination of assistance under this title;

"(4) studies to determine effective and reliable methods for identifying students who are entitled to services under this title and for determining when their English language proficiency is sufficiently well developed to permit them to derive optimal benefits from an all-English instructional program;

"(5) the operation of a clearinghouse which shall collect, analyze, and disseminate information about bilingual education and related programs;

"(6) studies to determine effective methods of teaching English to adults who have language proficiencies other than English;

"(7) studies to determine and evaluate effective methods of instruction for bilingual programs, taking into account language and cultural differences among students; and

"(8) studies to determine effective approaches to preservice and inservice training for teachers, taking into account the language and cultural differences of their students.

"(c) In carrying out his responsibilities under this section, the Secretary may delegate his authority to the Director, and in any event, shall consult with the Director, the National Advisory and Coordinating Council on Bilingual Education, representatives of State and local educational agencies, and appropriate groups and organizations involved in bilingual education.

"(d) The Secretary shall publish and disseminate all requests for proposals in research and development assisted under this title.

"COORDINATION OF RESEARCH

"SEC. 736. Notwithstanding section 405(b)(1) of the General Education Provisions Act, the Director of the National Institute of Education shall consult with the Director and the National Advisory and Coordinating Council on Bilingual Education to insure that research activities undertaken pursuant to section 405(b)(2)(C) of the General Education Provisions Act complement and do not duplicate the activities conducted pursuant to this part.

"EDUCATION STATISTICS

"Sec. 737. (a) Notwithstanding section 406 of the General Education Provisions Act, the National Center for Education Statistics shall collect and publish as part of its annual report on the condition of education data for States, Puerto Rico, and the Trust Territories with respect to the population of limited English proficient persons, the special educational services and programs available to limited English proficient persons, and the availability of educational personnel qualified to provide special educational services and programs to limited English proficient persons.

"(b) In carrying out its responsibilities under this section, the National Center for Education Statistics shall utilize, to the extent feasible, data submitted to the Department of Education by State and local educational agencies and institutions of higher education pursuant to the provisions of this title.

"PART C—TRAINING AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

"USE OF FUNDS

"SEC. 741. (a) Funds available under this part shall be used for—

"(1) the establishment, operation, and improvement of training programs for educational personnel preparing to participate in, or personnel participating in, the conduct of programs of bilingual education or special alternative instructional programs for limited English proficient students, which shall emphasize opportunities for career development, advancement, and lateral mobility, and may provide training to teachers, administrators, counselors, paraprofessionals, teacher aides, and parents;

"(2) the training of persons to teach and counsel such persons;

"(3) the encouragement of reform, innovation, and improvement in applicable education curricula in graduate education, in the structure of the academic profession, and in recruitment and retention of higher education and graduate school faculties, as related to bilingual education;

"(4) the operation of short-term training institutes designed to improve the skills of participants in programs of bilingual education or special alternative instructional programs for limited English proficient students; which may include summer programs designed to improve the instructional competence of educational personnel in the languages used in the program; and

"(5) the provision of inservice training and technical assistance to parents and educational personnel participating in, or preparing to participate in, bilingual education programs or special alternative instructional programs for limited English proficient students.

"(b)(1) A grant or contract may be made under subsection (a) (1), (2), or (3) of this section upon application of an institution of higher education.

"(2) A grant or contract may be made under subsection (a)(4) of this section upon application of (A) institutions of higher education (including junior colleges and community colleges) and private for-profit or nonprofit organizations which apply, after consultation with, or jointly with, one or more local educational agencies or a State educational agency; (B) local educational agencies; or (C) a State educational agency.

"(3) A grant or contract may be made under subsection (a)(5) of this section upon application of (A) institutions of higher education (including junior colleges and community colleges), (B) private for-profit or nonprofit organizations, or (C) a State educational agency.

"(c) An application for a grant or contract for preservice or inservice training activities described in subsection (a)(1) of this section shall be considered an application for a program of bilingual education for the purposes of section 721(e) of this title.

"(d) In making a grant or contract for preservice training programs described in subsection (a)(1) of this section, the Secretary shall give preference to programs which contain coursework in—

"(1) teaching English as a second language;

"(2) use of a non-English language for instructional purposes;

"(3) linguistics; and

and involving parents in the educational process. Preservice training programs shall be designed to ensure that participants become proficient in English and a second language of instruction.

"MULTIFUNCTIONAL RESOURCE CENTERS

"SEC. 742. (a) Pursuant to subsection (a)(5) of section 741, the Secretary shall establish through competitive grants or contracts at least 16 multifunctional resource centers (hereafter in this section referred to as 'centers'). Grants and contracts shall be awarded with consideration given to the geographic and linguistic distribution of children of limited English proficiency.

"(b) In addition to providing technical assistance and training to persons participating in or preparing to participate in bilingual education programs or special alternative instructional programs for limited English proficient students, each center shall be responsible for gathering and providing information to other centers on a particular area of bilingual education, including (but not limited to) bilingual special education, bilingual education for gifted and talented limited English proficient students, bilingual vocational education, bilingual adult education, bilingual education program administration, literacy, education technology in bilingual programs, mathematics and science education in bilingual programs, counseling limited English proficient students, and career education programs for limited English proficient students.

"FELLOWSHIPS

"SEC. 743. (a) Pursuant to subsection (a)(2) of section 741, the Secretary is authorized to award fellowships for advanced study of bilingual education or special alternative instructional programs for limited English proficient students in such areas as teacher training, program administration, research and evaluation, and curriculum development. For the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, not less than 500 fellowships leading to a graduate degree shall be awarded under the preceding sentence. Such fellowships shall be awarded, to the extent feasible, in proportion to the needs of various groups of individuals with limited English proficiency. In awarding fellowships, the Secretary shall give preference to individuals intending to study bilingual education or special alternative instructional programs for limited English proficient students in the following specialized areas: vocational education, adult education, gifted and talented education, special education, education technology, literacy, and mathematics and science education. The Secretary shall include information on the operation of the fellowship program in the report required under section 751(c) of this title.

"(b) The Secretary shall undertake an ongoing longitudinal study of the impact of recipients of such fellowships on the field of bilingual education and alternative instructional programs for students of limited English proficiency and shall, through the clearinghouse established pursuant to section 735(b)(5) of this title, disseminate research undertaken by recipients of such fellowships.

"(c) Any person receiving a fellowship under this section shall agree either to repay such assistance or to work for a period equivalent to the period of time during which such person received assistance, and such work shall be in an activity related to programs and activities such as those authorized under this Act. The Secretary may waive this requirement in extraordinary circumstances.

"PRIORITY

"SEC. 744. In making grants or contracts under this part, the Secretary shall give priority to eligible applicants with demonstrated competence and experience in programs and activities such as those authorized under this Act.

"STIPENDS

"SEC. 745. The Secretary shall include in the terms of any arrangement described in this part for the payment, to persons participating in training programs so described, of such stipends (including allowances for subsistence and other expenses for such persons and their dependents) as he may determine to be consistent with prevailing practices under comparable federally supported programs.

"PART D—ADMINISTRATION

"OFFICE OF BILINGUAL EDUCATION AND MINORITY LANGUAGES AFFAIRS

"SEC. 751. (a) There shall be, in the Department of Education, an Office of Bilingual Education and Minority Languages Affairs (hereafter in this section referred to as the 'Office') through which the Secretary shall carry out his functions relating to bilingual education.

"(b)(1) The Office shall be headed by a Director of Bilingual Education and Minority Languages Affairs, appointed by the Secretary, to whom the Secretary shall delegate all of his delegable functions relating to bilingual education. The Director shall also be assigned responsibility for coordinating the bilingual education aspects of other programs administered by the Secretary.

"(2) The Office shall be organized as the Director determines to be appropriate in order to enable him to carry out his functions and responsibilities effectively, except that there shall be a division, within the Office, which is exclusively responsible for the collection, aggregation, analysis, and publication of data and information on the operation and effectiveness of programs assisted under this title.

"(c) The Secretary, in consultation with the Council, shall prepare and, not later than February 1 of 1986, 1988, and 1990, shall submit to the Congress and the President a report on the condition of bilingual education in the nation and the administration and operation of this title and of other programs for persons of limited English proficiency. Such report shall include—

"(1) a national assessment of the educational needs of children and other persons with limited English proficiency and of the extent to which such needs are being met from Federal, State, and local efforts;

"(2) a plan, including cost estimates, to be carried out during the five-year period beginning on such date, for extending programs of bilingual education and bilingual vocational and adult education programs to all such preschool and elementary school children and other persons of limited English proficiency, including a phased plan for the training of the necessary teachers and other educational personnel necessary for such purpose;

"(3) a report on and evaluation of the activities carried out under this title during the preceding two fiscal years and the extent to which each of such activities achieves the policy set forth in section 702(a);

"(4) a statement of the activities intended to be carried out during the succeeding period, including an estimate of the cost of such activities;

"(5)(A) an assessment of the number of teachers and other educational personnel needed to carry out programs of bilingual education under this title and those carried out under other programs for persons of limited English proficiency;

"(B) a statement describing the activities carried out thereunder designed to prepare teachers and other educational personnel for such programs; and

"(C) the number of other educational personnel needed to carry out programs of bilingual education in the States; and

"(6) an estimate of the number of fellowships in the field of training teachers for bilingual education which will be necessary for the two succeeding fiscal years.

"(d) In order to maximize Federal efforts aimed at serving the educational needs of children of limited English proficiency, the Secretary shall coordinate and closely cooperate with other programs administered by the Department of Education, including such areas as teacher training, program content, research, and curriculum. The Secretary's report under subsection (c) shall include demonstration that such coordination has taken place.

"(e) The Secretary shall ensure that the Office of Bilingual Education and Minority Languages Affairs is staffed with sufficent personnel trained, or with experience in, bilingual education to discharge effectively the provisions of this title.

"NATIONAL ADVISORY AND COORDINATING COUNCIL ON BILINGUAL EDUCATION

"SEC. 752. (a) Subject to part D of the General Education Provisions Act, there shall be a National Advisory and Coordinating Council on Bilingual Education composed of twenty members appointed by the Secretary, one of whom he shall designate as Chairman. Members of the Council shall be persons experienced in dealing with the educational problems of children and other persons who are of limited English proficiency. Five members of the Council shall be State directors of bilingual education programs, at least three of whom shall represent States with large populations of limited English proficient students. Two members of the Council shall be experienced in research on bilingual education or evaluation of bilingual education programs. One member of the Council shall be experienced in research on methods of alternative instruction for language minority students or evaluation of alternative methods of instruction for such students. One member of the council shall be a classroom teacher of demonstrated teaching abilities using bilingual methods and techniques. One member of the Council shall be a classroom teacher of demonstrated teaching abilities using alternative instructional methods and techniques. One member of the Council shall be experienced in the training of teachers for programs of bilingual education. One member of the Council shall be experienced in the training of teachers for programs of alternative instruction. Two members of the Council shall be parents of students whose language is other than English, and one member of the Council shall be an officer of a professional organization representing bilingual education personnel. The members of the Council shall be appointed in such a way as to be generally representative of the significant segments of the population of persons of limited English proficiency and the geographic areas in which they reside. Subject to section 448(b) of the General Education Provisions Act, the Council shall continue to exist until October 1, 1989.

"(b) The Council shall meet at the call of the Chairman, but, notwithstanding the provisions of section 446(a) of the General Education Provisions Act, not less often than four times in each year.

"(c) The Council shall advise the Secretary in the preparation of general regulations and with respect to policy matters arising in the administration and operation of this title, including the development of criteria for approval of applications and plans under this title, and the administration and operation of other programs for persons of limited English proficiency. The Council shall prepare and, not later than March 31 of each year, submit a report to the Congress and the President on the condition of bilingual education in the Nation and on the administration and operation of this title, including those items specified in section 751(c), and the administration and operation of other programs for persons of limited English proficiency.

"(d) The Secretary shall procure temporary and intermittent services of such personnel as are necessary for the conduct of the functions of the Council, in accordance with section 445, of the General Education Provisions Act, and shall make available to the Council such staff, information, and other assistance as it may require to carry out its activities effectively.".

AMENDMENTS OFFERED BY MR. ERLENBORN

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, I offer two amendments to title II, and I ask unanimous consent that they be considered en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. ERLENBORN: Page 6, line 11, insert after the period the following new sentences: "Such programs are not for students whose usual or dominant language is English. Such programs may utilize the child's existing non-English language as the language of instruction in various subjects but are not to teach non-English languages as a subject.".

Page 9, line 9, insert "whose dominant language is a language other than English" after "secondary schools".

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, the sole purpose of these two amendments, which I offer en bloc, is to ensure that bilingual education is focused on those language minority students most in need of special transitional language services—not on those whose usual language already is English.

My first amendment would add to the definition of a program of transitional bilingual education designed for children of limited English proficiency the following words: "whose dominant language is a language other than English."

My second amendment—and, as I said, I am offering them en bloc—my second amendment would add language to the declaration of policy making it clear that the Congress does not intend transitional bilingual education programs to be used for students whose usual or dominant language is English.

I believe this restoration of the original purpose of the program is necessary for two reasons: One, research has shown that approximately two-thirds of the students meeting the definition of program eligibility contained in H.R. 11 speak English as their major language. Two, the rationale provided by this committee to support reauthorization of the Emergency Immigration Reauthorization Act, as well as projections for future growth in the number of limited English proficient students, point up the need to make sure that Federal assistance for teaching the English language is targeted on persons who are in fact limited English proficient and not on those who already know the language.

Mr. Chairman, I could cite a number of studies that have found that more than one-half the students in certain bilingual classes were predominately English speaking. The Department of Education's Inspector General, for example, reported that in one Texas school district 91 percent of the students were English speaking.

The children who customarily speak English still may need instruction that takes into account their language difficulties, but they usually have less need for immediate services than children who speak little or no English at all. I believe we should focus our support where it is needed most. My amendments would do that. I urge my colleagues to support the very sensible proposition that we give priority to helping those who most need the help.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this has been discussed many times before, the concept being those who would qualify for bilingual education. In every instance it has been rejected and I will tell you why.

I think the limited English proficiency has borne the test of time. It has been used well by those who have delivered the bilingual services. Those who have been receiving bilingual services. I think they have been better served by that.

Let me tell the gentleman that when we use the language he suggests, "whose dominant language is other than English," that is rather vague. Having taught school for a number of years and having taught students who at that time needed bilingual education, but which was not being provided either by the State of Michigan or funded by the Government of the United States, I found it difficult to determine in students what the dominant language was. Their language on the street might be one language. Indeed, their language in the classroom might be another language. Their language in the hall could be another language and then you might even find the language at home to be another language. It would be difficult to determine under the gentleman's definition then what their dominant language was; but in every instance these students did have limited English proficiency and they benefited, I know, when bilingual education finally came in, benefited by using that definition, rather than the definition the gentleman would use.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDEE. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, I can understand the gentleman's concern. You cannot with very great definition determine who is better than 50 percent proficient in English, let us say, and there certainly are going to be those gray areas in the middle.

The whole purpose of my amendment is not to be that specific and say we are going to have a cutoff point here. It is rather to say if we have children who are proficient in English, even though not totally proficient, it is better that the funds not be used for that group of students and rather that we use the limited funds for a group of students who obviously cannot converse or learn or cannot understand English.

It is to just set priorities, and I think the gentleman would agree with me that if in a school you can only serve a portion of those whose dominant language may be other than English, that the funds be used for those who cannot learn in the English-speaking classes rather than to take those who are already fairly proficient in English and put them into a Spanish or other than English class.

Rather, they should be in some sort of a class that would improve the English proficiency that they already have.

So it is merely a matter of setting priorities and seeing that the limited funds go to those most in need.

Mr. KILDEE. I think it goes beyond setting priorities. It is changing, really, the thrust of the bilingual program that has worked well.

Having taught before bilingual education, and having visited bilingual schools now, I know that using that LEP definition, limited English proficiency, has worked well and I think it is more than just setting priorities. It is changing the thrust of bilingual education and I would oppose the amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words and I rise in opposition to the gentleman's amendment.

I have a great deal of respect for, and I work with, the gentleman from Illinois. He is the ranking member of my committee and we have worked together on every bill including this one.

But I must oppose this amendment because I think that the amendment is both unnecessary and exceedingly cumbersome for school districts.

In the first place, in terms of being unnecessary, I do not know of what school district the gentleman or the school the gentleman referred to, but I have some knowledge of Texas schools. In Texas, schools use bilingual education primarily with local funding, primarily State and school district funding, and they use bilingual education to assist students in the acquisition of English proficiency. So I do not know of any Texas schools that are using either local funding or Federal funding for predominantly English-speaking students.

I think this amendment would take away the flexibility that we all seek to give to school districts and to parents. The fact is that school districts ought to be encouraged to design new types of curriculum that would find new ways of teaching limited English proficient students. Some school districts may design a curriculum that would involve, with the parents' consent, some small portion of that classroom or some portion of the school day, in fact, with a period in which the limited English proficient students and the English-speaking students would be in the same classroom taking the same course subject and doing very well at it.

In addition to that, I would suggest that there are parents, and there are increasing numbers of parents in Texas, who may well choose bilingual education for their children for various reasons. Many of these parents may have children who already speak English and are proficient in English. I do not think the Federal Government should be in the role of prohibiting those parents from choosing that curriculum for those students.

I think one of the reasons a parent might well choose bilingual education for an English-speaking student, and this is not a very large number, is the value to those students of being multilingual, of being bilingual. In fact, immersion does work and a bilingual program for English-speaking students is one form of immersion and it would work both ways.

I do think that there are problems with definitions. I think that any time we cavalierly add some new Federal regulation as to which student's usual or dominant language is English, I think we do have severe problems with definitions.

So I would oppose the amendment, although I support my friend. I would oppose the amendment because of the need to keep that flexibility for school districts, recognizing that 90 percent of the money, perhaps 95 or 99 percent of the money is local school district money and State money, and they should be allowed to design their own curriculum.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I am happy to yield.

Mr. ERLENBORN. I want to thank the gentleman for yielding and say my colleague from Texas is most persuasive. I like the rhetoric that I hear from him about giving the most flexibility to local school districts. I am just sorry the gentleman did not have that in mind in committee when he voted against my amendment that would have given total flexibility to the school districts to utilize the bilingual teaching methods of their choice rather than having them dictated from Washington.

Mr. BARTLETT. Reclaiming my time. I appreciate the gentleman's point because in fact this bill puts into Federal law flexibility in curriculum for the first time in the history of bilingual education. As the gentleman knows, I advocated that flexibility at the subcommittee hearings, at the subcommittee markup, and at the full committee markup, and was able to achieve a compromise which provides for flexibility for school districts. They may choose and design alternative instruction for the first time in the history of bilingual education.

We disagree about how much money would be spent on it, but it legitimizes alternative instruction and flexibility which is important.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ERLENBORN. I will not further pursue that with the gentleman. As he knows, I do not believe that giving a small percentage of only that additional money that might be appropriated over the current level, I do not believe that is sufficient. But let me go to another element.

I heard the gentleman talking about parental discretion as well, and I hope that the gentleman and expect that he probably will support the next amendment that I offer that will provide that the schools not place children in these bilingual education programs without the permission of the parents. I think the parents ought to have a say in this.

Mr. BARTLETT. Reclaiming my time, I believe not only should parents have a say in the curriculum that is given to them in their classroom but parents in fact, in Texas and in most of the States, do have a say in that curriculum.

I do have and will offer a clarifying amendment to the gentleman's amendment. But I do support the intent of the gentleman's amendment on parental discretion.

Again, I would not impose new burdens on the school districts, but I would seek to achieve flexibility.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ERLENBORN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ERLENBORN) there were—ayes 4, noes 10.

So the amendments were rejected.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. ERLENBORN

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Amendment offered by Mr. ERLENBORN: Page 20, after line 25, insert the following new subparagraph:

"(D) Parents or legal guardians of students identified for enrollment in bilingual education programs shall be informed of (i) the reasons for the selection of their child as in need of bilingual education, (ii) what alternative educational programs are available, and (iii) the nature of the bilingual education program and of the instructional alternatives. Before any student may be enrolled in any bilingual education program funded under this title, the school shall request and receive parental approval for any such enrollment.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, I realize that the last amendments I offered were highly controversial and that caused the outpouring of Members on the floor so that we had that division of 10 against and 4 in favor. But I think that the amendment I am now offering will probably calm the waters and I think will be acceptable, I think it should be acceptable to everyone.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer an amendment to allow parents to decide whether their children should participate in a program of bilingual education.

H.R. 11, current law and regulations permit the schools to place children into bilingual programs without consulting with the students' parents. This amendment would require the school to obtain parental permission before enrolling students in a bilingual education program.

Some parents want bilingual education for their children, others do not. As the Washington Post pointed out in April, large numbers of Mexican-American parents living along the Mexican border in Texas are unhappy with bilingual education. They want their children taught in English. Parents must be given a voice, and a major voice, in any decision that so affects their child's future. Parents should have the opportunity to decide whether or not they want their children in a bilingual education program.

Too few Federal bilingual programs now involve parents in this decision. In a study of 60 bilingual programs, it was reported that only 37 of the projects involved parents in the decision to any degree.[1] And far too often the parental involvement is only an opportunity to exercise a veto over the school's decision. Real parental involvement, which this amendment would provide, requires the school to present the parent with the choice, and then let the parent decide.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BARTLETT TO THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. ERLENBORN

Mr. BARTLETT. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BARTLETT to the amendment offered by Mr. ERLENBORN: In the matter proposed to be inserted by the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, strike out the last sentence and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Parents shall also be informed that they have the option of declining enrollment of their children in such programs and shall be given an opportunity to do so if they so choose.".

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I believe this amendment to the amendment clarifies the intent of the gentleman's amendment. It is the gentleman's intent, and I support that intent, to support parental rights: To give parents the choice of the curriculum for their children.

I would note that many, and so far as I know all school districts, at least all of them in Texas, are already doing this. Schools already informing parents of their children's participation in bilingual education, and giving them the right to withdraw.

I would submit the way the amendment is now drafted it is entirely too cumbersome. The amendment would impose a new Federal law or Federal regulation that would tell school districts precisely how much consent they have to get. It would lead to a whole new set of Federal regulations to require that positive assent.

Mr. Chairman, school districts are already doing this. I have visited with a number of them in Texas. In fact, I brought to the House floor a copy of notification of English as a second language program entry form from K through 12, from the Dallas Independent School District. This is not unique to DISD, it is widespread, in California, Michigan, Texas, Arizona, and other States.

I would like to submit to the House this parental consent form, which is sent home to every student where English is the second language and also bilingual education, the opening day of class.

It says:

DALLAS INDEPENDENT SCHOOL DISTRICT,
Dallas, TX, October 14, 1983.

NOTIFICATION OF ENGLISH AS A SECOND LANGUAGE PROGRAM ENTRY—K–12

Date ————, 19——

DEAR PARENT OR GUARDIAN: The Dallas Independent School District is committed to provide a program of instruction for students who are not proficient in English and would have difficulty with their schoolwork. The English as a Second Language (ESL) Program has been developed to give such students help in speaking, reading and writing English. It is a pleasure to inform you that —— will be receiving ESL instruction. In addition to ESL, your son/daughter is also receiving instruction in the regular English curriculum depending on the level of English proficiency.

If you have any questions, I will be happy to meet with you.

Sincerely,

LINUS WRIGHT,
General Superintendent.

The last is the key sentence that would be made possible by my amendment to the gentleman's amendment: "Parental consent shall be assumed if the letter is not returned to this school."

I do think we should give schools some flexibility in sending out the parental consent form and not require some new burden.

I do support the intent. I think this amendment to the amendment accomplishes that.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I would be happy to yield.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Let me first ask the gentleman, and this is a serious question, is this letter of which I have a copy, the one you just read, is this sent to the parents in this English form only or do they send it in Spanish?

Mr. BARTLETT. Reclaiming my time, I am glad the gentleman asked. I also have a copy of that form in Spanish and in Vietnamese. My Spanish is a little rusty so I did not try to read it in Spanish to the House, and my Vietnamese is nonexistent. It is sent in the child's native language.

Mr. ERLENBORN. My first reading of your amendment led me to believe that I would support it. I did not notice that you were striking out the last sentence of my amendment.

The very definitive difference we have between the gentleman's approach and mine could probably be illustrated in one of two ways. First, we have had in the past in some of our schools student activity fees program where at one time Ralph Nader and his supporters in the universities were able to have support for some of his activities included as student fees, and a checkoff system.

So they would take the money from the student's fees that he paid to the university unless the student affirmatively signed a statement saying he did not want Ralph Nader to get the money.

I really never saw that as a very fair way of approaching that sort of situation. An automatic checkoff, many students were not aware of it, or forget to exercise their rights to not have their student fees sent to Ralph Nader. This has that same sort of aspect to it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Reclaiming my time, I understand the gentleman's concern but I do not approach bilingual education as some sort of a malevolent fee that goes to Ralph Nader or is in any way comparable.

The fact is parents in this country are universally concerned with the education of their children, particularly parents whose native language is not English.

In all the schools using this, the schools have a very high rate of return, and they do have parents come and ask that their student child is taken out of the program.

I think it works well. I think the gentleman's amendment to require that positive assent in fact would in many circumstances be too cumbersome to carry out.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

(On request of Mr. ERLENBORN and by unanimous consent, Mr. BARTLETT was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ERLENBORN. I thank the gentleman.

What bothers me about this, Mr. Chairman, is that it does take the other tack, that the school officials know best and that the school officials may make a decision wholly without consultation with the parents, then give the parents merely a veto.

Now the approach in my amendment is to say that this is too serious a decision to be taken in a vacuum, apart from parental consent, parental involvement. Mere inaction on the part of the parent here after a decision has already been made without consultation, would enroll the student.

I think the parents should be brought in in consultation and should participate in the decisionmaking.

Mr. BARTLETT. Reclaiming my time, I would make two points in rebuttal: No. 1, in fact the first part of gentleman's amendment is intact and it is a good amendment insofar as it goes. The first part states that the parents be informed of the reasons for the selection of their child, what alternative educational programs are available, the nature of bilingual education program and the instructional alternatives.

So there is preconsultation because the gentleman's amendment is intact. That is point No. 1. The gentleman's amendment with my amendment does require consultation.

No. 2, I suppose, is that I do believe that it is an amendment that would be agreed to by at least this cosponsor of the bilingual bill and I believe by the other side as well, with this amendment.

So if parental consent is what the gentleman is after, as we are all, I would think it would be a good way to achieve it by accepting this amendment.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Just one very quick observation, if the gentleman will yield: The gentleman's amendment combined with mine does not really involve any discussions with the parent, any joint decisionmaking.

The decision can be made by the school and then they merely send out a form advising them, "This is what we intend to do, these are some alternatives and then if you do not take action, your student is going to be enrolled."

It does not really involve consultation, merely information. Mine would require consultation.

Mr. BARTLETT. Whatever consultation is in the gentleman from Illinois' amendment, my amendment has exactly the same language.

Mr. MARTIN of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARTIN of New York. The gentleman from Texas I understand what he is trying to do is to remove some of the burden and paperwork on the local school district, in some instances perhaps having to chase down parents or guardians to get this affirmative input from them.

But let me ask the gentleman as a practical matter, under your amendment, if for whatever reason the parent or guardian did not respond or did not get the mail or did not understand, and some time after that found out that perhaps they did not want their child in this program, is there anything on earth to prohibit them from saying so?

Mr. BARTLETT. I appreciate the gentleman's question. My amendment is specific. It says the parents shall be informed that they have the option of choosing enrollment of their children in such programs and given an opportunity to do so if they choose so. There is no time limit on it. The parents simply have the option.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. BARTLETT was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. BARTLETT. Federal law states very clearly a concept that we sometimes fail to enforce here in either Congress or sometimes in school districts. This one enforces it.

Federal law states: "Parents have the primary responsibility for the education of their children."

I believe that my amendment, combined with the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, would accomplish that.

There is no time limit in answer to the gentleman's question.

Mr. MARTIN of New York. What we are trying to do, I am sure, is make sure that the parent has the maximum input, that if there were such a situation perhaps that they would change their mind during the course of a semester. There is nothing to keep them from coming in and raising the objection and then the child would no longer be objecting to this.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman is correct. My amendment states very clearly that the parents have the option, and that is the key word, the option.

Mr. MARTIN of New York. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words and rise in support of the amendment to the amendment and in opposition to the original amendment.

Mr. Chairman, title VII, like chapter 1, like migrant education and all other Federal programs, does not confer upon parents the right to determine whether their children shall be in, say, chapter 1 or not.

But, however, it does not preclude school officials from giving parents such a choice.

That is the case in most instances where bilingual education is being offered. I know in California the parents are given that option. In Texas, New York, Illinois, Connecticut, and Florida.

But I do think that since the Federal Government now is trying to get involved in how this option shall be exercised rather than leaving it exclusively up to the States, as is the case now under present law, that I think the Bartlett amendment does make the gentleman's amendment better.

I would be willing to accept the Bartlett amendment.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDEE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ERLENBORN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

As the gentleman well knows under the handicapped law, the Federal handicapped program, we require that the handicapped be given the full educational opportunity. We also require that before a program is undertaken that a program be designed, put in writing, and that there be consultation with the parents.

Now, I do not see why the parents of the predominantly Spanish speaking should be treated any more shabbily than the parents of the handicapped. I think they should also be taken into consultation, should have an opportunity to sit down with the school officials and find out what this program is and to exercise some discretion.

But it seems to me you have a double standard here. You say the handicapped, you are going to consult the parents, but those who are handicapped, not physically, but because they do not happen to speak English as well, are not going to be treated quite the same, you are merely going to give them an opportunity to veto, if they understand the chance that they have to veto.

Mr. KILDEE. If I may say, I do not think they should be treated shabbily at all and I do recall I fought 3 years ago to keep the parental advisory committee in for chapter 1. But the gentleman did not support me on that. I wish the gentleman had supported me on that.

As a matter of fact, let me tell the gentleman from Illinois, that in most cases parents are involved. Bilingual education in Michigan involves the parents to a great degree. I think this is the case in most areas. It is a chance where you can bring the parents into the school probably more than any other program.

But I do wish the gentleman had supported me on chapter 1.

Mr. ERLENBORN. If the gentleman would yield further. I could not support the gentleman on that because I think the parents are too important to turn over to some committee, some advisory committee, the rights that each parent should exercise over their own children.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I would hope that we would adopt the Bartlett admendment to the Erlenborn amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ERLENBORN].

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. BARTLETT) there were—ayes 14, noes 4.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ERLENBORN], as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on all amendments to the bill and on the bill close at 6:30.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will advise the gentleman that the entire bill has not been open to amendment as yet. Only title II has been designated for amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be open to amendment at any point, and that all debate on all amendments that are offered close at 6:30.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the first part of the request of the gentleman from Kentucky that the entire bill be open to amendment at any point?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, does this protect the right of the gentleman to offer a new title at the end of the bill? I believe the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] and others may have amendments that may go on past 6:30.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. PERKINS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

It would, as I understand, yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. With those rights to offer amendments, would those amendments be offered after 6:30, that is, tomorrow, or between now and 6:30?

Mr. PERKINS. They would be offered after 6:30 immediately. And then they would be voted on.

Mr. BARTLETT. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ERLENBORN].

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, let me suggest to my committee chairman that I do not think anyone has been dilatory. We have been moving along rather rapidly. We are still on the first title that we have taken under consideration. We have been on it much less than an hour, and that probably was the most controversial.

I do not believe Members would have anticipated debate being cut off on this bill, and probably amendments have not been printed in the RECORD.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my unanimous-consent request. I wanted to accommodate some of my friends on that side.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. KILDEE

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Amendment offered by Mr. KILDEE: On page 22, line 4, strike "and (a)(2)" and insert in lieu thereof ", (a)(2), and (a)(3)".

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is technical in nature and would clarify that grants for programs of special alternative instructions authorized under section 721(a)(3) are subject to the same general requirements, including the evaluation requirements, applicable to transitional bilingual and developmental bilingual programs. The minority has seen the amendment and I am aware of no objections.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words and I rise in support of the amendment.

These are technical amendments and I do support the amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to engage my colleague from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE] in a very brief colloquy to clarify a technical point.

I would like to clarify that the 10-percent set-aside for special alternative programs is to be available for all the programs in the bill including those of demonstrated effectiveness such as authorized under section 721(a)(4).

Does the gentleman agree this is the intent?

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCAIN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. KILDEE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Yes, this is clearly the intent.

Mr. McCAIN. I thank my colleague.

I would just like to make a few remarks concerning title II of the bill that we are now considering.

The bill is a product of long hours of negotiations and compromise. Local curriculum flexibility in federally funded bilingual education programs is allowed for the first time by this legislation. I believe this is a vital concept which should be instituted in this bill.

As my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] has stated, this authority has mandated a specific form of instruction in the past. Transitional bilingual education calls for instruction in a student's native language and is not always workable, practical, or possible.

However, as a result of this agreement, funds have been set aside for alternative programs of instruction. Local school boards will be able to determine the best form of instruction for their areas.

For instance, in my district there is one school that has students whose native language is Spanish, others who speak English and others who are Yaqui Indians. A strict form of transitional bilingual education under this school system would not be possible. It would be even more difficult to make transitional bilingual education work in a large urban area with students from Vietnam, Cambodia, Central America, and other parts of the world. It would be next to impossible to find instructors to teach in all of the languages and dialects that are available.

In rural areas or parts of the country with a small language minority population, transitional bilingual education would also be unworkable.

Finally, a number of school districts have not been pleased with transitional bilingual education and have wanted to try something different. This title of H.R. 11 would allow those districts to implement bilingual education programs and to meet their individual community's needs.

For those Members who doubt the goals of this program, I want to point out once again that this legislation recognizes that the goal of bilingual education is to teach students English. Unfortunately, some groups have raised the unfounded concern that bilingual education will institute and perpetuate a two-language system. Nothing could be further from the truth. We must teach all students English without destroying their ethnic heritage and we must make sure that limited-English-proficient students are not left behind their English-speaking peers.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCAIN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GOODLING. I am happy to hear the comments that the gentleman just made, because I was going to offer an amendment because I felt there was apparently an omission in the bill, because in our discussion, and as we put the bill together in committee, I am sure that we said that of the several grant programs authorized by title II of this bill, they would be grants for academic excellence programs, and we did not tie them down to any one way to bring about excellence in those programs. If they are excellent programs using various methods, we would then give grants for that purpose. And I hope that everybody understands on both sides of the aisle that that is what was meant as a matter of fact, and I would be very happy to hear the gentleman from Michigan comment on that statement.

Mr. McCAIN. Reclaiming my time, I appreciate the comments of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I guess it might be helpful if there were any further comments of the gentleman from Michigan as to his agreement as to the intent of this legislation.

I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE].

Mr. KILDEE. Will the gentleman just briefly rephrase his question? I was occupied with someone else at the time.

Mr. McCAIN. The programs of academic excellence will be eligible for the funds set aside for special alternative programs. That was not clear in the way the legislation is presently written.

Mr. KILDEE. That is my intent.

Mr. McCAIN. Beyond transitional programs.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I only do so because now I am not quite sure whether I should be offering this amendment or not.

Let me make my statement, and then I will determine whether I should offer an amendment or not.

As I understood it, when this bill left our committee the several grant programs authorized in title II of this bill would include grants for academic excellence programs. These grants are designed to help identify, strengthen and disseminate exemplary programs as models for other developing programs.

The definition of "programs of academic excellence" in the bill mentioned programs of transitional bilingual education and developmental bilingual education but failed to include special alternative instructional programs. It is my understanding that this is an omission, it was an oversight. If I offered an amendment, my amendment would merely permit alternative instructional programs to be also considered as candidates for model demonstration programs. These are model demonstration programs. We certainly do not want to limit them to only one or two methods of instruction, I would think, at least that is not what I understood when it left the committee.

Mr. KILDEE. What I would prefer to do at this point, if that problem does indeed exist, I will be happy to work with the gentleman and Mr. McCAIN in conference to resolve that problem, and I will give the gentleman my commitment on that.

Mr. GOODLING. Well, there is no question the way the bill is written at the present time, with that omission, you clearly say that only bilingual education programs with established records of providing effective academically excellent programs are eligible for the fourth class of grants, academically excellent programs.

Here you very definitely say that it is transitional and developmental bilingual education. That is not what I understood——

Mr. KILDEE. You want to include the new 10-percent——

Mr. GOODLING. I want to include alternative programs.

Mr. KILDEE. Yes. I again would be willing to work that language out with the gentleman in the conference committee.

Mr. GOODLING. Does the gentleman object to my offering this particular amendment at this time?

Mr. KILDEE. I do not have a copy.

Mr. GOODLING. As I said, we really should clarify this now because the understanding when it left committee was that you are talking about exemplary programs.

Mr. KILDEE. If you have your language ready to achieve that, let me take a look at the language here.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODLING. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BARTLETT. As I heard the colloquy by Mr. McCAIN and Mr. KILDEE and as I heard Mr. GOODLING's statement, and my own feelings as one of the sponsors of this, I believe that we are all saying the same thing, that we concur.

Mr. KILDEE. Having looked at your language here, I find the amendment acceptable.

Mr. GOODLING. Then I will offer that amendment.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. GOODLING

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOODLING: Page 12, line 18, strike out "or" and insert in lieu thereof a comma, and on line 19, insert ", or special alternative instruction" after "education".

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I already gave my argument for this amendment. Would the other side like to at this time say that it is an acceptable amendment?

Mr. KILDEE. Yes. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I still keep my word of acceptance on that, yes.

Mr. GOODLING. We are very happy to accept this amendment on this side of the aisle.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to title II? If not, the Clerk will designate title III.

The text of title III is as follows:

TITLE III—AMENDMENTS TO FEDERAL IMPACT AID LAWS

GENERAL EXTENSIONS OF AUTHORIZATIONS

SEC. 301. (a)(1) The Act of September 30, 1950 (Public Law 874, Eighty-first Congress; 20 U.S.C. 236) is amended by striking out "October 1, 1983" each place it appears in sections 2(a), 3(b), 4(a), and 7(a)(1) and inserting in lieu thereof "October 1, 1989".

(2) Section 3(d)(2)(E) of such Act is amended—

(A) by striking out "fiscal year 1983 or 1984" in division (ii) and inserting in lieu thereof "any of the fiscal years 1983 through 1989"; and

(B) by striking out division (iii).

(3) The Omnibus Education Reconciliation Act of 1981 is amended—

(A) by striking out section 504;

(B) by striking out subsections (a) and (b) of section 505 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 505. (a) Of the amount appropriated to make payments under the Act of September 30, 1950 (Public Law 874, 81st Congress) for any fiscal year, $21,000,000 shall be available for payments under section 2 of such Act."; and

(C) by redesignating subsections (c)(1), (2), and (3) as subsections (b), (c), and (d), respectively.

(b) The Act of September 23, 1950 (Public Law 815, Eighty-first Congress; 20 U.S.C. 631) is amended—

(1) by striking out "September 30, 1983" in section 3 and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1989"; and

(2) by striking out "October 1, 1983" in section 16(a)(1)(A) and inserting in lieu thereof "October 1, 1989".

COLLECTION OF OVERPAYMENTS

SEC. 302. In the case of any local educational agency which the Secretary of Education determines has received, for any fiscal year after fiscal year 1976, an overpayment under section 2 of the Act of September 30, 1950 (20 U.S.C. 237) as a consequence of a recomputation of need based on revised data, the Secretary shall not require more than 10 percent of the amount of the overpayment to be repaid (or deducted from current payments) in any fiscal year.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there amendments to title III?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FORD OF MICHIGAN

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FORD of Michigan: Page 49, after line 19 insert the following new section:

AMENDMENTS TO IMPACT AID PROGRAM

SEC. 303. (a)(1) Section 3(d)(2)(B) of the Act of September 30, 1950 (Public Law 874, Eighty-first Congress) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new sentence: "In carrying out the provisions of this subparagraph, the Secretary shall not prorate the amounts computed under this subparagraph attributable to the number of children determined under subsection (a) or (b), or both.".

(2)(A) The second sentence of section 3(d)(2)(B) of such Act is amended by striking out "The" and inserting in lieu thereof "Subject to the provisions of subsection (h) of this section, the".

(B) Section 3 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"SPECIAL PROVISIONS

"(h) Any local educational agency for which the boundaries of the school district of such agency are coterminous with the boundaries of a military installation and which is not eligible to receive payments under subsection (d)(2)(B) shall receive 100 percent of the amounts to which such agency is entitled under subsection (a) of this section.".

(b)(1) The last two sentences of section 5(c) of the Act of September 30, 1950 (Public Law 874, Eighty-first Congress) (as added by section 23 of Public Law 98-211 (97 Stat. 1419)) are redesignated as subsection (h) of section 5 of that Act.

(2) The amendment made by paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be effective December 8, 1983.

Mr. FORD of Michigan (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, this amendment deals with three specific situations in the impact aid program which require legislative remedy. The amendment ensures that payments made under section 3(d)2(B) of the statute will not be prorated and provides no less than 100 percent of entitlement for "A" students for districts which are coterminous with military installations.

The so-called 3(d)2(B) districts are those where the Federal impact is so great that even after using all available sources of funds the local educational agency still cannot provide an adequate level of education. Specifically, section 3(d)2(B) provides that if a local education agency: First, has 50-percent enrollment of federally connected students; second, cannot provide a level of education equivalent to that of comparable districts in the State using its impact aid funds plus State and local revenues; third, is making a reasonable tax effort; and, fourth, is being treated no less favorably than any other district in the State with respect to State aid, then the Secretary of Education shall increase the district's impact aid funds to the extent necessary to enable it to provide a level of education equivalent to other comparable districts. There were 12 school districts that received 3(d)2(B) payments in fiscal year 1983. There have only been a handful of school districts that have consistently received 3(d)2(B) payments including Bellevue, NE; Fort Leavenworth, KS; and Douglas, SD. The amendment provides that the payments to these extremely needy districts will not be prorated.

Similarly, the amendment provides that school districts which are coterminous with military installations will receive 100 percent of their entitlement for their "A" students. Since there is no local tax base at all, these districts are also extremely reliant on impact aid funds to sustain quality education. This provision will affect six school districts: three in Texas, two in Arizona, and one in Kansas.

Finally, this amendment places a provision enacted last year for the State of Hawaii as part of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act technical amendments in a separate section of the law. Since the Hawaii provision was attached to a section of Public Law 874 that appropriations language usually waives, this amendment places the Hawaii provision in its own section to ensure that it is not inadvertently waived.

This amendment is identical to provisions included in the legislation in the other body to extend the impact aid program, and it has been endorsed by the National School Boards Association, the National Education Association, the American Association of School Administrators, and the National Association of Federally Impacted Schools.

This amendment clearly stands on its own merits and, in addition, its inclusion in H.R. 11 will facilitate a conference with the Senate.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

As I understand these amendments, there is no increase in cost?

Mr. FORD of Michigan. No; there is a reallocation of funds with the Hawaiian amendment, but it does not add any authorization.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, we accept those amendments on this side.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Hawaii.

Mr. AKAKA. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I want to especially thank the gentleman for his efforts here.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 11, the Education Amendments of 1984. At the end of this fiscal year, the authorization for 11 major Federal education programs is set to expire. H.R. 11 extends the statutory authority for these programs to allow for their continued operations.

As a former educator in Hawaii's public school system, I believe it is extremely important that the House pass H.R. 11, thereby maintaining the Federal role and assistance provided to State and local school districts in important areas such as impact aid, adult education, and women's equity. Category B under the impact aid program, adult education and the women's equity programs, for example, will expire by the end of this fiscal year. Other sections of the impact aid program are scheduled for expiration by fiscal year 1985.

Impact aid is essential to the State of Hawaii. It is a program which helps compensate the State's public school system for educating Hawaii's share of federally connected children. I am especially concerned over the elimination of category B of the impact aid program, and the effect this phaseout will have on military parents and their children.

In Hawaii, many people in the military do not live in base facilities. Because of the limited supply of on-base housing, military personnel have no choice but to rely upon off-base housing. Military families living off-base usually find housing in areas close to the facility to which they are assigned, and in most instances, they send their children to the public schools within that vicinity. The elimination of category B will remove this classification; namely, children of parents in the armed services living off base, from recognition under the impact aid program.

The State of Hawaii has a high concentration of military-connected students. This is attributable to our country's significant defense activity in the Pacific. For example, the Commander-in-Chief Pacific [CINCPAC], the command for all U.S. forces in the Pacific, the Far East, and Southeast Asia, is headquartered on the island of Oahu. My State also has the largest permanent military establishment in the entire Pacific region.

The Congress must not overlook the problems or needs of military families in my State and in other parts of our country. Military parents, like all parents, want the very best in education for their children. One major difference, however, is that military personnel are constantly subject to reassignments and changes in duty stations. While Hawaii would apparently be an ideal duty station, many military parents are troubled that basic needs such as housing and education are not being satisfactorily met.

The Hawaii public school system like other impact aid eligible school districts have struggled to continue to serve their students despite the severe reductions made in the impact aid program. To compensate for the loss of assistance from this program, various proposals have been considered by the Hawaii State Legislature, including legislation to charge the Department of Defense an education fee for the cost of educating children of military parents attending Hawaii's public schools. This legislation further sought to bar these children from attending the State's public schools if this fee was not paid.

While this legislative proposal was not adopted, this action illustrates the taxpaying public's view that the educational needs of children of military parents should not receive equal attention from the State of Hawaii if the Federal Government continues to ignore the financial needs of Hawaii's public school system. I sincerely believe that the phaseout of category B coupled with continued reductions of impact aid funding would be a clear signal that the Federal Government is turning its back to the needs of impact aid eligible host States; this will, in turn, further alienate military families from the local communities in which they reside.

I urge the Members in this House to join my colleagues and I who have risen to support H.R. 11. The impact aid program and the several other education programs in this bill should be maintained in keeping with our Government's commitment to quality and fairness in education.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WYDEN

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WYDEN: Page 48, after line 15, insert the following new paragraph (and redesignate the succeeding paragraph accordingly):

(3) Section 3(c)(2)(A) of such Act is amended—

(A) by striking out division (i); and

(B) by redesignating divisions (ii) and (iii) as divisions (i) and (ii), respectively.

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to offer a simple amendment to H.R. 11 with regard to impact aid.

As you know, this worthwhile program has helped out school districts nationwide for years by providing schools with funds to pay for the education of children whose parents live and work or live or work on Federal property.

I would like to tell the Members briefly about a problem that a small school district in my congressional district is experiencing. The Bonneville School District presently has eight students who qualify for impact aid—six for the A program and two for the B program.

As the Members know, impact aid money is allocated on a formula which allows districts to receive funds if there are at least 400 students and 3 percent of their student population qualifies for this aid. However—and this is where the problem lies—despite the percentage of the number of students who qualify, if the number of students is less than 10, a school district is dropped from the program.

Because the Bonneville School District has only eight eligible students, the district was dropped from the program, even though it meets the formula criteria. Without the aid, the district is having to educate these children for free. The current tuition for high school students in the district is $4,700 per student per year. For Bonneville, the loss of these funds is a substantial one.

Under my amendment, we would drop the ceiling level of 10 students so that smaller school districts may still be eligible for this worthwhile program. My amendment deletes the ceiling level but keeps the percentage formula intact.

According to a Congressional Research Service study, only eight other school districts in the Nation will be affected by this amendment so the cost is negligible. I would appreciate the Members support to help smaller school districts keep their impact aid moneys.

Finally, I particularly want to thank the gentleman from Michigan, Chairman FORD, the gentleman from Kentucky, Chairman PERKINS, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. GOODLING, for their generous assistance in the development of this amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WYDEN. I yield to the chairman of the committee, and I thank him for his help.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, let me state that we have these situations occasionally coming up in the construction of reservoirs and dams throughout the Nation and when people are fenced off. These are emergency cases, and I see nothing wrong with lowering the requirements.

So, I would suggest that we accept the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WYDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, we would be happy to accept the amendment on this side.

Mr. WYDEN. I thank the gentleman; both of them have been most helpful.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. WYDEN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute be printed in the RECORD and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The text of the remainder of the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, beginning with title IV, is as follows:

TITLE IV—WOMEN'S EDUCATIONAL EQUITY

SHORT TITLE; REFERENCE

SEC. 401. (a) This title may be cited as the "Women's Educational Equity Amendments of 1984".

(b) Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this title an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of the Women's Educational Equity Act of 1978 (20 U.S.C. 3341 et seq.).

(c) Such Act is amended by striking out "Commissioner" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "Secretary of Education".

FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

SEC. 402. (a) Section 931(b)(1) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "The Congress finds and declares that excellence in education cannot be achieved without equity for women and girls.".

(b) Section 931(b)(2) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "It is also the purpose of this part to provide educational equity for women and girls who suffer multiple discrimination, bias, or stereotyping based on sex, and on race, ethnic origin, disability, or age.".

GRANT AND CONTRACT AUTHORITY

SEC. 403. Section 932(a) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "The Secretary shall ensure that at least 1 grant or contract is available during each fiscal year for the performance of each of the activities described in paragraph (1) of this subsection.".

CHALLENGE GRANTS

SEC. 404. Section 934 is amended to read as follows:

"CHALLENGE GRANTS

"SEC. 934. (a) In addition to the authority of the Secretary under section 932, the Secretary shall carry out a program of challenge grants (as part of the grant program administered under section 932(a)(1)), not to exceed $40,000 each, in order to support projects to develop—

"(1) comprehensive plans for implementation of equity programs at every educational level;

"(2) innovative approaches to school-community partnerships;

"(3) new dissemination and replication strategies; and

"(4) other innovative approaches to achieving the purposes of this part.

"(b) For the purposes described in clauses (1) through (4) of subsection (a), the Secretary is authorized to make grants to public and private nonprofit agencies and to individuals.".

CRITERIA AND PRIORITIES

SEC. 405. Section 935 is amended—

(1) by inserting "separate" after "Secretary shall establish"; and

(2) by inserting "under sections 932(a)(1) and 932(a)(2)" after "priorities for awards".

NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL ON WOMEN'S EDUCATIONAL PROGRAMS

SEC. 406. Section 936 is amended—

(1) by striking out "Office of Education" in subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof "Department of Education";

(2) by striking out paragraph (1) of such subsection and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(1) seventeen individuals, some of whom shall be students, and who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from among individuals, broadly representative of the general public and including (A) individuals who are experts in a wide range of issues of educational equity for women at all levels of education, including preschool, elementary and secondary education, higher education, vocational and adult education; (B) individuals who are representative of and expert in the educational needs of racial and ethnic minority women, older women, and disabled women; and (C) both women and men who have demonstrated commitment to and expertise in the purposes of this part;";

(3) by striking out "advise" and all that follows through "on matters" in subsection (c)(1) and inserting in lieu thereof "advise the Secretary and the Congress on matters";

(4) by inserting "selection of funding priorities and" before "allocation of any funds" in subsection (c)(2); and

(5) by striking out subsection (c)(3) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(3) advise all Federal agencies which have education programs concerning those aspects of the programs which relate to the educational needs and opportunities of women;".

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY

SEC. 407. Section 937 is amended—

(1) by striking out the heading of such section and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"REPORTS, EVALUATION, AND DISSEMINATION";

(2) by striking out ", 1980, 1982, and 1984" and inserting in lieu thereof "of each of the years 1985 through 1989";

(3) by striking out "shall evaluate" in the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "shall oversee the evaluation of";

(4) by striking out "include such evaluation" in such sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "report on such evaluation"; and

(5) by inserting "(a)" after "SEC. 937." and by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) The Office of Women's Educational Equity shall evaluate and disseminate (at low cost) all materials and programs developed under this part.".

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 408. Section 938 is amended to read as follows:

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 938. For the purpose of carrying out this part there are authorized to be appropriated $50,000,000 for fiscal year 1985 and each of the four succeeding fiscal years.".

TITLE V—AMENDMENTS TO TITLE XI OF THE EDUCATION AMENDMENTS OF 1978

SHORT TITLE; REFERENCE

SEC. 501. (a) This title may be cited as the "Indian Education Amendments of 1984".

(b) Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this title an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title XI of the Education Amendments of 1978 (25 U.S.C. 2001 et seq.).

STANDARDS

SEC. 502. (a) Section 1121(b)(2) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Such standards shall include a requirement, developed in coordination with Indian tribes, the affected local school boards, the Indian Health Service of the Department of Health and Human Services, the State health departments, and the Federal Center for Disease Control, on immunization for childhood diseases, including provisions for in-school immunization, where necessary.".

(b) The first sentence of section 1121(d) is amended by striking out everything after "ill-conceived" and inserting in lieu thereof a period and the following: "The tribal governing body or designated school board shall thereafter submit to the Secretary a proposal for alternative standards that takes into account the specific needs of the tribe's children.".

(c) Section 1121(e) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" after "(e)";

(2) by striking out the second sentence thereof; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(2) Within two years of the initial contract for the provision of educational services under Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act each such school shall (A) be in compliance with the standards prescribed under subsection (a), or (B) have obtained accreditation, or be a candidate for accreditation, with one of the accrediting agencies recognized by the Secretary of Education or the State in which it is found.

"(3) Within one year of the date of enactment of this paragraph, the Bureau shall, through contract with a national Indian organization, establish uniform fiscal control and fund accounting procedures for all contract schools which yield data results comparable to those used by Bureau schools.".

(d) Section 1121(f) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Failure to implement or meet such standards shall not serve as the basis for taking any personnel action against any individual if (1) the failure is related to inadequate resources (as determined under sections 1128 and 1129 of this title), and (2) the Secretary has not submitted the information required by this subsection and has not requested sufficient funds to cover the cost (as determined under such sections) of meeting such standards at the school concerned.".

(e) Section 1121 is further amended by redesignating subsection (g) as subsection (h) and by inserting after subsection (f) the following new subsection:

"(g)(1) Except as specifically required by statute, no school operated by the Bureau of Indian Affairs on January 1, 1984, may be closed or the program curtailed unless done according to the requirements of this subsection, except that in those cases where the tribal governing body, or the local school board concerned (if so designated by the tribal governing body), requests closure or consolidation, these provisions shall not apply.

"(2) The Secretary shall, by regulation, promulgate standards and procedures for the closing or consolidation of Bureau schools in accordance with the requirements of this subsection.

"(3) Such standards and procedures shall require that, whenever closure or consolidation of a school is under consideration or review by any division of the Bureau or the Department of the Interior, the affected tribe, tribal governing body, designated local school board, and parents will be notified as soon as such consideration or review begins and kept fully and currently informed with respect to such consideration or review. Copies of any such notices and information shall be transmitted promptly to the Congress and published in the Federal Register.

"(4) Prior to ordering any such school closing or consolidation, the Secretary shall insure that a study is made of each Indian child's educational and (where applicable) social needs and that adequate alternative services are guaranteed. Such a study shall include a description of the consultation conducted between the potential service provider, current service provider, parents, tribal representative of the tribe involved, and the Director of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, Office of Indian Education Programs with regard to such child.

"(5) Prior to taking any action to close or consolidate any such school, the Secretary shall make a full report to Congress describing the plans made (including schedules and plans for follow-up studies on the students affected), and the study and consultations undertaken pursuant to paragraph (4) of this subsection. No action may be taken in furtherance of any such proposed school closing or consolidation (including any action which would prejudice the personnel or programs of such school) until the end of the academic year following the academic year in which such report is made.".

SCHOOL BOUNDARIES

SEC. 503. Section 1124 is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 1124. (a) The Secretary shall, in accordance with this section, establish separate geographical attendance areas for each Bureau school.

"(b) No attendance area shall be established with respect to any such school unless the tribal governing body or the local school board concerned (if so designated by the tribal governing body) has been given one year from the date of enactment of the Indian Education Amendments of 1984 to propose such boundaries. Such proposed boundaries shall be accepted unless the Secretary finds, after consultation with such body or board, that such boundaries do not reflect the needs of the Indian students to be served or do not provide adequate stability to all of the programs affected.

"(c) In any case where there is only one Bureau operated program located on an Indian reservation, the attendance area for the program shall be the boundaries of the reservation served, and those students residing near the reservation shall also receive services from such program.

"(d) In any case where more than one school operated by the Secretary is located on an Indian reservation, the attendance areas established under this section—

"(1) in the case of nonresidential programs, shall not overlap and shall, together, cover the entirety of such reservation;

"(2) shall be established after due consideration of relevant transportation costs;

"(3) shall, to the greatest extent possible, permit a student to continue his or her education at a single school; and

"(4) with respect to dormitory programs, may be established to cover a nonexclusive area, as required by reason of such factors as social or educational need or isolation, or both.

"(e) In establishing school attendance areas under this section, the Secretary shall, in the following order—

"(1) determine attendance areas for Bureau operated programs with respect to the entire geographic area where potential students reside, considering the factors in subsection (a) and the specific educational needs of the students to be served, taking into account the wishes of the tribal governing body and local school boards concerned;

"(2) coordinate such attendance areas with those determined by schools funded under contract with the Bureau;

"(3) preserve current or historical service patterns, to the greatest extent possible; and

"(4) coordinate such school attendance areas with the school attendance areas of public schools in the vicinity, but such public school attendance areas shall not be regarded as exclusive where historical service patterns and current social, educational, or geographic (including transportation) factors show that Indian students will benefit by Bureau programs, taking into account the wishes of the tribal governing body and local school boards concerned.

"(f) In no case shall the Secretary regard a public school attendance area as being exclusive if the Secretary determines, on the basis of past practices or reasonable evidence concerning future practices, that a local school district is unable or unwilling to provide full and equal service (as provided to all of its students for all activities) throughout the year or to provide programs that meet students' particular needs.

"(g) With respect to multitribal boarding schools located off reservation, the Secretary shall establish nonexclusive major attendance areas. The Secretary may also establish by regulation supplemental attendance criteria based on special programs or services which exceed the basic academic programs. The Secretary shall provide procedures for recognizing and respecting parental choice concerning the special educational or social needs for students residing outside such areas, to the extent consistent with the best interest of the student. In those instances where a tribe requests attendance for a student residing outside the major attendance areas, the Secretary shall honor such request.".

BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS EDUCATION FUNCTIONS

SEC. 504. (a) Section 1126(a) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "The Director of the Office (whether permanent or acting) shall report directly and solely to the Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs".

(b) Section 1126(b) is amended by striking the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "All contract functions relating to education (including those pursuant to the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act) shall be supervised and directed by the Director of the Office.".

(c) Section 1126(b) is further amended by striking out "Nothing" in the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof: "Subject to the provisions in subsection (c), nothing".

(d) Section 1126(c) is amended by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (1), and by striking out paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(2) provide all services and support functions for education programs—

"(A) with respect to procurement actions of $25,000 or less; and

"(B) with respect to personnel matters involving staffing actions and functions, and

"(3) provide technical and coordinating assistance in areas such as procurement, contracting, budgeting, personnel, and curriculum.".

(e) Section 1126 is further amended by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (e) and by inserting after subsection (c) the following new subsection:

"(d)(1) The Director of the Office shall be responsible for—

"(A) planning for school facilities to be constructed under the system required by section 1125(c); and

"(B) establishing a system for prioritizing projects and developing an annual plan for the improvement and repair of education facilities, which together shall form the basis for the distribution of appropriated funds.

"(2) The Director of the Office shall establish a program, including the distribution of appropriated funds, for the operation and maintenance of education facilities. Such program shall include, but not be limited to—

"(A) a method of computing the amount necessary for each education facility;

"(B) similar treatment of all Bureau and contract schools; and

"(C) the allocation of appropriated funds from the Director of the Office directly to the agency superintendents for education, or to the area education program administrators in the case of multitribal boarding schools located off reservation.

The agency superintendents for education, or the area education program administrator in the case of multitribal boarding schools located off reservation, shall make arrangements for the maintenance of education facilities with the local supervisors of the Bureau maintenance personnel who are under the authority of the agency superintendent or area directors, respectively. The local supervisors of Bureau maintenance personnel shall take appropriate action to implement the decisions made in this regard by the agency superintendents for education and by the area education program administrators, except that no funds from this program may be expended or transferred by an agency superintendent for education or by an area education program administrator unless he is assured that the necessary maintenance has been, or will be, provided in a reasonable manner. Subject to the requirements of subsection (b) of this section, nothing in this Act shall be construed to require the provision of separate operations and maintenance personnel for the Office.

"(3) The Director of the Office shall have control over all Bureau education facilities, including local Bureau housing constructed for the purpose of housing Bureau personnel at the school site.

"(4) The requirements of this subsection shall be implemented within 270 days following the date of enactment of the Indian Education Amendments of 1984.".

ALLOTMENT FORMULA

SEC. 505. (a) Section 1128(a)(2) is amended—

(1) by striking out subparagraph (D);

(2) by redesignating subparagraph (E) as subparagraph (D); and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraphs:

"(E) special transportation and other costs of isolated and small schools;

"(F) the costs of boarding arrangements, where determined necessary by a tribal governing body or designated local school board;

"(G) costs associated with greater lengths of service by educational personnel;

"(H) special programs for gifted and talented students; and

"(I) costs associated with operating education and recreational programs on a 12-month basis.".

(b) Section 1128(c) is amended by inserting "(1)" after "(c)", redesignating paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) as subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C), respectively, and by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(2) All Bureau and contract schools receiving funds under this section shall receive an equal amount as an allowance for local school board training and activities including, notwithstanding any other provision of law, meeting expenses and the cost of membership in or support of organizations engaged in activities on behalf of Indian education.

"(3) The Secretary shall, subject to appropriations, provide to all contract schools an amount for administrative and indirect costs which is at least equal to the amount which would be expended by the Secretary if such school were directly operated by the Secretary. The Secretary shall take such actions as are necessary to provide contract schools with the full amount as determined by this paragraph without reducing funds available under subsection (a) of this section.".

(c) Section 1128 is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) The Director of the Office shall establish a separate fund from which monetary awards and quality step increases for employees shall be paid. Such payments shall not affect school allotments under this section.".

UNIFORM DIRECT FUNDING

SEC. 506. (a) Section 1129(a) is amended—

(1) by striking out "section 1128," and all that follows in the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "section 1128.";

(2) by inserting "(1)" after "(a)" and adding at the end thereof the following:

"(2)(A) For the purpose of affording adequate notice of funding available pursuant to the allotments made by this section, amounts appropriated in an appropriation Act for any fiscal year shall become available for obligation by the affected schools on July 1 of the fiscal year in which they are appropriated without further action by the Secretary, and shall remain available for obligation through the succeeding fiscal year. In order to effect a transition to the forward funding method of distribution described in the preceding sentence, there are authorized to be appropriated, in an appropriation Act or Acts for the same fiscal year, two separate appropriations for such allotments, the first of which shall not be subject to the preceding sentence.

"(B) The Secretary shall, on the basis of the amount appropriated in accordance with this paragraph—

"(i) publish, on July 1 preceding the fiscal year for which the funds are appropriated, allotments to each affected school made under this section of 85 percent of such appropriation; and

"(ii) publish, no later than September 30 of such preceding fiscal year, the allotments to be made under this section of the remaining 15 percent of such appropriation, adjusted to reflect actual student attendance.

"(3) Notwithstanding any law or regulation governing procurement by Federal agencies, the supervisor of each school receiving funds under this section shall, subject to school board approval, have the authority to expend no more than 10 percent of the funds allotted by this section to procure supplies and equipment, with or without competitive bidding.".

(b) Section 1129(c) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following: "The Secretary shall institute a program for funding tribal divisions of education and the development of tribal codes of education.".

APPEALS FROM ACTIONS OF SCHOOL BOARDS

SEC. 507. (a) Section 1129(b) is amended by striking out the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "The supervisor of the school may appeal any such action of the local school board to the superintendent for education of the Bureau agency by filing a written statement describing the action and the reasons the supervisor believes such action should be overturned. A copy of such statement shall be submitted to the local school board and such board shall be afforded an opportunity to respond, in writing, to such appeal. After reviewing such written appeal and response, the superintendent may, for good cause, overturn the action of the local school board. The superintendent shall transmit the determination of such appeal in the form of a written opinion to such board and to such supervisor identifying the reasons for overturning such action.".

(b) Section 1131(d) is amended by striking out paragraphs (2) and (3) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(2)(A) The supervisor of a school may appeal to the appropriate agency superintendent for education any determination by the local school board for the school that an individual be employed, or not be employed, in an education position in the school (other than that of supervisor) by filing a written statement describing the determination and the reasons the supervisor believes such determination should be overturned. A copy of such statement shall be submitted to the local school board and such board shall be afforded an opportunity to respond, in writing, to such appeal. After reviewing such written appeal and response, the superintendent may, for good cause, overturn the determination of the local school board. The superintendent shall transmit the determination of such appeal in the form of a written opinion to such board and to such supervisor identifying the reasons for overturning such determination.

"(B) The superintendent for education of an agency office of the Bureau may appeal to the Director of the Office any determination by the local school board for the school that an individual be employed, or not be employed, as the supervisor of a school by filing a written statement describing the determination and the reasons the supervisor believes such determination should be overturned. A copy of such statement shall be submitted to the local school board and such board shall be afforded an opportunity to respond, in writing, to such appeal. After reviewing such written appeal and response, the Director may, for good cause, overturn the determination of the local school board. The Director shall transmit the determination of such appeal in the form of a written opinion to such board and to such superintendent identifying the reasons for overturning such determination.

"(3) The superintendent for education of an agency office of the Bureau may appeal to the Director of the Office any determination by the agency school board that an individual be employed, or not be employed, in an education position in such agency office by filing a written statement describing the determination and the reasons the supervisor believes such determination should be overturned. A copy of such statement shall be submitted to the agency school board and such board shall be afforded an opportunity to respond, in writing, to such appeal. After reviewing such written appeal and response, the Director may, for good cause, overturn the determination of the agency school board. The Director shall transmit the determination of such appeal in the form of a written opinion to such board and to such superintendent identifying the reasons for overturning such determination.".

MANAGEMENT INFORMATION SYSTEM

SEC. 508. Section 1132 is amended—

(1) by striking out "the Bureau," and inserting in lieu thereof "the Office,";

(2) by striking out "this Act" and inserting in lieu thereof "the Indian Education Amendments of 1984"; and

(3) by striking out "to all agency and area offices of the Bureau and".

AUDITS

SEC. 509. Section 1136 is amended by inserting "(a)" after "SEC. 1136." and by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) The Inspector General of the Department of the Interior shall establish a system to ensure that financial and compliance audits are conducted of the Bureau, the Office, and each Bureau school at least once in every three years. Audits of Bureau schools shall be based upon the extent to which such school has complied with its local financial plan under section 1129.".

REGULATIONS

SEC. 510. Section 1138 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Such regulations shall contain, immediately following each substantive provision of such regulations, citations to the particular section or sections of statutory law or other legal authority upon which such provision is based.".

VOLUNTARY SERVICES

SEC. 511. Title XI of the Education Amendments of 1978 is further amended by adding after section 1139 the following new section:

"VOLUNTARY SERVICES

"SEC. 1140. Notwithstanding section 1342 of title 31, United States Code, an officer or employee of the Bureau or the Office may, subject to the approval of the local school board concerned, accept voluntary services on behalf of Bureau and contract schools. Nothing in this title shall be construed to require Federal employees to work without compensation or to allow the use of volunteer services to displace or replace Federal employees.".

EMPLOYEE BENEFITS

SEC. 512. Title XI of the Education Amendments of 1978 is further amended by adding after section 1140 the following new sections:

"PRORATION OF PAY

"SEC. 1141. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary, at the election of the employee, shall prorate the salary of an employee employed in an education position for the academic school-year over the entire twelve month period. Each educator employed for the academic school-year shall annually elect to be paid on a twelve month basis or for those months while school is in session. No educator shall suffer a loss of pay or benefits because of such election.

"(b) During the course of such year the employee may change election once.

"(c) That portion of the employee's pay which would be paid between academic school years may be paid in lump sum at the election of the employee.

"(d) For the purposes of this section the terms 'educator' and 'education position' have the meaning contained in section 1131(n)(1) and (n)(2) of this title. This section applies to those individuals employed under the provisions of section 1131 of this title or title 5, United States Code.

"EXTRACURRICULAR ACTIVITIES

"SEC. 1142. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary shall provide a stipend in lieu of overtime premium pay or compensatory time off. Any employee of the Bureau who performs additional activities to provide services to students or otherwise support the school's academic and social programs may elect to be compensated for all such work on the basis of the stipend. Such stipend shall be paid as a supplement to the employee's base pay.

"(b) The amount of such stipends shall be determined at the area level.

"(c) If an employee elects not to be compensated through the stipend established by this section, the appropriate provisions of title 5, United States Code, shall apply.

"(d) This section applies to all Bureau employees, whether employed under section 1131 of this title or title 5, United States Code.

"HOUSING

"SEC. 1143. (a) The Secretary shall continue to apply rental rates for employee housing in accordance with all applicable laws and regulations. Proceeds from rental receipts shall be used for the improvement and repair of employee quarters.

"(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the agency superintendent for education, or for boarding schools located off-reservation the area education program administrator, shall have the authority to waive up to 90 percent of the rental rate for educators on school-wide basis to aid the school in recruiting and retaining educators. Decisions on rent waivers will be made after consultation with the appropriate level school board and the employees. Such superintendent's or administrator's decision (as the case may be) on the need for this assistance in recruitment and retention is final and not reviewable.

"(c) During periods when schools are not in session and educators have been placed in non-pay status, all rents paid by those educators shall be waived.

"(d) For the purposes of this section the term 'educator' has the meaning contained in section 1131(n)(1) of this title. This section applies to those individuals employed under both the provisions of section 1131 of this title and title 5, United States Code.".

(2) Section 6(c)(1) of such Act is amended by striking out ", within the two-year period beginning on the effective date of this Act".

TITLE VII—EMERGENCY IMMIGRANT EDUCATION ASSISTANCE

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 701. This title may be cited as the "Emergency Immigrant Education Act of 1984".

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 702. As used in this title—

(1) The term "immigrant children" means children who were not born in any State and who have been attending schools in any one or more States for less than three complete academic years.

(2) The terms "elementary school", "local educational agency", "secondary school", "State", and "State educational agency" have the meanings given such terms under section 198(a) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965.

(3) The term "elementary or secondary nonpublic schools" means schools which comply with the applicable compulsory attendance laws of the State and which are exempt from taxation under section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

(4) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Education.

AUTHORIZATIONS AND ALLOCATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 703. (a) There are authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1985 and each of the four succeeding fiscal years such sums as may be necessary to make payments to which State educational agencies are entitled under this title and payments for administration under section 704.

(b)(1) If the sums appropriated for any fiscal year to make payments to States under this title are not sufficient to pay in full the sum of the amounts which State educational agencies are entitled to receive under this title for such year, the allocations to State educational agencies shall be ratably reduced to the extent necessary to bring the aggregate of such allocations within the limits of the amounts so appropriated.

(2) In the event that funds become available for making payments under this title for any period after allocations have been made under paragraph (1) of this subsection for such period, the amounts reduced under such paragraph shall be increased on the same basis as they were reduced.

STATE ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS

SEC. 704. The Secretary is authorized to pay to each State educational agency amounts equal to the amounts expended by it for the proper and efficient administration of its functions under this title, except that the total of such payments for any period shall not exceed 1.5 per centum of the amounts which that State educational agency is entitled to receive for that period under this title.

WITHHOLDING

SEC. 705. Whenever the Secretary, after reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing to any State educational agency, finds that there is a failure to meet the requirements of any provision of this title, the Secretary shall notify that agency that further payments will not be made to the agency under this title, or in the discretion of the Secretary, that the State educational agency shall not make further payments under this title to specified local educational agencies whose actions cause or are involved in such failure until the Secretary is satisfied that there is no longer any such failure to comply. Until the Secretary is so satisfied, no further payments shall be made to the State educational agency under this title, or payments by the State educational agency under this title shall be limited to local educational agencies whose actions did not cause or were not involved in the failure, as the case may be.

STATE ENTITLEMENTS

SEC. 706. (a) The Secretary shall, in accordance with the provisions of this section, make payments to State educational agencies for each of the fiscal years 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, and 1989 for the purpose set forth in section 707.

(b)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (3) and in subsections (c) and (d) of this section, the amount of the grant to which a State educational agency is entitled under this title shall be equal to the product of (A) the number of immigrant children enrolled during such fiscal year in elementary and secondary public schools under the jurisdiction of each local educational agency described under paragraph (2) within that State, and in any elementary or secondary nonpublic school within the district served by each such local educational agency, multiplied by (B) $500.

(2) The local educational agencies referred to in paragraph (1) are those local educational agencies in which the sum of the number of immigrant children who are enrolled in elementary or secondary public schools under the jurisdiction of such agencies, and in elementary or secondary nonpublic schools within the districts served by such agencies, during the fiscal year for which the payments are to be made under this title, is equal to—

(A) at least five hundred; or

(B) at least 3 per centum of the total number of students enrolled in such public or nonpublic schools during such fiscal year; whichever number is less.

(3)(A) The amount of the grant of any State educational agency for any fiscal year as determined under paragraph (1) shall be reduced by the amounts made available for such fiscal year under any other Federal law for expenditure within the State for the same purpose as those for which funds are available under this title, but such reduction shall be made only to the extent that (i) such amounts are made available for such purpose specifically because of the refugee, parollee, asylee, or other immigrant status of the individuals served by such funds, and (ii) such amounts are made available to provide assistance to individuals eligible for services under this title.

(B) No reduction of a grant under this title shall be made under subparagraph (A) for any fiscal year if a reduction is made, pursuant to a comparable provision in any such other Federal law, in the amount made available for expenditure in the State for such fiscal year under such other Federal law, based on the amount assumed to be available under this title.

(c)(1) Determinations by the Secretary under this section for any period with respect to the number of immigrant children shall be made on the basis of data or estimates provided to the Secretary by each State educational agency in accordance with criteria established by the Secretary, unless the Secretary determines, after notice and opportunity for a hearing to the affected State educational agency, that such data or estimates are clearly erroneous.

(2) No such determination with respect to the number of immigrant children shall operate because of an underestimate or overestimate to deprive any State educational agency of its entitlement to any payment (or the amount thereof) under this section to which such agency would be entitled had such determination been made on the basis of accurate data.

(d) Whenever the Secretary determines that any amount of a payment made to a State under this title for a fiscal year will not be used by such State for carrying out the purpose for which the payment was made, the Secretary shall make such amount available for carrying out such purpose to one or more other States to the extent the Secretary determines that such other States will be able to use such additional amount for carrying out such purpose. Any amount made available to a State from an appropriation for a fiscal year in accordance with the preceding sentence shall, for purposes of this title, be regarded as part of such State's payment (as determined under subsection (b)) for such year, but shall remain available until the end of the succeeding fiscal year.

USES OF FUNDS

SEC. 707. (a) Payments made under this title to any State may be used in accordance with applications approved under section 708 for supplementary educational services and costs, as described under subsection (b) of this section, for immigrant children enrolled in the elementary and secondary public schools under the jurisdiction of the local educational agencies of the State described in section 706(b)(2) and in elementary and secondary nonpublic schools of that State within the districts served by such agencies.

(b) Financial assistance provided under this title shall be available to meet the costs of providing immigrant children supplementary educational services, including but not limited to—

(1) supplementary educational services necessary to enable those children to achieve a satisfactory level of performance, including—

(A) English language instruction;

(B) other bilingual educational services; and

(C) special materials and supplies;

(2) additional basic instructional services which are directly attributable to the presence in the school district of immigrant children, including the costs of providing additional classroom supplies, overhead costs, costs of construction, acquisition or rental of space, costs of transportation, or such other costs as are directly attributable to such additional basic instructional services; and

(3) essential inservice training for personnel who will be providing instruction described in either paragraph (1) or (2) of this subsection.

APPLICATIONS

SEC. 708. (a) No State educational agency shall be entitled to any payment under this title for any period unless that agency submits an application to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing or accompanied by such information, as the Secretary may reasonably require. Each such application shall—

(1) provide that the educational programs, services, and activities for which payments under this title are made will be administered by or under the supervision of the agency;

(2) provide assurances that payments under this title will be used for purposes set forth in section 707;

(3) provide assurances that such payments will be distributed among local educational agencies within that State on the basis of the number of children counted with respect to such local educational agency under section 706(b)(1), adjusted to reflect any reductions imposed pursuant to section 706(b)(3) which are attributable to such local educational agency;

(4) provide assurances that the State educational agency will not finally disapprove in whole or in part any application for funds received under this title without first affording the local educational agency submitting an application for such funds reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing;

(5) provide for making such reports as the Secretary may reasonably require to perform the functions under this title; and

(6) provide assurances—

(B) that the control of funds provided under this title and the title to any materials, equipment, and property repaired, remodeled, or constructed with those funds shall be in a public agency for the uses and purposes provided in this title, and a public agency shall administer such funds and property; and

(C) that the provision of services pursuant to this paragraph shall be provided by employees of a public agency or through contract by such public agency with a person, association, agency, or corporation who or which, in the provision of such services, is independent of such elementary or secondary nonpublic school and of any religious organization; and such employment or contract shall be under the control and supervision of such public agency, and the funds provided under this paragraph shall not be commingled with State or local funds.

(b) The Secretary shall approve an application which meets the requirements of subsection (a). The Secretary shall not finally disapprove an application of a State educational agency except after reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing on the record to such agency.

PAYMENTS

SEC. 709. (a) Except as provided in section 703(b), the Secretary shall pay to each State educational agency having an application approved under section 708 the amount which that State is entitled to receive under this title.

(b) If by reason of any provision of law a local educational agency is prohibited from providing educational services for children enrolled in elementary and secondary nonpublic schools, as required by section 708(a)(6), or if the Secretary determines that a local educational agency has substantially failed or is unwilling to provide for the participation on an equitable basis of children enrolled in such schools, the Secretary may waive such requirement and shall arrange for the provision of services to such children through arrangements which shall be subject to the requirements of this title. Such waivers shall be subject to consultation, withholding, notice, and judicial review requirements in accordance with section 557(b) (3) and (4) of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981.

TITLE VIII—GENERAL ADMINISTRATION AND ORGANIZATION

AMENDMENTS TO THE DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION ORGANIZATION ACT

SEC. 801. (a) Section 204 of the Department of Education Organization Act (20 U.S.C. 3418) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "There shall be within the Office of Elementary and Secondary Education and directly under the supervision of the Assistant Secretary for Elementary and Secondary Education, an Office of Migrant Education, which shall be responsible for the administration of programs established by subpart 1 of part B of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 and by subpart 5 of part A of title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965.".

(b) Section 204 of the Department of Education Organization Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "There shall be within the Office of Elementary and Secondary Education and directly under the supervision of the Assistant Secretary for Elementary and Secondary Education, an Office of Equity Training and Technical Assistance, which shall be responsible for the administration of programs established by sections 403, 404, 405, and 406 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.".

(c) Section 209 of the Department of Education Organization Act (20 U.S.C. 3419) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "There shall be within the Office of Educational Research and Improvement and directly under the supervision of the Assistant Secretary for Educational Research and Improvement, an Office of Women's Educational Equity, which shall be responsible for the administration of programs established by part C of title IX of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965.".

(d) For the purposes of section 413(a) of the Department of Education Organization Act (20 U.S.C. 3473), the Office of Migrant Education, the Office of Equity Training and Technical Assistance, and the Office of Women's Educational Equity shall be considered to be organizational entities established by such Act and shall not be subject to the reorganizational authority of the Secretary of Education under that section or any other provision of law.

EXTENSION OF AUTHORIZATIONS UNDER THE GENERAL EDUCATION PROVISIONS ACT

SEC. 802. (a) Section 405(k)(7) of the General Education Provisions Act (20 U.S.C. 1221e(k)(7)) is amended by striking out "$10,500,000 for each fiscal year ending prior to October 1, 1983" and inserting in lieu thereof "$11,000,000 for fiscal year 1985, and $10,800,000 for each succeeding fiscal year ending prior to October 1, 1989".

(b) Section 406(g) of such Act (20 U.S.C. 1221-1(g)) is amended by striking out "October 1, 1983" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "October 1, 1989".

NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF EDUCATION

SEC. 803. (a) Section 405(k)(1) of the General Education Provisions Act (20 U.S.C. 1221e(k)(1)) is amended by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (C), by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (D) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and", and by inserting after such subparagraph the following:

"(E) with respect to each State which voluntarily participates in accordance with paragraph (5), provide for a statement of information collected by the National Assessment for each such State.".

(b) Section 405(k)(3) of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "The appropriateness of all cognitive, background, and attitude items developed as part of the National Assessment shall be the responsibility of the Assessment Policy Committee. Such items shall not be subject to review or approval by either the Department of Education or the Office of Management and Budget.".

COLLECTION OF DATA

SEC. 804. (a) Section 405 of the General Education Provisions Act (20 U.S.C. 1221e) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(l) For purposes of this section, the terms 'United States' and 'State' include the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico.".

(b) Section 406 of such Act (20 U.S.C. 1221-1) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(j) For purposes of this section, the terms 'United States' and 'State' include the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico.".

ANNUAL EVALUATION REPORTS

SEC. 805. Section 417(a) of the General Education Provisions Act (20 U.S.C. 1226c(a)) is amended by striking out "November 1" and inserting in lieu thereof "December 31".

PROTECTION OF PUPIL RIGHTS

SEC. 806. Section 439 of the General Education Provisions Act (20 U.S.C. 1232h) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) The regulations in effect on January 1, 1984, for handling complaints that arise under this section, and those procedures in effect on that date that are used to implement other provisions of this section, shall remain in force and shall not be amended or revised.".

CONFLICT-OF-INTEREST

SEC. 807. (a) Section 435(b) of the General Education Provisions Act (20 U.S.C. 1232d(b)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (6);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (7) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(3) by inserting after such paragraph the following new paragraph:

"(8) that none of the funds expended under any applicable program will be used to acquire equipment (including computer software) in any instance in which such acquisition results in a direct financial benefit to any organization representing the interests of the purchasing entity or its employees or any affiliate of such an organization.".

(b) Section 436(b) of the General Education Provisions Act (20 U.S.C. 1232e(b)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (7);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (8) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(3) by inserting after such paragraph the following new paragraph:

"(9) that none of the funds expended under any applicable program will be used to acquire equipment (including computer software) in any instance in which such acquisition results in a direct financial benefit to any organization representing the interests of the purchasing entity or its employees or any affiliate of such an organization.".

REMOVAL OF ADVISORY COUNCIL MEMBERS

SEC. 808. Section 443 of the General Education Provisions Act (20 U.S.C. 1233b) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) The members of any advisory council whose terms of office are established by this section or by any other applicable statute shall not be removed from membership on such council except for cause. The President shall communicate the reasons for any such removal to both Houses of the Congress.".

COMPLIANCE PROCEDURES

SEC. 809. (a) Section 452(a) of the General Education Provisions Act (20 U.S.C. 1234b(a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "If no fraud is involved, the Secretary may seek recovery of funds paid to a State or local educational agency only in those final audit determinations pending on or made after the date of enactment of this sentence in which the disputed expenditures are not allowable under current law and such expenditures are not in substantial compliance with the law.".

(b) Section 452(b) of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "In all final audit determinations before the Board pending on or made after the date of enactment of this sentence, the burden of proof shall be on the Secretary, and discovery shall be available to all parties under procedures provided under Rules 26 through and including 37 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedures.".

(c) Section 452(f) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(f)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary may, subject to the notice requirements of paragraph (3)—

"(A) compromise any claim established under this section for which the initial determination was found to be not in excess of $50,000, where the Secretary determines that (i) the collection of any or all of the amount thereof would not be practical or in the public interest, and (ii) the practice which resulted in the claim has been corrected and will not recur; or

"(B) whenever a State or local educational agency is subject to a final audit determination, enter into a compliance agreement of not more than three years duration with such agency in satisfaction of the final audit determination, whereby additional monitoring, additional reporting, or in kind contributions will provide program enhancement and will ensure program compliance.

"(2) Whenever a disputed expenditure of a subgrantee is considered under paragraph (1), the subgrantee shall be a party to any such action of the Secretary.

"(3) Not less than forty-five days prior to entering into a compromise, or agreement pursuant to paragraph (1), the Commissioner shall publish in the Federal Register a notice of his intention to do so. Such notice shall provide interested persons an opportunity to comment on any proposed action under this subsection through the submission of written data, view, or arguments.".

(d) Section 456(a) of such Act (20 U.S.C. 1234e(a)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "program, he may consider" and inserting in lieu thereof "program and if no fraud is involved, he shall consider";

(2) by striking out "may arrange" and inserting in lieu thereof "shall arrange"; and

(3) by striking out "not to exceed".

EFFECTIVE DATE AMENDMENT

SEC. 810. Section 25(b) of Public Law 98-211 (97 Stat. 1419) is amended by striking out "June 30, 1983" and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1984".

EDUCATION AMENDMENTS OF 1978: ASSISTANCE TO TERRITORIES

SEC. 811. Sections 1524 and 1525 of the Education Amendments of 1978 are each amended by striking out "1979" and inserting in lieu thereof "1985".

CONTRACT AUTHORITY

SEC. 812. Any authority to make payments or to enter into contracts under this Act shall be available only to such extent or in such amounts as are provided in advance in appropriation Acts.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 813. This Act and the amendments made by this Act shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act or October 1, 1984, whichever occurs later.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FORD OF MICHIGAN

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FORD of Michigan: Page 93, beginning on line 14, strike out all of section 809 through page 95, line 18, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

COMPLIANCE PROCEDURES

SEC. 809. (a)(1) Subsection (a) of section 452 of the General Education Provisions Act (20 U.S.C. 1234a) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new sentence: "If no fraud is involved, the Secretary may seek recovery of funds paid to a State or local educational agency in those final audit determinations pending on or made after the date of enactment of this sentence only if the disputed expenditures do not comply substantially with the law.".

(2) Subsection (b) of such section is amended to read as follows:

"(b)(1) A State or a local educational agency that has received written notice of a final audit determination and that desires to have such determination reviewed by the Board shall submit to the Board an application for review not later than thirty days after receipt of notification of the final audit determination. The application for review shall be in the form and contain the information specified by the Board.

"(2) The Board shall return to the Secretary for such action as he deems appropriate (A) any final audit determination which, in the judgment of the Board, contains insufficient detail to identify with particularity those expenditures which are not allowable, and (B) any such audit determination for which the Secretary has not established a prima facie case by introduction of evidence in support of the final audit determination. Failure by a State or local educational agency to maintain adequate records pertaining to expenditures that the agency is required to maintain, or failure by a State or local education agency to allow the Secretary access to such records, shall constitute a prima facie case.

"(3) Unless the Board returns a final audit determination to the Secretary pursuant to clause (A) or (B) of paragraph (2), the burden of going forward shall be upon the State or local educational agency. The ultimate burden of proof to sustain the case by a preponderance of the evidence shall be upon the Secretary.

"(4) In all final audit determinations pending before the Board on, or brought before the Board after, the date of enactment of this paragraph, discovery shall be available to all parties in accordance with the procedures provided under Rules 26, 28 through 34, and 36 of the Rules of Civil Procedure of the United States district courts. The period for the conduct of discovery shall not exceed six months (commencing on the date on which a panel of Board members is designated to conduct the review), except that such period may be extended for an additional three months if the Board, in its discretion, determines that exceptional circumstances warrant such an extension. At the request of any party, the Board may establish a specific schedule for the conduct of discovery (subject to the limitations contained in the preceding sentence).".

(3) Subsection (f) of such section is amended by redesignating paragraph (2) as paragraph (3) and by inserting after paragraph (1) the following new paragraph:

"(2) Whenever a disputed expenditure of a subgrantee is considered under paragraph (1), the subgrantee shall be a party to any such action of the Secretary.".

(4) In any final audit determination pending before the Secretary of Education or the Education Appeals Board on or made after the date of enactment of this Act pursuant to section 452 of the General Education Provisions Act (20 U.S.C. 1234b), the provisions of sections 122(a)(1) and 132 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 2732(a)(1), 2752) shall be considered to apply with respect to expenditures made before October 1, 1978, in the same manner that such provisions apply to expenditures made on or after that date, without regard to the provisions of subsections (b)(2), (e), and (f) of section 131 of such Act (20 U.S.C. 2751) requiring that certain determinations be made in advance.

(b) Section 453 of such Act (20 U.S.C. 1234b) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e)(1) With respect to chapter 1 of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981 (20 U.S.C. 3801 et seq.) the Secretary may suspend the initiation or continuation of his withholding action under this section during any period there is in effect a compliance agreement with the State or local educational agency under this subsection. Such an agreement shall be deemed to be in effect for the period specified therein, except that if the State or local educational agency fails to comply with the terms agreed to, such an agreement shall no longer be in effect and such withholding under this section shall be resumed. In implementing this section, the Secretary shall take into account any partial compliance by such agency under such agreement.

"(2) For the purpose of this subsection, the term 'compliance agreement', means an agreement which—

"(A) sets forth the terms and conditions to which the State or local educational agency has agreed in order to comply with the requirements of the applicable statute and regulations promulgated thereunder;

"(B) addresses all the matters that formed the basis for the initiation of the withholding action by the Secretary; and

"(C) may consist of a series of agreements that in the aggregate dispose of all such matters.

"(3) In any case in which a State or local educational agency desires to enter into a compliance agreement, but alleges that full compliance with the requirements of the applicable statute or regulations promulgated thereunder is genuinely not feasible until a later date, the Secretary shall hold a hearing at which that agency shall have the burden of demonstrating that immediate compliance is not feasible. The Secretary shall provide an opportunity for parents, their representatives, and other interested parties to participate in that hearing. If the Secretary determines, on the basis of all the evidence presented, that immediate compliance is genuinely not feasible, the Secretary shall make written findings to that effect before entering into such a compliance agreement with that State or local educational agency.

"(4) A compliance agreement under this subsection shall not be exempt from disclosure under any provision of section 552 of title 5, United States Code. Within fifteen days after the execution of any compliance agreement under this subsection, the Secretary shall send a copy thereof to each organization or person who filed a complaint with respect to any failure to comply which is covered by that agreement.".

(1) by striking out "program, he may consider" and inserting in lieu thereof "program and if no fraud is involved, he shall consider";

(2) by striking out "may arrange" and inserting in lieu thereof "shall arrange"; and

(3) by striking out "not to exceed 75 percent" and inserting in lieu thereof "at least 75 percent".

(d) Such Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"STATE COMPLIANCE AGREEMENTS

"SEC. 457. (a) In addition to other enforcement methods that may be available to States, a State educational agency may enter into a compliance agreement with a local educational agency if the State finds that the local educational agency has violated assurances contained in such agency's application or the requirements of the applicable statute or regulation under which a grant was accepted from the Secretary. Such an agreement shall be deemed to be in effect for the period specified therein.

"(b) For purposes of this section, the term 'compliance agreement' means an agreement which—

"(1) sets forth the terms and conditions to which the local educational agency has agreed in order to comply with the assurances contained in such agency's application or the requirements of the applicable statute or regulation promulgated thereunder, and with the applicable rules, regulations, procedures, guidelines, criteria or other requirements adopted by the State educational agency; and

"(2) may consist of a series of agreements that in the aggregate dispose of all such matters.

"(c) Within fifteen days after the execution of any compliance agreement, the State educational agency shall send a copy thereof to each organization or person who filed a complaint with respect to any failure to comply which is covered by that agreement.".

Mr. FORD of Michigan (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I rise today, with the support of my distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. GOODLING, to offer a substitute amendment for section 809 of H.R. 11, which deals with the auditing process for Federal education programs.

State and local education agencies have complained for some time that the auditing process for Federal programs is stacked in favor of sustaining the initial judgments of the Department of Education's auditors. They also feel that the process frequently produces results focusing on narrow technicalities rather than the goals of the programs, that it ignores congressional intent and that it is burdensome on the State and local education agencies. The Education and Labor Committee has heard of these problems frequently in hearings over the past several years, but our admonitions to the Department have been to no avail.

The difficulties in the auditing process were succinctly stated in November 1980 hearings before the Subcommittee on Elementary, Secondary, and Vocational Education by Dr. W.N. Dirby, executive assistant to the Commissioner of Education in Texas:

> . . . we (the state educational agencies) are guilty until proven innocent and denied the very tools necessary to prove our innocence . . . We want the Congress to send a message to the Department of Education to get their act together. . . . The Congress already has ample provisions in Public Law 95-561 for the Department to work with States in arriving at mutually satisfactory resolutions of problems. But the Department has chosen a rigid legalistic approach that denies true justice and early resolution of disagreements.

Over an extended period of time the State and local educational agencies produced a package of proposed legislative changes to remedy the problems they preceived in the auditing process. This spring, representatives from several of those agencies approached me with their package of audit amendments and urged that a hearing be held on the provisions and that they be included in H.R. 11.

We set up a hearing on this subject for April 10, 1984, during which four witnesses from the States of Illinois, Michigan, and Pennsylvania testified. They outlined their problems with the current auditing process and supported the proposed package of legislative changes.

In one case, which was cited at the hearing, in East St. Louis, IL, two schools burned down in 1 year and the children from those schools were placed in other schools as an emergency measure. As a result, the teacher-pupil ratio was increased sufficiently to violate the comparability requirements of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965. The programs were maintained and the services were delivered, but the Department of Education demanded that $500,000 be returned to the Federal Government. This amount represented all of the title I moneys received by the school district, although the actual amount covered in the lack of comparability was only $18,000. East St. Louis is one of the poorest areas in the country. The schools are run with over 90 percent State and Federal money. It was certainly never the intention of the Congress in enacting title I legislation that this school district be denied funds or be required to repay funds because of unavoidable emergencies.

Based on the information presented in the hearing, and the previous problems with the audit process, on April 25, when the Subcommittee on Elementary, Secondary, and Vocational Education marked up H.R. 11, the audit process changes were accepted without dissent or extended discussion as an amendment offered by me with the support of Congressman GOODLING.

However, section 809 in its current form simply goes too far. Shortly after it was added to the bill, representatives of civil rights groups approached us with serious concerns that the mechanism for enforcing compliance with existing laws and regulations would be severely undermined. The Secretary of Education, on the behalf of the Department's Inspector General, also contacted the committee expressing similar concerns. As a result, we held a series of meetings over the past 2½ months to draft more precise legislative language that will continue to provide relief to educational agencies but at the same time will ensure that those children targeted by the Congress to receive services from Federal programs will, in fact, receive those benefits.

Our substitute amendment contains the following provisions to satisfy the concerns of the civil rights groups as well as clarifications on several other points in section 809 which more precisely specify the intent of our amendment.

H.R. 11 as reported by the Committee on Education and Labor on May 2, 1984, provides that recovery of funds by the Secretary of Education will be sought after a final audit determination only in those cases "in which the disputed expenditures are not allowable under current law." The proposed substitute deletes the current law standard. Both the civil rights groups and the Department of Education Inspector General took strong exception to this provision. Such a standard would violate the basic principle that grantees should be held accountable for the expenditures of funds under the law as it was when they received the funds. A current law standard would treat differently grantees who received funds at the same time. Depending on when they were audited, grantees would be held to different program requirements based upon the state of the law when they were audited. A grant might be made on the basis of one set of standards, an audit conducted on a second, an administrative appeal heard on a third, and judicial review sought on a fourth.

H.R. 11 also amends section 452 of the General Education Provisions Act [GEPA] to require that recovery of funds by the Secretary will be sought after a final audit determination only in those cases "in which the disputed expenditures * * * are not in substantial compliance with the law." The proposed substitute changes the wording slightly to provide that recovery of funds will be sought only in those cases "in which the disputed expenditures do not comply substantially with the law." This change conforms the legislative language of the amendment to that used in other sections of GEPA. It is our intention that this provision apply to all final audit determinations currently pending before the Secretary or the Education Appeals Board and to all future final audit determinations made after the date of enactment of H.R. 11.

A crucial dimension to the "comply substantially" issue came to light during our negotiations. The Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals, in the case of Kentucky against Secretary of Education, decided that Kentucky need not repay allegedly misspent title I funds because: First, the statutory and regulatory requirements were ambiguous; second, the State was granted discretion in developing and administering a title I program; third, there was no evidence that the State acted in bad faith; and, fourth, and the State's program complied with a reasonable interpretation of the law. In sum, the court found that Kentucky had not failed to comply substantially with the law. The Department of Education has requested and been granted a review of the case by the Supreme Court.

While the comply substantially standard is reasonable in general, it is not the intention of the Congress to affect the pending case before the Supreme Court. Rather the Congress remains neutral on the merits of the Kentucky case, leaving it to the Court to decide.

The concept of comply substantially becomes particularly complex in terms of the supplement not supplant requirements of chapter 1 of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981. In order to comply totally with the supplement not supplant provision, a program would have to be provided after school because any program provided during the school day is technically supplanting instruction that would have otherwise been paid for from State and local funds. Certainly, the Congress never intended such a result.

The following example for chapter 1, issued by the Department of Education in June 1983, explicate strategies for providing instructional services for chapter 1 program participants that, from Congress' point of view, constitutes substantial, although less than full, compliance with the supplement not supplant provisions:

A local educational agency wishes to provide a special program of remedial instruction using a teacher aide for ten high school juniors assigned to one business math class, and for five high school sophomores in a separate compensatory math class which meets at the same time. The teacher aide spends half of each class period in each class, working individually with Chapter 1 participants to provide tutorial assistance on an as-needed basis. Such a project satisfies the supplement not supplant requirement if the classroom teacher, who would be responsible for providing instruction to the participating children in each case, continues to be responsible for tasks such as lesson planning and basic instruction, and meets with the teacher aide on a regular basis to ensure that the Chapter 1 participants are receiving a program of instruction which meets their individual needs.

EXAMPLE 2

Fifty third graders participate in a Chapter 1 project designed to help them improve their reading skills. All the children receive instruction in reading from their classroom teacher as part of their regular program of instruction. Under the Chapter 1 project, a special resource center is staffed by personnel paid with Chapter 1 funds; Chapter 1 participants are pulled out of class for one-half hour, five days per week to receive special assistance at the resource center. The time spent in the resource center totals 2.5 hours, or 12.5 percent of the 20 hours of instructional time the 50 participating children spend with their classroom teacher as part of their regular program of instruction. This project does not violate the supplement, not supplant requirement so long as the classroom teacher whose instruction the Chapter 1 project is designed to supplement continues to remain responsible for the program of instruction which is provided to the participating children and performs regular planning, instructional, and evaluative duties associated with those children. The classroom teacher must also work closely with the resource center personnel to ensure that a coordinated program of instruction is provided so as to meet the special needs of Chapter 1 participants.

It is possible for a replacement project to meet the supplement not supplant requirements under substantial compliance. A replacement project is one in which Chapter 1 services are provided to participating children in a different classroom setting or at a different time than would be the case if these children were not participating in the Chapter 1 project. The Chapter 1 project must also provide services which replace all or part of the course of instruction regularly provided to Chapter 1 participants with a distinct, self-contained Chapter 1 program which is particularly designed to meet participants' special education needs.

In order for such a project to meet the supplement not supplant requirement the agency must allocate to the Chapter 1 project the full-time equivalent number of non-Chapter 1 staff that—in the absence of the Chapter 1 service—would have been used to provide the non-Chapter 1 funded instructional service that is replaced with the Chapter 1 funded service or the agency can allocate to the Chapter 1 project an amount of non-Chapter 1 funds required to provide the number of non-Chapter 1 funded staff referred to above.

The proposed substitute further provides that section 122(a)(1) of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act be applied retroactively to all audit reviews made or pending on the date of enactment of this amendment. Section 122(a)(1), enacted in 1978, allows local educational agencies to designate any school attendance area in which "25 per centum of the children are from low-income families as an eligible school attendance area" if certain maintenance of effort requirements are met. In enacting this provision Congress was seeking to clarify that if an area were significantly low income, as demonstrated by 25 percent low income families, it would be allowed to be considered an eligible attendance area.

Similarly, our amendment provides that, for audit purposes, section 132 of title I be applied retroactively. This section, also enacted in 1978, provides an exemption from the requirement that Federal funds must supplement not supplant State and local funding. If the combination of State, local, and Federal funds in an area is sufficient to fund programs for educationally deprived children at the full level authorized, the local education agency may use any additional State and local funds for special programs and projects for educationally deprived children outside of the designated project area.

Applying sections 122(a)(1) and 132 retroactively to title I expenditures made prior to 1978 cures two of the most important problems that the current law standard proposed by the States was intended to address. In both cases, the theory justifying retroactivity is that in 1978 Congress was clarifying what it had assumed policy was prior to 1978. Therefore, the amendments should apply to expenditures made prior to 1978.

H.R. 11 requires that in appeals of final audit determinations to the Education Appeals Board the burden of proof shall be on the Secretary and that the Secretary must establish a prima facie case in issuing a final audit determination letter. By a prima facie case we mean that the Secretary must establish by a preponderance of the evidence that there is probable cause to believe that the disputed expenditure is not allowable. Additionally, the proposed amendment states that failure of the State or local educational agency to maintain adequate records or failure to allow the Secretary access to its records constitutes a prima facie case for the Secretary.

The proposed substitute spells out shifts in the burden of proof in a step-by-step process. While the proposed language regarding the appeals board process may seem unusually prescriptive, such specification is necessary because of the undisciplined manner in which appeals have been heard in the past, and the fact that the burden of proof has always rested on the States although their position is analogous to that of a defendant in civil proceedings.

Section 809 of H.R. 11 also provides that in appeals of final audit determination to the Education Appeals Board "discovery shall be available to all parties under procedures provided under rules 26 through and including 37 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedures." During our discussions on the amendment, it became clear that some of the discovery rules cited were irrelevant to education audits. Our amendment specifies more precisely which rules of discovery should be available. It also seeks to prevent unnecessary delays by providing that: "The period for the conduct of discovery shall not exceed 6 months—commencing on the date on which a panel of Board members is designated to conduct the review—except that such period may be exended for an additional 3 months if the Board, in its discretion, determines that exceptional circumstances warrant such an extension." Finally, the substitute allows the Board, at the request of any party, to establish a specific schedule for the conduct of discovery, subject to the time limitations previously specified.

In the case of a current and ongoing violation of the terms of an educational program, the Secretary is authorized by current law to withhold funds from the program. The proposed substitute provides that with respect to chapter 1, the Secretary may enter into a compliance agreement with the offending State or local educational agency in lieu of withholding funds. While this issue is not addressed in H.R. 11, all of the parties involved in our negotiations felt that this was a useful addition to GEPA because it gives the Secretary a positive alternative to withholding and because withholding is such a severe remedy that it is almost never used.

Both H.R 11 and the proposed amendment provide that the Secretary "shall" repay funds recovered following a final audit determination to the State or local educational agency if the agency submits a plan to spend the funds in accordance with the program requirements. However, current law which, was not changed by section 809, provides that the payback may not "exceed 75 percent" of the funds recovered. The proposed substitute provides that the Secretary shall repay "at least 75 percent" of these funds. The payback of 75 percent or more is contingent upon the Secretary's satisfaction with the State or local educational agency's plan. Specifically, the Secretary must, under the mandates of section 456 of GEPA, determine that:

(1) The practices or procedures of the State or local agency that resulted in the audit determination have been corrected, and that the State or the local agency is in all other respects in compliance with the requirement of that program;

(2) The State or local agency has submitted to the Secretary a plan for the use of those funds pursuant to the requirements of that program and, to the extent possible, for the benefit of the population that was affected by the failure to comply or by the misexpenditures that resulted in the audit exception; and

(3) The use of those funds in accordance with that plan would serve to achieve the purposes of the program under which the funds were originally granted.

. . . Any payments by the Secretary under this section shall be subject to such other conditions as the Secretary deems necessary to accomplish the purposes of the affected programs, including—

(1) The submission of periodic reports on the use of funds provided under this section; and

(2) Consultation by the State or local agency with parents or representatives of the population that will benefit from the payments.

The amendment we are offering also allows the States to enter into compliance agreements with local educational agencies found to be misusing Federal program funds. This tool for ensuring program compliance was contained in title I legislation, but was repealed by the 1981 Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act. It is a useful mechanism which allows States to stop program abuses and thereby prevent auditing problems. H.R. 11 did not address this provision.

Finally, H.R. 11 provides that in lieu of repayment of misused funds following a final audit determination, the Secretary may enter into a compliance agreement with the offending State or local educational agency to ensure program compliance. Our proposed substitute deletes this provision. A compliance agreement is not relevant as a cure for a misuse of funds which occurred in the past and which was discovered through an audit. The requirements of repayment of misused funds are the only teeth in the auditing process. This provision, as it currently exists in section 809, would render largely meaningless the entire process of ensuring program compliance through audits.

We urge our colleagues to support this amendment and once and for all end the serious problems that have plagued the audit process over the past several years. This is not a partisan amendment, nor a partisan problem. The problem has existed for many years under administrations of both parties.

This solution is long overdue and deserves our attention and your support.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I would like to compliment the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD] and his staff for the fine job they have done over the past few months to perfect and improve this complicated audit procedure. I am proud to have played some role in this improvement. As my colleague has stated, this amendment achieves a balance between needed relief for State and local education agencies and the concern presented by the Secretary of Education and various civil rights groups.

I would hope we would accept this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. KILDEE

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KILDEE: Page 75, strike out lines 5 through 23 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 513. (a)(1) Section 302(b) of the Indian Elementary and Secondary School Assistance Act (20 U.S.C. 241aa(b)) is amended by striking out "entitled to" and inserting in lieu thereof "eligible to receive".

(2) Section 303(a)(1) of such Act is amended by striking out "For the purpose of computing the amount to which a local educational agency is entitled under this title for any fiscal year ending prior to October 1, 1983," and inserting in lieu thereof "For any fiscal year ending prior to October 1, 1989,".

(3) Section 303(a)(2)(A) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(2)(A) From the sums appropriated under section 307(a) for any fiscal year, the Secretary shall allocate to each local educational agency which has an application approved under this title an amount which bears the same ratio to such sums as the product of (i) the number of eligible Indian children (as determined under paragraph (1)), multiplied by (ii) the average per pupil expenditure per agency (as determined under subparagraph (C)), bears to the sum of such products for all such local educational agencies.".

(4) Section 303(a)(2)(B) of such Act is amended by striking out "entitled to receive" and inserting in lieu thereof "eligible to receive".

(5) Section 303 of such Act is further amended—

(A) by inserting "(1)" after "(b)" in subsection (b);

(B) by striking out "on the basis of entitlements computed" each place it appears in subsections (b) and (c); and

(C) by striking out all after "financial assistance" in subsection (b) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"in accordance with the provisions of this title to schools which—

"(A) are located on or near reservations; and

"(B)(i) are not local educational agencies; or

"(ii) have not been local educational agencies for more than three years.

"(2) The requirements of clause (A) of paragraph (1) shall not apply to any school serving Indian children in California or Oklahoma.".

(6) Section 305(b)(2)(B)(ii) of such Act is amended by inserting "written" before "approval of a committee".

(7) Section 307 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS; ADJUSTMENTS

"SEC. 307. (a) For the purpose of making payments under this title, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years ending prior to October 1, 1989.

"(b) The Secretary may reallocate, in such manner as will best assist in advancing the purposes of this title, any amount which the Secretary determines, based upon estimates made by local educational agencies, will not be needed by any such agency to carry out its approved project.".

(8) Such Act is further amended by striking out "commissioner" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "Secretary.".

Mr. KILDEE (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I am offering this amendment to the Indian Education Act to remedy a situation which has developed around the projected cost level for this program. When the Congressional Budget Office gave its cost estimate of this program for the committee's report on H.R. 11, it gave a figure of over $1 billion for each of the next 5 years. The Congressional Budget Office arrived at this estimate by assuming full funding of the statutory authorization, which is phrased in terms of number of students times the average per pupil expenditure for the State involved. As those of us who work with this program, the Indian education in general know, this figure has no relationship at all to the actual state of the funding for this program. Funding for this program has never exceeded $81.68 million, in fiscal year 1980, and for the current fiscal year, it stands at $68.78 million. In other words, the funding for this program has never equaled 10 percent of its authority and there is no reason to believe that this state of affairs will change in the near future. The language of the authorization has only served to set out a basis for proration of the funds appropriated.

However, regardless of these facts, a question has arisen surrounding this Congressional Budget Office projection. For purposes not related to the merits of the program, the authorization for this program has been challenged as not "responsible", and as a "cruel hoax on our Indian population." This attack has caused unnecessary controversy. It has caused an otherwise blameless and noteworthy program to be challenged. In fact, it has placed it in some jeopardy.

Such debate is counterproductive. We need to stop wasting our time debating philosophical points or "what ifs" and move ahead with the programs needed to provide education services to Indian students. Indian people have not been misled by either false expectations or false interest expressed on their behalf. They know the true state of affairs and they want the program reauthorized and protected. To this end, I offer this amendment which will change the authorization to "such sums as are necessary." According to the Congressional Budget Office review of this proposal, this will reduce the Congressional Budget Office cost estimate to about $100 million. I want to be sure that it is understood that this amendment has no practical effect on the level of funding for this program. It will still be up to the annual appropriations process to determine the amount of money available for title IV. Also, this amendment carries with it no implications with respect to past or future patterns. It is offered solely to insulate this program from needless controversy and to move this program forward.

I have shared and discussed this amendment with a number of Indian organizations and representatives and they have agreed with the concerns expressed and the remedy which I am proposing. I have also shared and discussed the amendment with the gentleman from Pennsylvania and he has agreed to support it.

I urge its adoption.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDEE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GOODLING. First of all, I would like to congratulate the gentleman from Michigan for his fiscal responsibility. He has now whacked $1 billion off, which I think got there primarily because there was some confusion as to how you arrived at the figure.

But I am correct in saying that you certainly have not hurt the program, have you, because I believe you have increased the budget over this year's spending by $80 million?

Mr. KILDEE. I think the gentleman knows that I would not hurt this program which is very near and dear to me. I think you and I both agree, and your voting record has always supported this, that we do have both moral, legal, and treaty obligations to the Indians of this country.

This amendment really clarifies the intent and clarifies the record of appropriations for this bill.

So, while technically it does remove the $1 billion which the Congressional Budget Office gave as the cost estimate for this, never has it ever approached in expenditure that figure. As a matter of fact, the largest amount ever spent for the Indian education in general has been $81.68 million in 1980, and in the current fiscal year it is $68.78 million.

Mr. GOODLING. So you are going to spend $30 million more.

Mr. KILDEE. I would hope that maybe we could get $100 million out of that, which would be an increase, but we are, in effect, lowering the authorization from the $1 billion down to "such sums."

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, we have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. ERLENBORN

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ERLENBORN: On page 88, beginning on line 3, strike out all of section 801 through page 89, line 18, and redesignate the succeeding sections accordingly.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer this amendment to strike section 801 of the bill. Section 801 reverses the reorganization of the Department of Education effected by Secretary Bell in August 1983.

This action not only undoes the lawful action of the Secretary of Education, but it ties the hands of any future Secretary. No matter how well intended the motives may have been, this does not excuse bad law, and I would like to address the philosophy of governmental reorganization just for a moment.

I have served on the Committee on Government Operations the whole of the 20 years that I have been in Congress, and most all of them, practically 19½ of those years, I have served on the subcommittee that has jurisdiction over the executive branch reorganization. I have, of course, studied over the course of the years in that committee the Hoover Commission report and other reports of various commissions over the course of many decades that gave the philosophy of government organization.

What we should do, and traditionally have done in the Congress, is to authorize a department or agency to vest the Secretary of that department or the head of the agency with the authority to organize the department and reorganize the department from time to time to best carry out the functions that are delegated to the department or agency.

It is considered, and I think for good reason, a bad way to organize government for us to specify legislatively how each of these departments and agencies are to be organized, down to the detail of how many sub-Cabinet officers, and what the jurisdiction of the sub-Cabinet officers might be. We do designate the number. We do have to have control of that. But the jurisdiction of the various sub-Cabinet officers is rightly left to the head of the agency or department.

What this amendment in the bill does is to reverse the exercise, the lawful exercise, by Secretary Bell of this authority to organize as he sees best to carry out the functions of his department, to specify in permanent law the organization with the Department of Education. I think that is bad policy, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is attempting to strike the section that I put in the bill in the committee, and we debated this in the subcommittee and in the full committee. The gentleman took the position that he has a duty to protect the existing bureaucracy over there from meddling by the Congress.

Very frankly, it is our duty to prevent them from changing the priorities that we establish by legislation, by simply reorganizing in a different way. If this was simply a minor inconvenience to somebody over there, I would not bother, but this is an argument that did not start with the Reagan administration. It is an argument that we have had with preceding administrations about the failure of some bureaucrats to be able to understand the real nature of specific programs.

For example, the migrant education program is, in the theory of some people, an elementary and secondary compensatory program so it really ought to be under the office administering the chapter 1 compensatory program.

In any event, the gentleman knows this because he was on the committee that wrote the legislation, when the Department of Education was created. At that time a number of us who were concerned about this pattern that we had had in the past of tinkering each time there was a change in secretaries or commissioners insisted as a condition to supporting that reorganization bill for the creation of the Department that we have these three areas of responsibility maintain some identity that would keep them from being submerged and become secondary in the minds of the bureaucracy over there. We did not want them to get lost and fall through the cracks. The three are migrant education, women's equity, and civil rights.

All three of those have been, by just drawing new boxes on a chart, changed from the position they had, which had them reporting to an assistant secretary, to becoming subordinate pieces of a much larger shop. They have been reduced in size and, indeed, they have been buried in the bureaucracy. There is very little confidence by the people who are contacting the Department for reactions in those three areas, that they are contacting the right people or that they are contacting people who are indeed spending very much of their time concerned with the importance of these programs.

So it is not just merely a matter of quibbling with the Department on how they ought to organize themselves; it is the fact that, by what they call a reorganization and streamlining, they take areas like civil rights that we consider important and priority items for them to be working on and bury them in the backroom. This is designed to return to where we were prior to the reorganization last year. This is not aimed at a particular administration, and it is not unusual.

The gentleman says it is not good policy for us to legislate positions. Well, I want to suggest that I am the chairman of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee and every committee in this House is legislating new positions and new titles for me all the time, and no matter how hard my staff tries to keep track of it, everybody has a new idea. Somebody is doing something in the Defense Department and another committee is doing something in Interior and I have got to pick up the mess over there in the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service afterward and figure out how to meet all the requirements. Every piece of legislation that comes through here that means anything puts somebody in charge and says where they are going to be in the bureaucracy and then we have to unscramble it later.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. FORD of Michigan was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. FORD of Michigan. In the old days, we used to have the help of H.R. Gross, the great gentleman from Iowa, who you will recall used to get on the floor when bills were going through and call your attention to the fact that we had something called a limit on supergrades and every committee kept giving us more supergrades all the time. Then we have to find some way to take them away from somebody else and shift them around.

So the idea of an authorizing committee determining where in a department a program should be administered is not new. That is, as a matter of fact, more of a tradition than an exception.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I just wanted to suggest that the gentleman said a few minutes ago that the other authorizing committees are always designating new offices and new titles, and so forth, and that is all dumped on the gentleman from Michigan and he has to make some sense out of the mess.

I just wanted to encourage the gentleman not to add to the mess that he has to manage.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Let me just point out to the gentleman that last September we had joint hearings between the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, which properly has jurisdiction over these people as Federal employees, and the Committee on Education and Labor. In 2 days of hearings, we made it very clear that we were dealing with not only the problem for the programs created, but the problem for the career employees created by this precipitous movement of their positions. Their salaries are protected, but they have just been put in the backroom with not much opportunity to worry about women's equity, civil rights, or migrant education.

So I urge a vote against the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ERLENBORN].

The amendment was rejected.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. PACKARD

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PACKARD: Page 91, beginning on line 15, strike out all of section 806 through line 23 and redesignate the succeeding sections accordingly.

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest the gentleman go ahead and state the substance of the amendment, and then we will discuss it.

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Chairman, the 1978 Hatch amendment to the General Education Provisions Act provided for inspection by parents of "all instructional material which will be used in connection with any research or experimentation program or project."

The Department of Education recently proposed regulations under the Hatch amendment.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT] and I offered section 806 as an amendment to H.R. 11 in committee because we were concerned that the proposed regulations did not require that a parent or student who had a complaint under the Hatch amendment must first pursue local and State remedies before appealing to the Department of Education.

The Department has added this requirement to the regulations it proposes and, therefore, our amendment becomes redundant and unnecessary.

Since we have no further objection to the Department's actions, we are offering this amendment to strike section 806.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. PACKARD. I will be happy to yield to the chairman.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, let me state that we are thoroughly in accord with the gentleman's amendment, but the Department has not yet issued the regulations. Could the gentleman give us any assurance that those regulations are going to be issued?

Mr. PACKARD. I have spoken to the Department today. They have read the regulations to me and I can assure the chairman that we will work with the Secretary of Education to make certain that they are published and, when they are, we will certainly be informing the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACKARD. I will be happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I have also spoken with the Department and the Department has assured me, and I assure the gentleman, that they will hold to their word and publish the regulations.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, under those circumstances, we accept the amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACKARD. I will be happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I do support the gentleman's amendment and believe it is a good addition to this bill and thank the gentleman for offering it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. PACKARD].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. CRAIG

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows: Page 91, after line 14, insert the following new section (and redesignate the succeeding sections accordingly):

MERIT PAY

SEC. 806. Part B of the General Education Provisions Act is amended by inserting after section 420 (20 U.S.C. 1228) the following new section:

"PROHIBITION AGAINST THE USE OF FEDERAL FUNDS TO PAY SALARIES NOT BASED ON JOB PERFORMANCE

"SEC. 420A. No funds expended under any applicable program may be used to pay the salaries of educational personnel unless such salaries are based predominantly on job performance.".

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Chairman, I will be brief because it is a brief amendment, but a most important one that I think speaks very clearly to the issue of pay, being recognized as meritorious, based on educational job performance dealing, of course, with the education dollars of the Federal Government that we are dealing with here in H.R. 11.

The amendment mandates that any Federal education funds spent on salaries must be based on job performance.

The amendment would allow federally assisted salaries to be paid on other criteria as well, including but not limited to seniority, education or other training, and market demand.

It excludes no other salary criteria. It only demands that merit or job performance be predominant.

The amendment mandates no particular merit pay system. They want the flexibility of the individual States in this decision.

We only believe that it is important to elevate the quality of performance in the classrooms of our Nation, that we recognize the value of job performance pay.

The term "educational personnel" essentially means classroom teachers. This is not directed at research, administrative, clerical, maintenance, or construction personnel paid wholly or partially by Federal education funds, but only those classroom instructors that may have a part or some of their salary paid for through the Federal dollar.

We believe this is consistent dealing with the General Educational Provisions Act, 20 United States Code 1232-B, and I am primarily referring to Federal dollars that go into construction of educational facilities where the Department of Labor deals with prevailing wages in determining certain salary limits beyond the ability of the local entities to make those determinations.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

An amendment of this nature has never been offered before the Committee on Education and Labor. It requires considerable study to determine all its ramifications, but let me state at the outset that it would destroy the morale of thousands of teachers and thousands of administrators that are involved in the Federal programs. It would just ignore seniority completely.

It is curious if we adopt an amendment of this type why we are not asking to apply this same requirement to measuring the job that we are doing here in the Congress, pay some Congressmen so much money, other Congressmen so much money, so much less.

An amendment of this type will just destroy the morale of all of our Federal programs of the people who are participating in the Federal programs.

I would hope that no one would vote for this amendment. If an amendment of this type is ever needed to a certain specific group, it should be studied thoroughly in committee.

I hope everybody will oppose this amendment.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, I yield.

Mr. CRAIG. The chairman referred just a moment ago in his discussion to the question of seniority. I think the wording of the amendment and my opening remarks addressed the question or the issue of seniority. The word "predominantly," I think, speaks, of course, to the question not of job performance, but clearly allows the flexibility that a State ought to have and certainly my intent is not to bind local or State control in this area.

But offers that question of seniority as part of the total package in considering the pay issue. It only says that job performance must be part of it; would the chairman not agree with that?

Mr. PERKINS. Let me ask the gentleman who would make judgment here as to how much a Congressman should be paid if we adopted the amendment similar to what you are proposing that will affect administrators and supervisors and teachers involved in the Federal programs? Who would make that judgment?

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that maybe some of us would be paid more and some of us would be paid less based on our job performance.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that we all vote against this amendment.

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words and to oppose the amendment.

The amendment appears on its face not to really do very much. But, indeed, it raises a very troublesome problem for me. If you picture people working in programs in schools with Federal funds as being wholly paid by the Federal Government, then this amendment starts to make some sense. But, indeed, that does not happen. That rarely, if ever, actually occurs.

If you go into your area you will find that a vocational education teacher at a high school, for example, would be in a program receiving some of its money from your State funds, some of it from Federal funds, and they may indeed, if it is a target school, be receiving some title I money. And if it is a person teaching the handicapped in vocational education it could be receiving another type of education money.

By applying this limitation to the GEPA provisions of the act, it applies to all Federal education programs. A Head Start teacher might be teaching 1 hour a day in Head Start and the rest of the day teaching kindergartners. Or, a language teacher might be teaching 1 hour a day in a title I program for slow readers, and teaching the rest of the day in the regular program.

We would tell that school district that because they are going to use some Federal money to pay a teacher for some part of the day they have to adopt a pay system that satisfies the Secretary of Education that no funds will be expended under any applicable program to pay the salaries of the educational personnel whose salaries are not based predominantly on job performance.

When you write a simple little provision like this in the act you have to think of what the regulation is going to look like to implement it. It means that the Department will have to write a definition for what "predominant job performance" pay systems are, and then a school district will have to certify in some form of audit that they are paying each teacher who gets paid directly or indirectly with Federal funds predominantly on that basis.

I do not know what that is an alternative to in the real world because I was under the impression that teachers are now paid predominantly on job performance.

Job retention is where seniority becomes a problem. It does not have anything to do with pay except for the early stages of a teacher's career when they are getting in-grade raises because of a teacher contract that provides some seniority adjustments. But for the most part those are not really very substantial.

I really think that the gentleman has an idea that is worth exploring, to find some carrot to put at the end of the stick to attract people. Some Governors have already taken the initiative to do this, to taking a different look at how they attract and encourage the retention of the best in the teaching profession.

But I think that it could be very difficult for us now to impose on the thousands of school districts in the country some kind of a system of trying to figure out what they are going to have to do and what kind of books they will have to keep to make the Federal auditors happy when they come around in 2 years and ask them if they were complying with the law.

So I think that the amendment really ought to be withdrawn. If not, it should be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. CRAIG].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CRAIG) there were—ayes 15, noes 17.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COATS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. HARRISON], having assumed the chair, Mr. MCHUGH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 11) to extend through fiscal year 1989 the authorization of appropriations for certain education programs, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

REQUEST TO MAKE IN ORDER ONLY CERTAIN AMENDMENTS TO H.R. 11 IN TOMORROW'S SESSION

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when we reconvene tomorrow, only the following amendments will be in order:

Two Goodling amendments to limit the authorizations; and, second, a prayer amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COATS].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

NATIONAL TOURISM WEEK, 1985

(Mr. RITTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, today I am pleased to announce that I am introducing a new House joint resolution designating the week beginning on May 19, 1985, as "National Tourism Week." Earlier this year we celebrated the first National Tourism Week during the week of May 27–June 2 and it was a resounding success. Here in Washington and all across the country, national and State celebrations took place honoring the breadth of our cultural and natural heritages and the freedom we have in the United States to explore these treasures through our leisure time and our business and professional travel in activities.

It is fitting that we again set aside a week to focus on the contribution of the travel and tourism industry to this Nation's economy, employment, and goodwill throughout the world. When viewed as a single industry, it constituted the second largest retail industry in 1982. Our latest sources show that it generated 4.5 million jobs, paying $41 billion in wages and salaries, and producing $20 billion in Federal, State, and local tax revenues. Then there are all the jobs related to creating the facilities, the transportation systems, the communications and, in general, the physical dimensions of the travel and tourism industry.

I am pleased to say that I am introducing this bill with 145 original cosponsors and would like to urge my colleagues who have not done so to cosponsor this bill to help celebrate an industry which directly benefits every congressional district in the country. More importantly, it is an industry which contributes substantially to personal growth and education and to intercultural appreciation of the geography, history, and people of the United States.

I also want to take this opportunity to express my appreciation to the distinguished Member from Tennessee, BILL BONER, for his leadership in chairing the Congressional Travel and Tourism Caucus which strongly supports this bill and was instrumental in promoting National Tourism Week 1984.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to include the text of the bill for the RECORD:

H.J. RES. 629

Joint resolution to designate the week beginning on May 19, 1985, as "National Tourism Week"

Whereas tourism is vital to the United States, contributing to economic prosperity, employment, and international balance of payments;

Whereas travelers from the United States and other countries spent $255,000,000,000 in the United States during 1982, directly producing four and one-half million jobs, $41,000,000,000 in wages and salaries, and $20,000,000,000 in Federal, State, and local tax revenues;

Whereas, if viewed as a single retail industry, the travel and tourism sector of the economy constituted the second largest retail industry in the United States in 1982, as measured by business receipts;

Whereas tourism contributes substantially to personal growth and education and to intercultural appreciation of the geography, history, and people of the United States;

Whereas tourism enhances international understanding and good will; and

Whereas, as people throughout the world become more aware of the outstanding cultural and recreational resources available in the United States, travel and tourism will become an increasingly important aspect of the lives of the people of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week beginning on May 19, 1985, is designated as "National Tourism Week", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

● Mr. BONER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the measure introduced by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania. I do so to explain that when the first National Tourism Week resolution was introduced, we hoped to increase awareness of what tourism means to the U.S. economy, to honor the men and women who supply the services for the traveling public and to praise the travel businesses that employ over 4.5 million Americans.

I can tell you that even though this Congress passes many commemorative weeks each year, rarely have I seen the excitement and enthusiasm that was generated by National Tourism Week 1984. States and cities launched campaigns to explain the benefits of tourism to their communities and to welcome new travelers to their areas. Folk festivals, craft shows, welcome centers, and billboards across the country proclaimed National Tourism Week as their own. On a larger scale, national advertising campaigns extolled the worldwide events our country is hosting this year, the World's Fair and the summer Olympics.

Virtually everyone got in on the act; 38 Governors signed their States' version of National Tourism Week and all of the States used the national campaign to promote travel advantages and destinations in their areas.

Although tourism is our country's second largest employer, it is not like other large industries in this country. Because the travel and tourism industry is made up of about 1 million individual businesses, it tends to be fragmented. The overriding accomplishment of this legislation was that it helped pull together all parties involved in tourism and to unify their efforts to promote their product—travel.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert for the RECORD a listing compiled by the U.S. Travel and Tourism Administration which shows how each State celebrated with special week, so that each Member of this Chamber can see why they should join us in support of National Tourism Week 1985.

It gives me great pleasure to join the 145 original cosponsors of this legislation, today, which will designate the week beginning May 19, 1985, as our second commemoration in honor of tourism. If this legislation can be passed before we adjourn this year, we believe we will give the States, cities, and tourism industry the time they need to plan appropriate ceremonies around the event. I urge all Members of the House to join me today in support of this resolution.

At this point in the RECORD I include the following:

The city of Mobile, Alabama and the Mobile Area Chamber of Commerce and Convention and Visitors Council hosted a luncheon commemorating NTW, using U.S.T.T.A.'s slogan "Travel . . . The Perfect Freedom." Governor George C. Wallace proclaimed Tourism Appreciation Week in conjunction with National Tourism Week.

Alaska celebrated NTW by proclaiming "Tourism Month" and programs hosting international tour operators and press were planned for the entire month of May. An inspection tour for 20 Japanese travel writers was followed by a group of 12 top German editors and publishers. Anchorage held hospitality seminars for the 5500 residents who work directly with visitors.

Governor Bruce Babbitt of Arizona signed a state proclamation for National Tourism Week at a news conference for the travel and tourism industry.

A "River Fest" kicked-off Arkansas' tourism week with a wide range of arts, crafts, bands and childrens' displays. Governor Bill Clinton issues a state tourism proclamation.

California cities jumped on the bandwagon to commemorate NTW. Palm Springs Mayor Frank Bogert signed a city tourism week proclamation. The Palm Springs Convention and Visitors Bureau hosted a program designed to acquaint community members with the profession of special events planning. Mayor William Gissler proclaimed Santa Clara Tourism Week urging the people of the Mission City to observe it with appropriate activities and ceremonies. Anaheim Area Visitor and Convention Bureau planned a tourism salute during a California Angels baseball game at Anaheim Stadium and a media campaign featuring public service announcements on local radio and tv stations. Highlights also included: proclamations from the Anaheim City Council and the Orange County Board of Supervisors, distribution of a fact sheet highlighting economic statistics on tourism in the weekly pay envelopes of all hotel employees, and the unfurling of marquee signs recognizing tourism week throughout the city. Sacramento hosted an International Summer Festival and its Mayor issued a city tourism week proclamation.

Colorado State Patrolmen and the Colorado Division of Tourism joined together to promote safe travel. Each day during National Tourism Week a motorist was pulled over and crowned "Tourist of the Day," receiving a complimentary tourist package. Governor Richard Lamm joined with the travel industry to host a reception at his mansion in honor of major league baseball franchise owners and executives. Over 20 executives flew in from across the country. The Governor also took this opportunity to issue a state tourism proclamation.

Connecticut highway information centers opened during the week of May 27 commemorating National Tourism Week. The Governor's Annual Travel Achievement Awards Ceremony was held followed by a signing ceremony for a state tourism week proclamation.

Governor du Pont proclaimed May 27-June 2 Delaware State Tourism Week and their first special event was a "Steam Salute to Veterans" in the Brandywine Valley. Brandywine College's Travel and Tourism department offered an evening seminar series open to the public and Brandywine Valley celebrated NTW with a series of cultural, historical and travel oriented displays. Milford Chamber of Commerce held its annual World Weakfish Tournament; in Dover there was a children's show on the green and Delaware State Parks made visitors aware of the important role tourism plays through their regular programs.

Florida Governor Bob Graham commemorated NTW with the announcement of a fall conference on tourism accompanied by an effort to increase awareness of the economic importance of tourism.

Governor Joe Frank Harris of Georgia issued a state tourism proclamation and honored the Georgia Hospitality Employee of the Year. The Georgia Department of Industry and Trade put out two NTW kits, one geared for public service organizations and the other for television and newspapers. In addition, a state tourism policy was adopted.

Governor George Ariyoshi proclaimed the week of May 27 Hawaii Tourism Week and encouraged the state to celebrate with appropriate activities.

The Chicago Convention and Tourism Bureau served coffee to visitors in the Water Tower Visitor Center and handed out map/guide brochures that people might send to friends or relatives interested in visiting Illinois. The Illinois Office of Tourism worked with the news media on public service announcements and editorials, and with the Chicago Cubs and White Sox to flash NTW announcements on their scoreboards. The 1984 Governor's Conference on Tourism addressed the need for the Illinois legislature to increase the State's tourism advertising budget to compete with neighboring states and issued a state tourism proclamation.

The state tourism office in Indiana issued a serious of press releases and utilized local attractions to bring attention to National Tourism Week.

Governor Terry Branstad of Iowa signed a state tourism proclamation as well as Kansas Governor John Carlin, both generating many news articles on the economic impact of tourism.

Kentucky Governor Martha Layne Collins hosted a National Tourism Week luncheon in the Executive Mansion for seventy members of the travel and tourism industry. A state tourism week proclamation was also issued.

"Louisiana Tourism Day" was celebrated at the Louisiana World Exposition with travel and tourism industry leaders from across the state invited to attend a special reception/aquacade show and a private viewing of the Louisiana exhibit at the fair. Governor Edwin Edwards proclaimed Louisiana Tourism Day in conjunction with NTW.

Governor Joseph Brennan held a reception at his Mansion May 29, for members of the Maine Vacation Travel Commission to thank them for the contributions the travel industry makes to the economy. The highlight of the day was a signing ceremony proclaiming Maine Tourism Week. Information personnel across the state were divided into four groups and escorted on familiarization trips acquainting them with various regions of the state.

Governor Hughes of Maryland issued a state proclamation and city proclamations were issued by the Mayors of Ocean City, Baltimore and Annapolis.

Massachusetts Governor Michael Dukakis signed a proclamation declaring "Tourism Week" and hosted a special State House ceremony and reception on May 30.

Governor James Blanchard held Michigan's First Annual Governor's Conference on Tourism and issued a proclamation for state tourism week.

The Minneapolis Convention and Visitor Commission sponsored a second annual Super FAM and trade fair. NTW also marked the commencement of Minnesota's new horse and carriage livery service and the "Artsfest" sponsored by Walker Art Center. These events were promoted through news releases sent to national trade magazines. Minnesota Tourism Week was launched with a Twins baseball game.

The Missouri Highway Patrol and the Division of Tourism joined forces to sponsor "Operation: Thank You." During NTW, troopers served as goodwill ambassadors, greeting out-of-state motorists and presenting them a bag of Missouri souvenirs, brochures and travel discounts.

A state proclamation was issued with the slogan "Nebraska Tourism Week . . . Celebrate Nebraska" and the week was kicked off with a carnival to welcome visitors. Major rest areas offered refreshments and local entertainment. The Mayor of Omaha issued a city tourism proclamation with all posters and press releases featuring the slogan "Travel . . . The Perfect Freedom". The Mayor also hosted a luncheon in honor of the travel and tourism industry and special mention was made of the economic impact of the travel industry.

Governor Bryan of Nevada held proclamation signing ceremonies in Carson City and Las Vegas, presenting international tourism marketing awards to Frontier Travel & Tours of Carson City and Desert Inn Country Club and Spa of Las Vegas.

Albuquerque, New Mexico distributed "Host Survival Kits" containing maps and promotional discounts.

In the Big Apple, New York City, they honored their Courtesy Awards Winner in a special ceremony on May 23. Just in case people missed their public service messages on radio and tv, the New York Convention and Visitors Bureau arranged for an NTW salute to be flashed on Diamondvision's giant new video screen at 47th Street and Broadway. NTW information centers received NTW commemorative buttons.

North Carolina Governor Jim Hunt declared the week of May 27, North Carolina Tourism Week and an economic awareness campaign was initiated to educate the public on the importance of tourism. Several front page stories on tourism appeared in the business sections of major newspapers.

A two-day Governor's Conference on Tourism kicked off North Dakota Tourism Week and the highlight was the issuance of official tourism week proclamations by the state and 12 cities.

The tourism community of Greater Cincinnati celebrated NTW with its "Invite a Friend" event on Fountain Square, May 29. Fifty attractions, hotels and restaurants had booths on the Square promoting their properties and giving out post cards to Cincinnatians to invite a friend to vacation there. A bank of six telephones was set up for long distance calls to invite friends to Ohio.

"On to Oklahoma! America's Frontier Lake State" slogan was developed to promote Oklahoma's abundance of water and water based recreational opportunities available to visitors.

Oregon Governor Atiyeh used National Tourism Week to hold a news conference and announce winners of their statewide tourism photo and poster contest.

"Travel Month" was organized by Pennsylvania featuring hospitality seminars, a travel writers familiarization tour, a million dollar campaign with Coca-Cola utilizing the state slogan "You've Got A Friend in Pennsylvania", and a series of press releases generating tourism story ideas. Pennsylvania also promoted the slogan "Greet a Visitor, Make a Friend."

Blackstone Valley, Rhode Island joined with the U.S. Department of Interior to hold meetings on ways to upgrade the tourist areas, i.e., bicycle trails and parks.

South Dakota issued a state tourism proclamation and Kay Riordan Steuerwald, President of Mountain Company, printed 5,000 large NTW buttons for local distribution. South Dakota utilized NTW to promote their National High School Rodeo finals and launched a new set of tourism information boards throughout the state.

Governor Pedro P. Tenorio of Saipan declared the week of May 27 tourism week for the Commonwealth of the Northern Marianas. It was highlighted with an art exhibition, skits by students, sports events and training programs covering the impact of tourism on the CNMI economy.

For the folks in Nashville, free lemonade was provided at rest stops and some advice for motorists highlighted Tennessee Tourism Week.

Texans emphasized their state motto "Friendship" during Texas Tourism Week. The Dallas Convention and Visitors Bureau hosted a seminar and luncheon for travel industry leaders celebrating Mayor Starke Taylor's proclamation of Dallas Tourism Week.

Salt Lake City, Utah Mayor Ted Wilson issued a city-wide proclamation for tourism week.

Vermont Governor Richard A. Snelling proclaimed May 27 "Vermont Tourism Day" and encouraged commercial attractions to offer special discount prices or free gifts. The Vermont Society of Travel Agents, in conjunction with Vermont Transit, sponsored a promotional contest whose winners received a free bus tour package.

Governor Juan Luis of the Virgin Islands prepared an NTW proclamation. A water carnival with boat races and a boat parade featured the hundreds of charter boats located in the Virgin Islands; school children were involved in preparing arts and crafts suitable for "Made in the Virgin Islands" labels for sale to tourists; and the business community was involved in a public awareness compaign dealing with the impact of tourism on the lives of the Virgin Islanders.

Governor Robb of Virginia signed a Certificate of Recognition for Virginia Tourism Week, with leaders of the Virginia tourism industry on hand. Statewide television and radio public service announcements, press releases, and fact sheets highlighting tourism's economic contribution to Virginia were also made available. The Richmond convention and Visitors Bureau organized a "Riches of Richmond Treasure Hunt" special tour; Washington County Chamber of Commerce and the City of Alexandria issued local resolutions commemorating NTW; and tent card displays were printed and distributed to local and regional tourism centers, leaders, highway welcome centers and state chambers of commerce. Historic Lexington Visitor Center presented certificates to all visitors, making them honorary citizens for the city.

Governor John Spellman of Washington proclaimed "May Tourism Month" and the state busied itself with TIA's 1984 International Pow Wow.

West Virginia kicked off their NTW celebration with the Governor's Travel Fair, May 6-11.

Governor Earl proclaimed "Wisconsin Tourism Week" and the state advertised with a public service announcement narrated by Lt. Governor Flynn using the U.S.T.T.A. slogan "Travel . . . The Perfect Freedom." The Wisconsin Association of Convention and Visitors Bureaus released "Escape to Wisconsin" music for radio and TV spots and the Turner Broadcasting Systems' "American Heritage Series" Wisconsin segment pretelecast screening and reception was held May 30.

Wyoming Governor Ed Herschler signed a state tourism proclamation and the state participated in the Tri-State Travel Conference.●

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. [Mr. HARRISON]. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

AGENDA FOR AMERICA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, last evening the President of the United States went before the American people and suggested that this House ought to try to enact some major legislation prior to our adjournment this year. The President suggested, I think truthfully, that there are many items before this House that need to be acted on before Congress can really regard its work as done, items that have the support of the vast majority of the American people, that have support in virtually every region of the country, that has support by many of us in this country, who are thwarted by the leadership of this House in terms of debating those issues in the House.

Items, for example, like the balanced budget amendment to the Constitution. The President recognizes, as many of us did, that in order to have the kind of fiscal discipline that will get us to a balanced budget, we are going to have the kind of constitutional amendment that exists in over 40 States of the Union that are able to maintain balanced budgets because they impose such a fiscal device.

Items such as the IRA's for housewives, the President suggested that individual retirement accounts ought to be available to women who choose to stay at home and take care of their children, to men who choose to stay at home to take care of their children.

So to these people who have decided not to go out in the working world, but rather to stay at home, the President suggested we ought to have IRA accounts made available to them through legislation brought before this House before we adjourn.

The President also suggested last evening that we need to act on the tuition tax credit issue to assure that our parochial schools are adequately funded not by money coming out of the public trough but by money that comes from the people of the country who then would be able to get a tax break for that contribution that they make to their own children's education.

The President suggested that we ought to move ahead on his crime-fighting package. Across the length and breadth of this country people are concerned about the fact that they are experiencing crime in their neighborhoods and in their cities and towns. They want something done about it.

The President has put together a multifaceted crime package that passed the Senate by 91 to 1 and yet this House has not seen fit to act on that crime package.

The President suggested that that is something that we need to act on.

The President put forward, in other words, a major kind of agenda. I may have left out an item or two inadvertently here. But in other words, it is a kind of agenda that we need to be acting on and I think that it was right that the President said to Congress, "OK, you are getting down toward the end, it is now time to go to work on behalf of the American people."

And I found within the President's remarks precisely the kind of agenda that this House can do if we are simply willing to get to work.

Another item that the President mentioned, for example, was enterprise zones; that would assure we would have economic betterment in some of the worst areas of our cities. It would assure economic opportunity for some of the poorest of our citizens.

The President suggested we ought to get to work and get that done in this last few weeks of the Congress.

I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. CRAIG. I appreciate my colleague from Pennsylvania yielding. I was very pleased that our President last night in the press conference mentioned some of the key issues that Congress had been less than responsive in dealing with.

First on that list was the whole issue of the constitutional amendment to balance the Federal budget. It was also interesting this morning that on the front page of the Wall Street Journal was an article about an effort that is underway in the State of California at this moment in an initiative drive that I and others of this body were involved in through Congressional Leaders United for a Balanced Budget, the CLUBB organization that I chair here in the House; that Senator PETE WILSON chairs over on the Senate side.

I talked about the kind of momentum that is beginning to build in the State of California to potentially bring that 33d State on board in petitioning this Congress to respond to the wishes of the American people.

One of the latest polls that has been taken by a national polling firm shows that 83 percent of the American public are now having their wish stopped by this Congress to be responsive in issuing forth an amendment that would bring revenues and expenditures into line, that is, a balanced budget, and limit taxation.

Just as we went out on recess the State of Montana, which has been actively involved in a similar initiative drive to force the issue of the petition in which that State legislature; that is, the citizens of the State of Montana, would request of Congress to issue forth an amendment to deal with the balanced budget, qualified, or I should say submitted over 60,000 signatures to the secretary of state in Helena, when only 34,000 signatures are required.

The point I am making and I am pleased that my colleague from Pennsylvania would take this special order tonight to reiterate these points, is that if Congress does not respond before the end of this session, by the November election, this Congress, by its inaction, could well force a major constitutional crisis upon this Nation, because the citizens have called, by the two-thirds or the 34 States required, that this Congress issue forth that amendment and it will have refused to at that time.

I hope that this Congress, that the chairman of the House Committee on the Judiciary, that the Speaker of this House is not so less than responsive to the citizenry that it would deny them the opportunity for this most important constitutional debate that would take place in our body responded by issuing forth that amendment.

I thank my colleague.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman.

I think it is apparent that the problem does rest in the legislative branch of Government. It is obvious across this country there are many people very much in favor of moving on the balanced budget amendment in a great number of our States.

It is obvious the executive branch of Government wants to move on it.

The problem is here in the legislative branch. That is the reason the President has asked us to act. I think it is apparent from the gentleman's very cogent remarks why we should act.

I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

PERMISSION FOR SUBCOMMITTEE ON ENERGY RESEARCH AND PRODUCTION OF COMMITTEE ON SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY TO MEET DURING THE 5-MINUTE RULE ON TOMORROW, THURSDAY, JULY 26, 1984

Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Energy Research and Production of the Committee on Science and Technology be permitted to sit for the purpose of receiving testimony while the House is reading for amendment under the 5-minute rule on Thursday, July 26, 1984.

Since the gentleman in the well, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, is the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, it is my understanding he has no objection to this provision.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I would agree with the gentlewoman. I have no objection to the unanimous-consent request.

Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

□ 1850

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEBER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I just want to commend the gentleman for taking this time again to discuss the agenda which now the President of the United States has indicated as one of his top priorities or at least his agenda for the work of this Congress for the remainder of this session.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania has gone through that list, but I would like to again identify the six major issues that the President in his press conference last night specifically called upon the House of Representatives to act upon.

First of all, the constitutional amendment that would require a balanced budget.

Second of all, the provision that would permit nonworking spouses to establish individual retirement accounts.

Third, a bill providing for tuition tax credits for parents sending their children to nonpublic schools.

Fourth, enterprise zone legislation.

Fifth, the President's crime control package.

And, sixth, the equal access bill.

Now I mentioned the equal access bill last because, of course, just a few hours ago today this House did pass, finally, the equal access bill.

I would point out and I guess the reason I bring that one up is because we have to look at how much pressure and effort it took to get that one piece of legislation, which I would think would be fairly noncontroversial, to the floor of this House for a vote. First of all, it was put on the Suspension Calendar by the Speaker. Now what does that mean? It means that it must pass with a two-thirds vote, rather than the simple majority that every other piece of legislation can pass by. Therefore, in essence, the majority used its power to kill the bill even though a majority of the Members of this body favored the equal access bill. Because a majority voted for it, but not the two-thirds majority that is required under that special procedure.

We were able then to bring it back onto the floor again today again with a fairly complicated parliamentary procedure. After watering down some of its provisions finally passed that bill into law.

But if it is going to be this kind of footdragging and this kind of parliamentary maneuvering that is going to be used to kill all the legislation that is on the President's agenda, then I think the President has a very valid case to take to the American people in saying, progress for America's future is being held up right here in the Democratic-controlled House of Representatives.

I think the gentleman has identified those issues correctly and I thank him for taking out this special order.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for making the point because I think what the success with the equal access bill says today is the President has given us a very legitimate kind of schedule. It is an agenda that we have been talking about for some weeks on this House floor. There is nothing in the President's proposals of last night that Members of this House have not heard before from many of us suggesting from almost day one when this session of Congress opened that these items ought to be acted upon.

We were saying back when the House was meeting for a half an hour a day or back when we were doing 1- and 2-day weeks that these are some of the things that the House could be acting upon at that time. At that point we were told that we simply were asking too much of the House of Representatives to expect action on those measures.

Nevertheless, we have been saying day after day that these items need to be acted upon. Now the President comes forward and he says, yes, those are items that have to be acted on, that this is something which I believe the country wants and I think any reading of the country would suggest that the President is correct.

But just the fact that we were able to take one of those measures about 12 hours after the President suggested that we move and bring it to the floor and get action on it today suggests that the President has presented a very realistic legislative schedule and that there is no reason why, in the next several weeks, that the rest of the items that are on the President's agenda could not be brought to this House floor, debated, and hopefully passed so that the American people would have the Congress completing work on things that they regard as the vital agenda facing this country.

Mr. WEBER. If the gentleman would yield further, I think that the gentleman is right. I think that the American people have to understand the President has not suggested items of legislation here that are brandnew ideas that nobody has really talked about before or items that have no bipartisan support at all. For instance, look at the President's crime control package. This is basically a package of legislation that passed the U.S. Senate on a vote of 91 to 1 several months ago. There is no reason why that legislation could not be brought to the floor of the House of Representatives right now and acted on.

Again, if the House chooses in its wisdom to vote that package down, that is fine. But then at least the American people will know how their Representative voted on legislation to get a handle on the crime problem in this country. The problem is now there is no accountability because Members are not called upon to vote on these issues and in essence in this body are able to duck those issues.

Mr. WALKER. Let us understand how realistic it is, too. The enterprise zone concept was before the House-Senate conference committee just a couple of weeks ago, was rejected by that conference committee, but it is an item that has been debated in the Congress, that is well known to the membership. For the President to suggest that we ought to get a vote on it here in the House of Representatives is totally logical, totally appropriate, and something that needs to be moved forward.

In other words, the President has come forward with a package that is realistic, that is wholly in line with what he thinks the mandate should be for this Congress. I do not see any reason why if we will apply ourselves why we cannot complete work and at least get votes on every one of those items.

Mr. SILJANDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SILJANDER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

He is bringing up an eloquent point. The President has not offered an agenda which is unachievable, as is pointed out by the balanced budget amendment, as has been pointed out regarding the crime bill.

I would like to point out one aspect dealing with the urban enterprise zone idea. The gentleman is correct. On the conference report on 4170, the tax bill, the Senate did in fact pass in their tax bill version enterprise zone bill. However, in the House-Senate conference committee, once again, not the Republican leadership but the Democratic leadership decided not to receive the Senate and to pull out the urban enterprise zone bill.

But let me point out something else. This is not the first time the Senate has passed urban enterprise zones. This is the second time. A bill which has over 155 cosponsors has been defeated in the House-Senate conference committee by the House Democratic leadership.

Mr. WALKER. There are 155 cosponsors of that bill in the House of Representatives?

Mr. SILJANDER. At least, probably more than that. There are white cosponsors, black cosponsors, Democrat liberals, Democrat conservatives, Republican liberals, Republican conservatives, urban/rural, north, south, east, west, every philosophical bent, every geographic location has cosigned a very important bill. And yet, two people, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and the Speaker of the House, have bilaterally, the two of them, decided that this bill is not worth it, for whatever motivations they may possess.

Let me bring up one other point, if I may, if the gentleman will yield further.

Mr. WALKER. Well, I think the gentleman makes an important point, because it builds on what the gentleman from Minnesota and I were saying, that once again this is a bill that has very, very broad support in the House of Representatives. It is not something which is new and novel. The President is not suggesting something that his administration has just written. He is suggesting something which is wholly within the realm of possibility and something which really ought to be acted on with that kind of cosponsorship and that kind of broad base.

I will be glad to yield further to the gentleman.

Mr. SILJANDER. The point I want to make, I represent a town called Benton Harbor, MI. It has been sugject to "60 Minute" specials, it has been on front pages of major newspaper magazine sections and articles because Benton Harbor, MI, suffers probably with 70-percent unemployment. The statistics from the Department of Labor are lower, but the reality is 70 to 80 percent of those people are not working. The people in Benton Harbor are suffering from drugs and crime. It is a blighted area. It was a once prosperous town, so prosperous—I do not mean this facetiously—that Al Capone drove from Chicago to Benton Harbor because it was a beautiful town on Lake Michigan, it was a town to which people from all over the country came to enjoy themselves, it was a tourist town of great attraction.

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman does not suggest that the enterprise zones are going to bring Al Capone back, does he?

Mr. SILJANDER. It might be an accusation, it might be the only reason why the Democrat leadership in this House has twice refused to bring it up in the conference committee after passing the Senate.

Mr. WALKER. We ought to watch it. They may use that as a reason not to bring it up.

Mr. SILJANDER. I hope they will not.

The point is very clear, I think, to the membership, that Benton Harbor, MI, a once prosperous, vivacious tourist attraction, is now only an attraction for the media because of the devastation and the human blight in that city.

What is the only hope that the people of that town have had for the last 4 or 5 years? Their hope is that an urban enterprise zone could be implemented in Benton Harbor, affording opportunity for the people who are now unemployed, who are on some form of aid, the vast majority of people, who want to work. They do not desire aid, they do not desire unemployment. But there is not opportunity in a town from which most industry has left, and the downtown area looks as though a bomb of some sort has struck.

The point is very simple. Benton Harbor's hope and glimmer for their future, their vision for human compassion, the change, the crisis, the economic crisis in that community, has been snuffed out not once, but twice. It has been snuffed out by the leadership on this side of the Congress, not the Senate side. The Senate gave them temporary hope. The Senate passed it twice. Two times the House leadership, the Democrat leadership, decided, no, we will not include urban enterprise zones on either of the two bills, when there was clear opportunity to do so.

I am just so happy for the gentleman from Pennsylvania in his ability to articulate clearly, and the President of the United States, who last night also mentioned in a very comprehensive way the need for America to rise up with great anger and look at blighted areas like Benton Harbor, MI, with compassion in their hearts for people, human beings who desire opportunity, who seek opportunity, and that opportunity, because of inactive, zealous, politically motivated, politically manipulative Congress, Democrat-leadership Congress, has defeated twice that bill in committee.

I thank the gentleman for yielding and I thank him for the opportunity to let the people of this country know, to let the membership of this Congress know that it is not the Senate or the President who is holding urban enterprise zones but it is rather the Speaker of the House and apparently the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, who both wield incredibly awesome power.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for pointing out the problem, and that is a problem, of course, which is repeated in towns and cities all over the country. There are many, many urban areas that suffer the same kinds of problems that the gentleman has revealed as being a problem in his district, and that is the reason why the urban enterprise zone concept is so important. It is a way in which we can show that private enterprise has the ability to move into blighted areas and provide jobs, provide opportunities for people who today have no hope and have no opportunity. That is, in large part, what we have been all about in talking about some of these issues on the floor up until now. It is disappointing that we have had to press and prod, and bully almost, to suggest that some of these things need to be debated, and it is disappointing that we have to come this late in the session and have the President of the United States suggest that these are items still left on the agenda. But indeed they are left on the agenda, and once again we need to point out the President is absolutely correct in suggesting that if we do not do those things before this Congress finishes, that this Congress will have failed in its duty to the American people.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota, and then I will yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WEBER. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I would just like to make a point. What the President was really doing in a very real sense was calling the Democrats' bluff in terms of the rhetoric that we heard flowing out of their convention from San Francisco last week.

Let us review a little bit of that. What did we hear from the Democrats for that whole week in San Francisco?

Well, we heard probably more about deficits than just about anything else.

So the President says, "Well, good, let us act on the balanced budget constitutional amendment and get rid of deficits in America's future."

We heard an awful lot from the Democrats about families; we heard that word more often than the Democrats have probably used it in the last 20 years.

Well, among the President's proposals are IRA's for nonworking spouses, tuition tax credits, items that are specifically aimed at problems felt by certain American families.

We heard an awful lot of rhetoric about the poor from the Democrats at their convention. As we have been talking about here for the last few minutes, one of the President's proposals is enterprise zones, which is probably one of the best, most well-proven devices for combating poverty in inner-city areas in recent years.

And we heard an awful lot from the Democrats about values, traditional values. Well, again, the equal access bill, the crime bill address problems that are value related in our culture.

And all of these items, in the President's words, should come to the floor of the House for action quickly. But none of them will come, with the exception of equal access, which we finally dynamited onto the floor of the House, because the Democratic leadership wants to talk about deficits and families and the poor and values but they do not want to act on any of this legislation.

I think the President really summed it up real well. Mr. Mondale talked a lot about new realism. That seemed to be one of the catchwords at the Democratic Convention. The President said, "It is time to test the new realism and see if the Democratic leadership will move from words to action."

I think the President hit the nail on the head. I hope we can force them to move from words to action. But it will not be because they want to. It will only be because they feel the heat from the American people.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman.

I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I think the gentleman from Minnesota makes a number of excellent points. I was amazed to see that Mr. Mondale is demanding some six debates with President Reagan, because we do not have here two spring chickens, two new candidates. We have in President Reagan and candidate Mondale two leaders, one presently a leader of the United States, our President, and the other one formerly a Vice President under the Jimmy Carter administration, who have records. And it occurred to me that we have in President Reagan a leader who is presently executing a record that is far superior to the record, not the rhetoric, of candidate Mondale.

I was just thinking the other day—and perhaps the gentleman from Minnesota can help me with my figures—but as I recall, there were some 98 million jobs in this country in 1981, when President Reagan took over. Today there are 105 million new jobs, for a net gain of 7 million new jobs. Is that accurate?

Mr. WEBER. That is roughly correct. I am not really good at the numbers, but I will tell you that we have created more jobs in America in the last year and a half than the entire continent of Europe has created in the last 10 years.

There are two statistics you can look at. You can look at the unemployment statistics, or you can look at the percentage of the workforce that is employed, which is another way of measuring it. We are fast approaching a point where we will have a larger percentage of the American workforce employed than ever in American history. And that will indeed be a watershed, and it will be due to the sound economic policies of this administration.

Mr. WALKER. We already have a historic high number of women who are employed percentagewise in this economy. The economy has been particularly beneficial to women who want to join the workforce.

Mr. WEBER. If the gentleman will yield for one more minute, in addition, if you look at the figures on business creation in the last few years, we have had roughly five times as many female-headed businesses formed during the years of the Reagan administration as in any previous year, which again has to be attributed to the kinds of economic policies that would produce an economic climate in which you can form record numbers of businesses, whether you be male or female, black or white, rich or poor.

Mr. WALKER. We often hear a lot of talk about the bankruptcies that are taking place across the country. No one puts with that the statistics of the number of business formations. Of course, you have a number of businesses which are going bankrupt because you have so many more businesses that are starting up in the first place. The fact is that in any kind of business climate, you are going to have a fairly large percentage of opening businesses, of first-time businesses, that fail. Many, many of those bankruptcies are not as a result of poor economic conditions as they are the result of good economic conditions which have caused people to go out and take the risk in the first place. Not all the risks pay off. And that shows up in those bankruptcy figures. But the fact is, there have been a startling number of new businesses created which are thereby creating the new jobs. Those new jobs are thereby contributing to economic growth and it is contributing to the kind of economic growth that is confounding the experts when they see 7½ percent real growth in the second quarter of this year. No one predicted that.

The reason why no one predicted that is because no one is really taking a close look at what is really happening in the economy in terms of the formation of small businesses. Once again, the President understands all of those things. The President takes a look and says, OK, there are certain things that we need to have happen to keep all of this going. He outlined six of them last evening, and if this Congress really wants to see the country continue to move forward, it will act on that package of six. The gentleman mentions the six debates, I was just about to suggest that maybe we could have a debate on the six items that the President outlined last evening among the candidates. However, we have already passed the one thing, so maybe we will have to limit it to five debates now.

I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. Since we are talking about accomplishments of the past administration, the now fallen Carter-Mondale administration and the Reagan administration, I wonder if my colleagues could help me make a calculation here that I think is a relevant one.

As I recall, Mr. Mondale and Mr. Carter used to talk about the misery index, and to my recollection, the misery index was a combination of the unemployment rate, the inflation rate, and the prime interest rate.

Mr. WALKER. No, just the first two.

Mr. HUNTER. He used the unemployment rate.

Mr. WALKER. The prime misery rate is what the gentleman is talking about. There is a prime misery rate which adds in the prime interest as well.

Mr. HUNTER. Well, let us take the first two for purposes of calculating out what kind of a job Mr. Mondale did and what type of a job Mr. Reagan has done. Now if the unemployment rate is 7.1 percent today, it was 7.4 percent under Mr. Carter, immediately before the commencement of the Reagan administration, and the inflation rate today as I recall is 4.1 percent.

Mr. WALKER. 4.1 percent annualized off the figures of yesterday. If you do the first 6 months of this year was a 4.1-percent annualized rate.

Mr. HUNTER. So let us say 4 percent; 4 percent and 7.1 percent is 11.1 percent; that is the misery index under the Reagan administration. The unemployment rate was 7.4 and the inflation rate under Mr. Carter was what?

Mr. WEBER. About 13.5 percent.

Mr. WALKER. Well, it was about 12.7 percent when they left office.

Mr. HUNTER. Shall we make it 12.7 to be fair?

Mr. WALKER. Make it 12.7.

Mr. HUNTER. Let us be fair with Mr. Mondale. I have got a misery index for the Mondale-Carter administration of 20.1, compared to a misery index under the Reagan administration of 11.1. So, roughly the misery index that was composed by Mr. Mondale and Mr. Carter as an indicator upon which the American people should use to judge their Chief Executive's performance along with his Vice President of 20.1. That is misery; 20.1 points of misery under Mr. Carter as opposed to 11.1 under President Reagan.

I wonder if Mr. Mondale really thinks that six debates can make the American people forget about that record?

Mr. WALKER. Well, the gentleman is absolutely correct, and it takes a good deal of chutzpah, as some people at the Democratic Convention did, got up and talked about the misery index, and talked about the misery index of the Reagan administration. Also there was a good deal of talk at that convention or I should say in the platform about the misery index. It takes a lot of chutzpah for a party that had a misery index, as the gentleman calculates it, 20.1, and is now criticizing an administration that has brought that down to just over 11. It is apparent to the American people that there has been a major improvement. The figures show there has been a major improvement. It is only the liberal Democrats who met together in San Francisco who cannot see where the country has gone.

Mr. WEBER. The thing that should concern everybody about the point that the gentleman from California has been bringing up is that throughout that entire Democratic Convention, there was, of course, no credit given to the President for the decline of the inflation rate or for the decline of unemployment, mainly because it came about as a result, I believe, of private sector expansion rather than Government jobs. What that says to us is something about the way in which the Democrats would govern.

It says to us, first of all, I think, that they do not care any more about inflation than they ever have historically as a party, and so we have the American people rightly concerned about that. If that were not the case, we would have heard somewhere in the course of that Democratic Convention someone talking about the fact that it was not good to have inflation. Good for poor people, old people, or in-between people, if you will.

Beyond that, we might have heard something about the necessity of maintaining the health of the private sector of the economy, since it is that health of the private sector of the economy that has drawn down the unemployment rate, of course, in the Reagan administration.

Instead of hearing that kind of rhetoric, what did we hear? A pledge for a big tax increase from Mr. Mondale which will attack directly those very expansionary economic policies that have brought down the unemployment rate through the expansion of the private sector.

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. I think it is ironic that just as Mr. Reagan has convinced Francois Mitterrand, the French leader, that perhaps the policies of socialism and some of his liberal economic policies are not working, and in fact I think if the French commence to move toward a more private enterprise-oriented economy, they are going to see their economy, which is now in the doldrums, actually pick up and begin to improve.

I think it is ironic that just as our President has convinced the leader of France to start moving to an expansion economy and an economy that is more productive, apparently we have a political leader in our own country who wants to take us back to the failed policies of the Mondale-Carter administration that produced this 13-percent inflation rate and high unemployment and high interest rates.

Mr. WALKER. Well, the gentleman is absolutely correct. What we know is that the President was right on economics; he was right on the program he put forward. He is absolutely right on the program that he put forward last night. This Congress would contribute greatly to the forward movement of this country by passing the 6-point program put forward by the President last night.

I hope that the Democratic liberal leadership of this Congress will recognize what is in the best interests of the American people and put aside their special interest concerns for a moment. They could not put them aside at the convention, but put them aside for a moment when it relates to the American here in this body and pass the President's program.

REPRISALS AGAINST LAWYERS IN POLAND

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, it is common knowledge that the Government of Poland recently declared an amnesty for some of the political prisoners in that country. However, one must question the true motivation of this action. In the past, the policies of the Polish People's Republic have been twofold—to convince the United States to lift economic sanctions, and to break the Solidarity movement once and for all.

This most recent declaration of amnesty does not appear to deviate from these policy objectives, and seems only to divert attention from the flagrant human rights violations occurring daily in Poland. Many share my hope that this declaration is a first step in changing the present government's repressive policies, but unfortunately, our hopes are in vain, for despite this grant of amnesty, the Polish People's Republic is still actively working to crush the Solidarity movement.

Independent Western observers have been barred from the trial of four prominent dissidents who helped form the outlawed Solidarity labor movement. Solidarity leaders are still being arrested on trumped-up charges, and just last week a Warsaw court acquitted two policemen charged in the beating death of a 19-year-old Solidarity supporter. I would like to share with my colleagues an editorial, appearing in the July 19, 1984, edition of the Chicago Tribune, which outlines the repressive policies that persist despite the granting of amnesty. The article follows:

POLAND'S TWO-FACED AMNESTY

Those who guard the ramparts of human rights generally view an amnesty of political prisoners by any government as a welcome development. But before standing in line to congratulate the Polish government on its decision to grant amnesty to some of Poland's 660 political prisoners, consider these development:

Independent Western observers have been barred from the trial of four prominent dissidents who helped form the outlawed Solidarity labor movement in 1980. Lech Walesa himself has been denied entry to the courtroom, where all extra seats are filled by officials from the Ministry of Internal Affairs.

In another case that has inflamed the passions of many Poles, a Warsaw court on Monday acquitted two policemen charged in the beating death of a 19-year-old Solidarity supporter whose funeral last year drew 20,000 mourners. Instead, two ambulance drivers were convicted of negligence when driving him to a medical clinic after his detention.

On Tuesday, Bogdan Bujak, whose brother is part of Solidarity's underground leadership, was sentenced to 18 months in jail upon conviction on charges he led an antistate demonstration last December marking the death of 50 workers in antigovernment demonstrations in 1970.

Elsewhere, the jailed former Solidarity president of Lodz, Andrzej Slowik, has gone on trial on charges that he insulted a prison warden. In other cases, Rev. Henryk Jankowski, Mr. Walesa's parish priest, has been charged with delivering sermons that incited "public unrest," and authorities have announced trials for Rev. Jerzy Popieluszko, a pro-Solidarity priest accused of preaching against the state, and Maciej Bednarkiewicz, a lawyer who often defended Solidarity activists.

It isn't clear if any of the above prisoners will be released in the amnesty planned to coincide Sunday with the 40th anniversary of Poland's communist rule. What is clear is that after 40 years, Poland's Communist Party and its Kremlin masters can provide neither an adequate economic system nor peace of mind to a troubled people begging for relief. Like his political brethren in Eastern Europe, Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski depends on force and fear of arrest as the primary motivating factor behind his suppressive regime.

Recently, Mr. Aloysius Mazewski, president of the Polish American Congress, contacted me to express his organization's deep concern about the systematic efforts of the Polish People's Republic to break the resistance of the Polish people to the Communist regime and to outline several specific instances where the government has taken reprisals against Polish lawyers for their attempts to defend their clients effectively in political cases. Some of these lawyers have been arrested, and others have been suspended from the practice of law. These actions have made a travesty of liberty and justice, and are designed solely to demonstrate the total supremacy and control of the Communist regime over the police force and the judicial process. These actions must be condemned in the strongest possible terms.

A copy of the statement on this subject by the Polish American Congress follows:

POLISH AMERICAN CONGRESS DENOUNCES ATTACKS AGAINST POLISH LAWYERS AND POLITICAL TRIALS OF SOLIDARITY ADVISORS

Recent reports from Poland indicate that the government of the Polish People's Republic has significantly stepped-up its efforts to break down the broadly-based resistance of the Polish people to the arbitrary and ruthless rule by the Communist regime.

Over the past several months a determined attack has been mounted against Polish lawyers in reprisal for their attempts to defend their clients vigorously and effectively in political cases. The attack focuses on the twenty or thirty lawyers who bear the brunt of providing legal representation for thousands of their fellow citizens who have been interned or imprisoned since the declaration of martial law in December, 1981. The victims include several of the country's most prominent lawyers, thereby serving notice to their less well-known colleagues that no lawyer is safe from reprisals for providing effective legal representation and holding the military regime accountable to the Polish law.

On February 17, 1984 the official Communist Party newspaper, Trybuna Ludu published an article on "The Civic and Professional Responsibility of Lawyers". The article singled out by name four defense lawyers in Political cases: Maciej Bednarkiewicz, Wladyslaw Sila-Nowicki, Piotr Andrzejewski and Jan Olszewski. It accused them of "at all costs attempts to have the defendants not guilty" and asserted that "the functioning of defense attorneys should as a matter of principle serve society and its highest organizational formation, the state", which the Trybuna parlance is synonymous with the Party. Trybuna Ludu also attacked the Lawyers Council, an organization representing most of the country's lawyers which was formed at a national congress of the legal profession in October, 1983 to replace the Lawyers Association which the government dissolved during the martial law period.

While the other three have been suspended from legal practice, Maciej Bednarkiewicz was arrested early in 1984 after a search of his apartment in which documents relating to the political cases he was handling were seized. He is charged with having offered a man, who claimed to be a ZOMO (special riot police) deserter, money to deliver to him a police radio transmitter. Several months earlier Bednarkiewicz told other lawyers that he had been approached for representation by a man who claimed to be a ZOMO deserter, but he did not believe the man's story and declined to take his case.

Currently the authorities have set a July 13 trial date for four top Solidarity advisors, former leaders of the Social Self-Defense Committee—KOR, who are charged with plotting to overthrow Poland's Communist political system. If convicted they face maximum terms of 10 years imprisonment. They are Jacek Kuron, Adam Michnik, Henryk Wujec and Zbigniew Romaszewski.

Charges brought against them, as well as against attorney Maciej Bednarkiewicz constitute thinly disguised acts of political vengeance not only against them personally, but against the entire democratic human rights movement in Poland. The whole process is intended to demonstrate total supremacy of the regime and its Party controlled police and judicial apparatus over the independent, democratic opposition to its totalitarian rule, and therefore the futility of further resistance.

We protest and denounce these new flagrant attempts to terrorize the people of Poland into total submission to the Communist rule. Americans of Polish descent pledge their utmost support for the brave people of Poland in their valiant struggle for freedom.

Aloysius A. Mazewski, President; Helen Zielinski, Vice President; Kazimierz Lukomski, Vice President; Harriet Bielanski, Secretary; and Joseph A. Drobot, Treasurer.

Mr. Speaker, so long as these totalitarian tactics of terror persist, a grant of amnesty to some political prisoners by itself is a hollow and inadequate gesture. I join with the many Polish-Americans in the 11th Congressional District of Illinois which I am honored to represent, and with Americans of Polish descent throughout the United States, in condemning the repressive policies of the Polish Government and its subversion of the legal system and in the hope that the people of Poland may one day be able to live in freedom without the fear of repression and persecution.●

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. TORRES] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, I was not present during House proceedings on Tuesday, July 24, due to personal illness. Had I been present on the House floor, I would have cast my votes in the following manner:

Rollcall No. 307: Dannemeyer amendment to H.R. 5541 to reduce funding for the CPB for fiscal years 1987-89; "no."

Rollcall No. 308: Oxley amendment to H.R. 5541 to reduce funding for the CPB and the Public Telecommunications Facilities Program; "no."

Rollcall No. 309: Final passage of H.R. 5541, Public Broadcasting Amendments Act; "yea."

Rollcall No. 310: Final passage of H.R. 1580, Aviation Drug Trafficking Control Act; "yea."

Rollcall No. 311: Final passage of H.R. 5616, Credit Card and Computer Fraud Act; "yea."●

RECOVERY?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, What I am saying tonight, and I think I might say by way of explanation, that ever since I came to the House of Representatives I looked upon this privilege of addressing the House after all legislative business and all hereinbefore entered into special orders had been completed, with the stated purpose and intent that this facility, this forum, was made available for that purpose. Therefore, I have never injected a partisan matter for I feel that is for the stump back home, not for the forum here.

Second, I address the House. I am not addressing an absent and invisible audience. I came here to this Congress 22½ years ago and had not been a Member 3 weeks before I made use of this, and certainly there was no thought then of having any kind of television coverage.

What I speak of, and I am impelled to do so because what I consider to be the continuing intense issue that is at the heart of the problem, it does not do any good at this point to blame and find blame for the essential malady that is affecting us. I think what the American people, at least the constituents that I come in contact with, are interested in is: What are you going to do about it?

Of course, the big issue, as I have pointed out for several years, is the continuing acceptance of usurious rates of interest, unconscionable rates of interest, which cannot tolerate true progress in any economy. All the written history of mankind shows clearly that never has a society endured coexistent with usurious interest rates, the reason being that interest rates are the mechanism by which the wealth of a nation are transferred.

The Nation's economy is in fine fettle, we are told by the image-makers. And indeed there are more people at work—though there are still as many unemployed as there were 3 years ago. Inflation is running at a rate of only thrice what was once thought intolerable, so there is relative improvement on that score. But despite the rosy glow, there is no way that we could say that the country is enjoying a healthy economic recovery.

Consider interest rates. By any modern measure, interest rates should be about 3 percent above the rate of inflation. In other words, if this were an economy that anyone considered stable, or of the situation were one that could be considered strong by the usual experience, interest rates today should be at about 9 percent, or maybe less. And by any standard of decency, rates should be less than that. But for the sake of argument, a reasonable mind would conclude that today's conditions should result in interest rates of about 9 percent. But what is the fact? The fact is that the highest grade corporate bonds today are paying close to 14 percent—almost exactly the rate that prevailed in 1981, when the economy was going to hell in a handcart. Municipal bond rates today are at 11.14 percent and going up—just the same rate as prevailed in 1981, which was supposed to be the nadir of the Nation's despair. Treasury bonds, the 10-year variety, are also back at the 1981 level—having gone up by 2 percent since January. Home mortgage rates today are the same as they were in 1981. Where is the recovery in any of those figures? Nowhere.

The prevailing trend of high and rising interest rates can only spell trouble. It spells trouble for the Federal budget. Just before the recess, Congress completed action on its much-touted deficit reduction program. But every cent of that program will be consigned to just one thing: increased interest costs on the debt. That's right: for all the labor and all the rhetoric, the deficit will remain as high as ever, because higher interest costs are shoving debt service expenses through the roof. Already, in fact, one-third of all personal income taxes goes toward that one thing: interest on the debt. Rising interest rates are a disaster for the Federal budget, and therefore a great and growing problem for economic management as well.

Rising interest rates threaten the health of the Nation's savings and loan industry, which almost sank in the interest rate crunch of 1982. Last year, when rates moderated, savings and loan associations had a hard time—maybe a third of them lost money. The whole savings and loan industry last year had profits of less than AT&T's most recent quarter. And today, with rates going up, there is the familiar crunch—savings and loans have relatively low-earning assets, but must pay top dollar for deposits. With each notch upward in rates, the business gets weaker, and its ability to support home mortgage loans gets progressively worse.

We are experiencing the greatest number of bank failures ever. And the failures are bigger. Witness the downfall of Continental Illinois Bank—a giant so great that not even the biggest of the Nation's financial whales can swallow its carcass up. The taxpayers have already had to inject billions into that bank, and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is likely to end up as its owner. The reason: In the deregulated, cutthroat world of financial services that we have today, and in the demented world of hot money, megabuck overnight deposits, banking has become a much more risky business. The volatility of interest rates contributes mightily to the problem of keeping a bank healthy and profitable, and many are not up to the task. And so we have more and more failures.

We have a situation in which the economy is volatile, not healthy. It is shaky, not strong. That is why interest rates are rising. It is also why stock prices are falling. And it is why everyone looks to the Fed, week after week, for a sign that the party may be over—a signal that would come in the form of higher interest rates.

Few are frightened at the moment. After all, there are more jobs around. There are new cars on the streets. But when you look behind the facade, you see real tension, real fear, and no genuine faith that the good times will last—just a kind of fond hope that things won't get worse. And if interest rates continue going up, there will not likely be any alarming, stupendous results. There will only be that long, slow slide downhill.

Despite the brave talk, we should be concerned. We should be concerned about a trade deficit that is stupendously bad, that robs us of millions of jobs. We should be concerned about conditions that keep a decent home out of reach of all but the most fortunate. We should be worried about interest rates that kill off small business, or any business that is sensitive to interest rate movements. We should be fearful of conditions that place the money market at higher real rates than existed 3 years ago—real rates that are the highest in history, rates that will produce pain and suffering and economic weakness. We do not have recovery on our hands. We have the makings of a very damaging economic wreck.

MISSING CHILDREN

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. HARRISON]. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] is recognized for 60 minutes.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of my special order today, and to include therein extraneous material.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the remarks that have been made by the previous speakers tonight are important and address important concerns that face the people in this country, but we have other concerns that are not political, that transcend daily politics and that really speak to the soul of this country and to some things that we care a great deal about.

Last month, Mr. Speaker, I launched a project to use the televised proceedings of the House of Representatives to help find some of the 160,000 children who each year are reported kidnaped, either by strangers or by their own parents who do not have custody. At that time, I discussed the case of Charlotte June Kinsey of Oklahoma City, who was reported kidnaped from the State Fair of Oklahoma 3 years ago.

Since then, more than 60 of my House colleagues have agreed to deliver speeches on the House floor and to display the pictures of children who have been reported kidnaped from their districts. I am pleased that some of them are joining me today in this special order and hope that their efforts may help to locate these children.

Mr. Speaker, this is Cinda Leann Pallett. Cinda Leann Pallett is another one of the tens of thousands of children who have been kidnaped. She was reported missing from the State Fair of Oklahoma on September 26, 1981. She was then 13 years old. She was 5 feet tall, weighed 88 pounds, had dark brown eyes and dark brown shoulder-length hair.

I would hope that if anyone has seen Cinda Leann Pallett or knows where she is would take the time to do so, they might call the Oklahoma City Police Department or call the police departments in their own cities to help locate another one of these missing children.

Mr. Speaker, since the problem of missing children came to national attention a few years ago, Congress has taken steps to help deal with it, and I just urge all of the people who watch these proceedings and who join us here in the House Chamber to join in this effort, because there is nothing more tragic than a child taken from its home.

Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to yield at this time. This is a bipartisan effort, people of all political and philosophical persuasions joining in this effort to locate these missing children. I would be glad to yield at this time to the gentlewoman from California, Mrs. BOXER.

Mrs. BOXER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the gentleman from Oklahoma for his excellent work and hard work on this crucial issue, and I want to tell him that if just one solid lead comes out of this presentation and the others that the gentleman will be organizing, we should do this indefinitely, absolutely.

This is the beautiful boyish face of Kevin Collins of San Francisco.

"Not knowing where he is; that's what leaves the deep, hollow feeling that can never be filled." These are the words of Mrs. Ann Collins, mother of Kevin Collins, age 10, missing since February 10, 1984. Kevin who is 4 feet, 10 inches tall, weighs 70 pounds, has brown hair and gray/green eyes, left for school on the morning of the 10th as usual. He had basketball practice after school; therefore, he was not expected home until 6:30 p.m. Kevin left the St. Agnes Church gym in the Haight-Ashbury section of San Francisco in my district at 6 p.m. to take the bus home. He was last seen at a bus stop, one block from the church.

That night, the police conducted an immediate search of the neighborhood. Later, scores of volunteers canvassed the area, going door to door and searching every inch of the surrounding parks and lots. These searches have yielded nothing. Not then, and not since, although every lead is checked. Even Kevin's picture on the cover of Newsweek has so far led to nothing, but we are still trying.

Kevin's mom and dad are daily volunteers at the Kevin Collins Foundation established to handle the calls that have now been reduced to a trickle. The foundation is pursuing legislative initiatives, mounting a publicity campaign to disseminate facts about missing children, and coordinating resources for reporting and locating missing children. Until this tragedy struck the Collins family, they did not realize that thousands of children are reported missing each year.

Although we in Congress have passed some legislation to assist parents and police to locate missing children, we must continue our efforts in order to alleviate the pain and suffering of families like the Collins. Kevin has eight brothers and sisters who miss him terribly. Today's program is an important step. If we are successful in finding just one child, our efforts have been worthwhile. Kevin could be anywhere. He could be in the East, the West, the South or the North. That is why this is so important. Again, I want to commend the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Anyone having any information about Kevin should contact the Kevin Collins Foundation at (415) 863-6333 or toll free (800) 272-0012.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to try to go through this in the order in which the people came to the floor and I would like to yield to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. CRAIG].

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate my colleague from Oklahoma for holding this special order on missing children. The tragedy that befalls thousands of children in America is horrifying. The very thought that more than 50,000 children in America are abducted by strangers and over 100,000 are snatched by noncustodial parents each year tears apart the fibers of the American family.

Congressman EDWARDS stands very tall in the well of the House tonight. His special order is not being used by Republicans to attack Democrats or by Democrats to attack Republicans. His special order is an attempt to reunite families in America which have been torn apart by the loss of a child.

In my opinion, this is one of the finest hours of Congress. We are here to do something very good. We are here to offer what help we can to bring back a son or daughter to their rightful parent. And we are here because our hearts tell us we must try.

Although we cannot physically hear the children's plea for help, nor see the tears they shed, or feel the fear they experience, we know we must do all we can to locate them and get them home.

Among the thousands of missing children is this 10-year-old boy of Sagle, ID. Jason Amini was abducted over 2 years ago while visiting California.

I received a letter from Jason's mother about 2 months ago concerning Jason. I would like to read a small portion of that letter:

> Somewhere in the world, I hope, is a ten-year-old boy, my son. I have not seen or heard from him in over two years. In spite of an intensive search, I have no clues as to his whereabouts. He is one of the thousands of children who disappear every year in the United States.

We contacted Jason's mother and informed her of this special order. We asked her permission to use Jason's case and she obviously agreed. In a followup letter to us she wrote:

> I know that you were not aware that my son was kidnaped by his father when you approached me concerning this opportunity, but I hope that that will not deter you from entering our case in this presentation. The number of serious parental kidnaping cases which occur each year is staggering and the effects of the child and on the family left behind are not benign. Parental kidnapers do not steal their children for love: it cannot be considered love to tear a child from his or her home, away from the custodial parent, grandparents and other loved ones, to move the child often, change the child's name, and often not be able to support the child while living outside the law. A great number of parental kidnapers have a history of child abuse. Even without physical abuse, this crime must be considered a subtle form of child abuse itself.
> People often ask me, "Don't you feel better knowing that your son is with his father and safe?" No. I only know that he was with his father over two years ago; I don't know if he is alive, if he is healthy, and I certainly don't know whether or not he is happy. I will probably never see him again.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think I have to say much more. Jason's mother has stated all that need to be said.

Jason Amini is now 10 years old. He has blond hair and light brown eyes, he speaks in an unusually low voice and has a very slight scar on his lower lip and the left side of his jaw. And as with most American young boys, he loves to build models.

There is a good possibility that Jason is somewhere in the Silicon Valley in California. His father has a background in computers and electronics which could mean he is working in one of the high-technology firms located in that valley. It is my hope, that someone somewhere will recognize this photo of Jason. If they do I would encourage them to immediately contact their local police authorities or to call the toll-free number of Child Find, Inc. That number is 1-800-431-5005. Child Find will then notify the proper authorities in Idaho.

Once again, let me thank my colleague, the gentleman from Oklahoma, tonight for taking out this most important special order and as my colleague from California said earlier, if there is one lead or possibly if one child is found, all the time and all the effort we have put into this will make it certainly worthwhile.

Let me once again thank my colleague.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Idaho.

This is a good time to interject this thought. The case the gentleman has just described is one of a young boy who was kidnaped by his own father. I think it is important for people to understand, just as this mother explained, that when a parent who does not have custody steals a child from the parent who does have custody, we can be talking about a very traumatic experience, not only for the parent who was supposed to have custody, but for the child as well.

In an attempt to try to do something about this tremendous number of parental child stealing cases across the country, I have introduced legislation, which is the only time in this little presentation that I will get into legislation, but I have introduced legislation which would permit Federal prosecution and 1- to 5-year prison sentences for those who snatch children away from a parent or spouse and who cross State lines for the purpose of evading court order custody decisions.

I think it is important that the Federal Government step in and make it a Federal crime because a child who is kidnaped by a parent is a child kidnaped and we ought to do something about it.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague yield?

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Certainly.

Mr. CRAIG. Let me applaud my colleague, not only for the introduction of that legislation, but for bringing up the very important and rather difficult kind of issue to balance in the mind. I think that Jason's mother came to that point when many of her friends said, "Well, but your son is safe. He is with his father."

She does not know that. The courts in their settlement decided that in this instance the mother was the rightful parent for this child to be with, that there were cooperative arrangements arrived at and while Jason was visiting his father in that cooperative arrangement, Jason's mother received a letter from the father saying, "You will not see your son any longer. I have decided to keep him," and that was the last Jason was heard from.

Those are difficult things to deal with but of course, the kind of legislation we are talking about, and we know that the courts are very flexible today, but they do recognize and they must recognize that one of those parents has to be the responsible and legal guardian of the child.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

I yield to our colleague, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DEWINE], who comes to the Congress with a background in law enforcement and who has personally dealt with matters like this in the past.

Mr. DEWINE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman very much.

I would also like to thank and congratulate my colleague and friend, the gentleman from Oklahoma, for this special order on what really is a national tragedy. We use the term "tragedy" sometimes lightly, but this is certainly a tragedy. I cannot think of anything that is more frightening to a parent than the thought of losing one of your children. There is just nothing that could be more scary to think about or nothing that could be more tragic than to have that happen.

I think we are on the right track in this country. This special order tonight is going to focus more public attention on this particular problem. The TV shows that have been on in the last few months also are going to contribute to that.

I would like to talk tonight also, as my colleague just has, about the situation where you have a parent, a natural parent who takes illegally a child and takes that child out of the State. There is a tendency I think for people to say, "Oh, well, that doesn't really fall in the same category as the child who has been abducted by a total stranger."

I would agree. It is different, but it is equally tragic and it is equally or can be equally tragic for that particular child.

Our courts are designed to adjudicate problems and in most States, I think probably every State, the law provides that when there is a divorce, when there is a custody problem, that the court is to take into consideration, No. 1, what is in the best interest of that child and after hearing all of the evidence the court does make a decision and chooses to put the custody of the child in one of the parents' hands, usually, almost inevitably allowing visitation with the other parent.

The tragedy is when a parent overrides that and a parent takes the law into his or her own hands and takes that child away, never to be seen again by the other parent. It is wrong. It is illegal. But it is also a tragedy for that child to deny that child the right to see his or her parent, which is clearly wrong and clearly a tragedy for that child.

We are told that approximately 85 percent of all of the missing children in this country are missing because they have been taken by a parent and taken out of the State.

I would like to talk tonight about a particular case, a case that came from Chillicothe, OH. That is not in my congressional district but the father does happen to live in my congressional district in Circleville. This is a picture of Bobbie Jo Steely. Bobbie Joe was taken from Chillicothe, we believe by her mother, on June 27, 1980. She has not been seen by her father since that time.

We believe and have reason to believe that she may be in southern Florida at this time. The description of her obviously cannot be complete because her father has not seen her for the last 3½ years. She was born on November 18, 1977. She has medium build, blonde, red-cast hair, blue eyes, fair complexion, white, is right handed and has no birthmarks or scars on her.

It is a tragedy that this child has been denied the right to see her natural father.

I would ask that anyone who is watching this who may know anything about the whereabouts of this child to please either call my congressional office or call her father. The telephone number is area code 614-474-5020. I will repeat that again. The father's name is Robin Steely. He lives in Circleville, OH. His telephone number is 614-474-5020. Or you can call your local law enforcement agency.

It is very important I think that this child know her father and that this child be granted the rights that a court gave, and that was that she would know her father and reside with her father.

I yield back to my colleague from Oklahoma.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. I thank the gentleman.

Under the rules of the House I think we are supposed to speak only to our colleagues in the House, and I appreciate the fact that the colleagues in the House are looking so intently at these pictures and listening to this information. I would just, in case anybody is eavesdropping on what we are doing here, if anybody else around the country just happens to see what we are doing, that they will take seriously this effort to find these children and that they will make note of these phone numbers and what the children look like and if it is possible that they may know where one of these children is they will notify the local police or, in fact, even notify my office, Congressman MICKEY EDWARDS in Washington, and we will try to help.

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. I now yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I can think of no more tragic commentary on our great Nation than its high number of runaway and abducted children.

It speaks poorly of us all that we have allowed the moral fiber that our forefathers used as a foundation to establish this great country to slip to a point where we have bred a generation of unfeeling paranoids and schizophrenics who drive their children away or misfits who do ghastly, ugly things to our children.

Tragic is the only word that clearly depicts the brutal murder of 10-year-old Yolanda Santa who was last seen leaving the Palm View Elementary School in West Palm Beach with an unknown man posing as her uncle in the spring of 1983.

Tragic is the only word that clearly depicts the grief Yolanda's loving family will feel the rest of their lives, the grief that reached a gruesome climax last Friday when police positively identified the skeletal remains of a young girl still clutching her rosary beads as those of Yolanda Santa.

Tragic is the only word that clearly depicts the bizarre abduction and murder of Adam Walsh and the emptiness his loss brought to his mama an daddy, John and Reva.

Tragic is the only word that clearly depicts the loneliness and desperation Jeannie Luna will feel as long as she does not know what happened to her little girl, Christy, who disappeared without a trace in the little Palm Beach County town of Greenacres City in May.

We can't sit idly by and let this happen to our kids or to ourselves.

We are not helpless.

There are resources at our disposal.

Unfortunately these resources are not being used to their maximum capacity or efficiency.

In 1982, the Florida Department of Law Enforcement established its own statewide missing children information clearinghouse, the first of its kind initiated under a centralized law enforcement department to search for and locate missing children and provide education materials and expertise to protect children.

Since the inception of Florida's Missing Children Clearinghouse there has been and continues to be impressive communication and cooperation between law enforcement personnel, private organizations like Child Keyppers, educators, legislators, and parents.

I went to Florida's State Capitol in Tallahassee in May to take a first hand look at the magnificent work being done by the department of law enforcement through its missing children clearinghouse.

The clearinghouse maintains a central, computerized file on missing children for parents and local police.

Additionally Florida's clearinghouse provides the following vital services:

A directory of State resources such as hospitals, shelters, and private organizations that are available to help parents and local police;

A 24-hour, toll-free WATS line to handle all calls concerning missing children;

And the distribution of emergency flyers containing physical and situational descriptions of missing children.

Florida's program convinced me that statewide clearinghouses operated under the direction of a centralized law enforcement department are essential if we are to locate missing children and must be implemented in all States if we are to successfully combat this tragic problem.

The U.S. Justice Department recently opened its national center for missing and exploited children.

I fully support the existence of a national center but its success depends solely on how extensively State and local law enforcement official use it.

An important first step to coordinate the efforts now being undertaken at the national center is the establishment of State clearinghouses.

An information clearninghouse in every State would provide parents and local police with an invaluable resource, a complete communication loop, if you will.

A telecommunication loop that would allow police to pass information on missing children almost instantaneously throughout the Nation.

For these reason, for the future health and well-being of our country, but most of all, for the kids, I urge all my colleagues to join with me in supporting House Concurrent Resolution 301 which urges States to establish statewide missing children clearinghouses under centralized law enforcement agencies and H.R. 5826, which provides the financial means to do just that.

For the Yolanda Santas, the Adam Walshes, the Christy Lunas, and all the other children who have been or will be victimized, let all of us, politicians, policemen, businessmen, clergymen, teachers and parents join hands and do all we can to put an end to the horrifying tragedies that otherwise lie ahead for more American families.

One last thing to each and every one: If you notice someone acting strangely with a child, do not be afraid to summon a law enforcement officer or yourself ask the child if he or she is all right, because you may save the life of that child.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma, I thank you for having this special order and certainly appreciate the opportunity to have the time yielded to me to express my views on this.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. I thank the gentleman for helping us. The gentleman stressed in his remarks the universality of this concern. I think it is something all of us feel strongly about regardless of philosophical considerations or anything else.

I thank the gentleman.

I now yield to a friend, from the Democratic side of the aisle, TOM HARKIN of Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. I, too, want to thank my friend and colleague, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS], for taking this time today for this special order and to echo the sentiments of those who have spoken before me that this is something that cuts across all ideological and party boundaries.

And when it comes to the missing children of this country we are neither Democrats nor Republicans, conservatives or liberals; we are concerned parents all, trying to find those children who have been abducted, who have been taken from one or more of their parents and never to be found again.

So again I want to congratulate my colleague from Oklahoma for taking this special order.

I want to follow up if I might, MICKEY, just for a minute on what Congressman LEWIS said. Like most parents, I guess I had never really thought much about a missing child until I saw the television on Adam Walsh and I guess what really struck me in watching that and in later talking to his father, John Walsh, was that his mother had left him for just a few minutes in a store at a place I guess where they play these little games and things and he had gone off, thinking "just a couple of minutes and I will be back," and it occurred to me that up to that time I had left my young daughter, now 8 years old, some times in a grocery store in a different aisle, taking my shopping cart and going down a different aisle thinking, "She is only two aisles down, that is no problem."

Maybe turning my back in a department store, not keeping my eyes on her and turning around and finding that I do not see her right away and perhaps she is someplace else and wandered off as little kids will do.

I can only say that after watching the program on Adam Walsh and talking to his parents, I will tell you, I do not go anywhere with my kids now; I have one who is 8 and one who is 2½; I keep my eyes on them constantly.

Just as Congressman LEWIS was saying, if you see someone acting strangely with children, do not be afraid to do something, to call a law enforcement officer, to call the store manager or to do something; don't be afraid to do that.

I would also maybe just expand on that one point further: When you take your children to a store, a grocery store, a department store, a shopping center, do not let them out of your sight; do not ever let them out of your sight. You know how kids are. They see a gumball machine and they will take off for the gumball machine.

You might think, "It is only 20 or 30 feet away and I will go down this aisle and pick them up on the way back." In that split second, those 2 or 3 minutes, the same could happen that happened to Adam Walsh.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. I think that is a very important point you are making, TOM. I know men and women who obviously would not think of leaving a shopping cart, for example, leaving a billfold or leaving their purse in the shopping cart, but who would routinely walk off an aisle or two away leaving their child in the cart, saying "Well, I have admonished my daughter or son not to talk to strangers." And you cannot count on that.

It is our responsibility as the parents to watch those children, not let them out of our sight. I think you are making a very good point.

Mr. HARKIN. It has such an effect on me. I know how my kids act.

Another thing, when your kids are with a babysitter, if your babysitter is taking them out for ice cream or maybe they are going to a movie or something like that, the best instruction you can give is: Never let them out of your sight, even for 10 seconds. Don't ever let them out of your sight. If you are in a movie theater, don't ever let those kids go to the bathroom by themselves, never. Always go with them; don't ever let them go to the bathroom by themselves, even if they are 10 or 12 years old, don't let that happen. Make sure you are with them at all times.

I just wanted to follow up on that point that Congressman LEWIS made. Last April, we established the National Center for Missing & Exploited Children which the gentleman mentioned in his opening remarks, with a grant from the Justice Department. It is too bad all of this had to happen before we came to the realization that we had to have something like this national center. Now it is underway and functioning.

Hopefully we can begin to cut down drastically on the number of missing children and we can begin to find those children who are missing from their homes. I want to take just a few minutes, if I may, Mr. EDWARDS, to talk about one specific child who has been missing from his parents now for nearly 23 months. This is a young child whose parents I have become acquainted with, gotten to know over the intervening months, parents I have worked with in my office to try to do all we can to help them find their missing child.

Let me briefly tell the story of how this one happened. You know when I delivered newspapers, when I was a kid, I will bet you did, too, MICKEY; you think your kid goes out in your neighborhood, your neighbors all know him, what possible hurt could come from a kid delivering newspapers?

Well on September 5, 1982, 12-year-old Johnny Gosch set out to deliver papers in his suburban neighborhood in West Des Moines, IA. It was a Sunday morning about a quarter to 6.

As he approached the corner, according to witnesses, he was stopped by a man in a blue car who asked the boy for directions. The man then sped away, made a U-turn, and returned to the corner and asked for directions again.

In front of two witnesses, Johnny Gosch said, "That guy is weird. I am leaving to finish my route and go home." As Johnny walked down the block, the man in the blue car flicked the ceiling light in his car on and off three times. At that precise moment, another man on foot came out from behind some trees and stopped Johnny Gosch. The second man then walked down the block, around the corner and out of sight. Moments later, two other paper boys approached from another direction and they saw Johnny slumped over his wagon as though he had been drugged or was sick. Then all the witnesses heard a car door slam and saw the blue car speed out of town. John David Gosch was gone by 6:05 a.m., only 20 minutes after he first left home.

Johnny Gosch, age 12, delivering his newspapers on a Sunday morning in his suburban neighborhood, has now been missing for 23 months.

Twenty-three months later, Johnny Gosch, now age 14, is still missing. Twenty-three months later, his parents, John and Noreen Gosch, are still selling candy bars and having garage sales to finance the long and painful search for their son; 23 months later, John and Noreen Gosch are educating Americans to be on the defense for their children. And 23 months later, Iowans are aware that children are being taken every day, snatched from their own backyards.

John and Noreen Gosch received three short phone calls that they believe were from their son on February 22, 1984. They hope and pray that he is still alive.

John David Gosch was born November 12, 1969. He is approximately 5 feet, 7 inches and weighs around 145 pounds. He has light brown hair and blue eyes. He also has freckles and a gap between his front teeth.

Now, John David Gosch was last seen with this man—who has been described and this is a composite picture drawn of different witnesses who have seen him—described as about 5 feet 9 inches in height, weighing somewhere in the neighborhood of 175 pounds. He has been described as having dark eyes and black hair which is combed straight back, in his middle age, about 40 years old. Probably has a mustache or a heavy complexion. He may be driving a two-tone blue car, dark on the top and light blue on the bottom, a rather later model car, 1979 to 1981 model car.

If you have any information, if anyone has any information, about John David Gosch's whereabouts, I would ask that they please call his parents, John and Noreen Gosch, at 515-225-7456 or the National Clearing House on Missing Children at 202-634-9821. If you cannot remember those numbers and you think you have found Johnny Gosch or you have seen the man that has been described as being around in that area that may have abducted him, if you cannot remember the numbers just call me, call Congressman TOM HARKIN, Washington, DC. The operator will put you through. And I will make sure that the Gosches get that information.

I might also say that due to the friends and neighbors of Johnny Gosch in Des Moines, the Help Find Johnny Gosch Fund has offered a $90,000 reward for his safe return and they have offered a $10,000 reward for information leading to his whereabouts.

So, again I ask if anyone should have information to please let us know the whereabouts of John David Gosch.

Again, I want to thank Congressman EDWARDS for taking this special order today. I think you are to be highly complimented for doing this. As Congresswoman BOXER said, if we just get the lead on one person, if we help one family find their missing child, you will have done a great service to this Nation.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. I thank you, TOM.

We are in a political world and because we feel things very strongly, a lot of us spend time pointing fingers at each other about issues of a different kind. I think that it is important that we work together on these things where we do have very strong common interests.

As TOM pointed out, Mr. Speaker, in 1982, we passed into law the Missing Children Act which established a national clearinghouse for information using the FBI's crime information computer to assist law enforcement officials in finding missing children.

That measure allowed parents, for the first time, to contact the FBI directly to determine if a missing child is listed on the national computer system.

Recently the House passed the Missing Children's Assistance Act and we have sent it on to the Senate now for its consideration. And that act, if approved by the Senate, would establish and maintain a national resource center for missing children, set up a toll-free telephone line where individuals may report information regarding the location of missing children or where children can call in, and provide $10 million a year for the next 3 years for grant assistance to public agencies or nonprofit organizations that work with missing children.

Last April, the National Center for Missing Children and Exploited Children was established on a $3.3 million grant from the Justice Department's Office of Juvenile Delinquency Prevention. That Center has the primary task of shoring up the volunteer groups and law enforcement agencies which are seeking to find missing children.

They have also agreed to serve as a source for information on missing children cases reported in the districts of the various Members of Congress.

As I mentioned earlier in an attempt to help stem this increasing number of parental child-stealing cases across the country, I have introduced legislation which would permit Federal prosecution and 1- to 5-year prison sentences for those who snatch children away from a parent or spouse and cross State lines for the purpose of evading a court-ordered custody decision.

Under current law the FBI cannot help find and return parental abductors unless that State has classified child stealing as a felony, and that is something that not all States have done.

So by making child stealing a Federal crime and providing stiff prison sentences, Congress can make it clear that the Federal Government stands ready and willing to protect the rights of not just the parent who has legal custody of the child, but the rights and welfare of the young victims as well.

Mr. Speaker, we have come a very long way since the problem of kidnaped children has surfaced. And we have taken some important steps to make it easier for children to be found by their parents. But we cannot afford to stop there. There are still things which can and must be done, such as the final passage of the Missing Children's Assistance Act.

But most important of all we must find the 160,000 children who have been kidnaped each year. I want to thank my 60 colleagues, Democrat and Republican, who in the future will be giving speeches about cases in their districts as my friends have here today. They are making a very important and valuable contribution to these efforts.

I thank them not just as a Member of Congress, but also as a parent. I am sure that millions of other parents around the country will appreciate their help as well.

Finally, remember, you can help if you know where Cinda Leann Pallett is, you can help by calling the police department in Oklahoma City or in your city. I know that Cinda's parents and the parents of all of the other children who have been reported missing will very much appreciate the help of all of you.

Mr. SILJANDER. Mr. Speaker, my heart was very much turned as I listened and watched on the television in the back of the cloakroom the photographs of so many young people who are missing.

The statistics imply even more than the pictures we saw here on the floor. The statistics imply that 1 million children a year are lost and of that million children a year, over 50,000, between 42,000 and 50,000, are never found again. Dividing that into 435 congressional districts that is nearly 100 children missing on the average in each congressional district. That really brings it close to home.

So many will say in war and wearing seatbelts, "I will never get shot in war," or "I will never get in an accident. I don't need to wear my seatbelt." That old attitude usually proves violently and unfortunately tragically wrong.

So often it does happen to us. So often it can happen to our loved ones.

I do not have children. I have not been blessed with children as yet, as I was married 7½ months ago. However, I have several nieces and nephews and loved ones and friends with little children. After listening to this special order I would just like to commend Congressman EDWARDS of Oklahoma wholeheartedly for his real courage and taking his time and the other Members who participated in this order to present those that they are concerned with who are missing and let people in this country know and the membership know that 100 missing, never to be found again, per congressional district, on the average, is a very, very startling statistic.

● Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, "My child is missing" is perhaps the most devastating statement a parent can utter. Each year, this traumatic reality is faced by the parents of hundreds of thousands of children. When a child is reported missing, the whole family suffers. For the parents, there is the agony, the frustration, and the anxiety of not knowing the whereabouts and status of their child; for the child, there is a high probability of sexual exploitation, physical and emotional abuse, and in some cases death.

In 85 percent of the cases, the child is abducted by the noncustodial parent. Here, revenge replaces the emotional and physical well-being of the child as the primary motive. The child becomes a pawn in the custody battle between the warring parents. Studies indicate that 50 percent of the men and women who abduct their children have prior assault and child-abuse records. A majority are emotionally immature, incapable of providing the nurturance needed for healthy growth and development. The American Bar Association reports that 7 out of 10 children taken by a parent never see the other parent again. Yet these children are among the more fortunate; for the 20,000 to 50,000 youngsters snatched by strangers, the picture is much grimmer.

It is estimated that more than 3,000 missing children are murdered annually. Many are subjected to physical torture, prostitution, and pornography. Even for those who are freed, the emotional scars may take years to heal.

In Michigan, where there are currently 1,396 children reported missing, parental child snatching is a misdemeanor—punishable by as many as 45 days in jail and a $500 fine—if an adoptive or natural parent abducts a child under 14 for more than 24 hours from another parent or legal guardian who has court-ordered custody of the child or visitation rights. If the child is kidnaped and taken outside of Michigan, the adoptive or natural parent can be found guilty of a felony, which carries a 1-year maximum prison sentence and a $2,000 fine.

In principle, this law is a necessary deterrent to a tragic problem. However, in actual practice, it often falls short of accomplishing its goal: to return the child to the legal parent. According to Wayne County's Office of Appeals and Special Services, there are several problems involved in executing parental child abduction laws. First, due to case overload, police will not investigate a report of a missing child unless foul play is suspected or the child is under 12 years of age, especially if an ex-spouse is the kidnaper. Second, States do not have sufficient funds to cover the expenses of an extradition in cases where the parent has crossed State lines. In Michigan's Wayne County, for example, only $40,000 is allotted annually to handle all extraditions. The limitation of funds necessitates that a priority judgment be rendered. As a policy matter, Wayne County will only extradite in instances of first- and second-degree murder, first-, second-, and third-degree criminal sexual misconduct and armed robbery. It will not extradite in parental child abduction cases, since the penalty is too minor to be considered worthwhile.

While recent laws have increased the involvement of the Federal Government in locating the child, the State is left to pay the expenses of bringing the offender back to the State where the abduction occurred for trial. Third, even if an extradition order is issued, the child is usually not released by local police. Rather, he is made a ward of the State to which he has been taken. Stiffer penalties and increased Federal funding are required if parental child snatching laws are to be effective.

Despite advances in missing children laws and investigative resources, the incidence of child abduction continues to rise. Increased preventive measures, awareness, and involvement by the public and private sectors are desperately needed. The Adam Walsh Child Resource Center, a nonprofit organization dedicated to protecting children, advocates the use of a password known only by the parent and child, fingerprinting of the child, presentation of a slide show, "Safety With Strangers", role playing of safety precautions in classrooms, and court monitoring of child molesting cases. I urge parents, teachers, law enforcers, and others interested in the well-being of our children to make use of the materials put out by the Adam Walsh Center.

Among the statistics cited here, only one is heartening: 40 percent of missing children are found through media publicity. It is my hope that our efforts today and our continued focus on missing children will result not only in the reuniting of abducted children and their families, but in a safer environment for American youth, as well. As John and Reva Walsh so poignantly stated, "The greatest resource of this country is our children. If you care about the future * * * please help us to help them."●

EQUAL ACCESS LEGISLATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. HARRISON]. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SILJANDER] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. SILJANDER. Mr. Speaker, this topic was dealt with on the floor of the Congress not too many hours ago. It deals with the concept called equal access. Equal access deals also with children, but in a much happier light and a much more positive viewpoint, from their standpoint.

Equal access simply suggests that children in a school, students at a public institution, have a right, a constitutional right, to meet for philosophical, religious, or other type of activities in noninstructional times, such as clubs, language clubs, clubs of all types, from card clubs, and yes, now according to the equal access, religious groups as well.

I think it is very important that our young people not be denied their constitutional right to meet and to assemble during noninstructional times under their own initiative.

However, on the floor of the Congress there is often debate centered around the bill that it was not, in fact, needed, that this bill was unnecessary.

I think that bill is necessary. The bill is very important to America. The bill is crucial to continuing constitutional rights and civil rights for our young people.

I would like to point out some reasons why I believe that. And before I do, many of the Members watching in their offices may wonder, when the wide-angle lens is initiated, where is everyone? The Chambers are essentially vacant. I have stood on this floor many times explaining exactly why the Chambers are vacant. We are now on special order time. Special orders are typically after normal voting sessions of Congress. We are still officially in session, but most Members are in their offices, writing letters or at meetings. There are no more votes. Tonight, likely a lot of them are doing other types of duties or activities.

So why have special orders? Well, many of us feel somewhat frustrated, to be frank—and I will get to equal access, incidentally, but I think it is important that people realize why the Chamber is empty. I think the Members also realize the frustration that many of us feel. I am a Republican. I do not have afforded to me the forums and committees, subcommittees, or select committees to speak out our minds, our opinions on a host of issues, such as equal access, balanced budget amendments, voluntary prayer in school, the crime package, and so many other issues that we consider important to the American agenda. Since the Democrats control Congress, the Democrats have the chairmanships of all committees, subcommittees, and select committees, and since the Democrat leadership thereby chooses and determines thereby exactly what bills will or will not be brought up in committee, needless to say, the issues that some of us feel are very important to the American people are never addressed in committee, subcommittee, or select committee.

Then comes the floor. And again the same is true. The liberal Democrat leadership, for good or for worse, chooses not to bring up certain issues that we consider, some of us, important to the American agenda, for this country; 82 percent of the American people support a balanced budget amendment. And 65 times, 65 times we have stood on this floor asking the Democrat leadership to please bypass the committee with this amendment, which is dead in committee, and bring it to the floor for an honest vote and debate. The Republican leadership has allowed us to do that. The rules say that if both leaderships give an OK, any particular given bill may be brought to the floor for amendment, for debate, and for a vote. And 65 times we have been turned down by the Democrat leadership, and 65 times it has been approved for an honest debate, an open forum, so the American people can, through C-SPAN, and the Members, in their offices and on the floor, can participate and view the debate regarding issues such as the balanced budget tax limitation amendment.

So we are just frustrated, frankly, because there is not an opportunity for a forum. But according to a recent poll, C-SPAN is connected to 18 million households; 3½ people a month, according to further studies, view C-SPAN on a regular basis.

So while the Chambers are empty—and technically to the membership I am referring to; we are not allowed to speak to the C-SPAN audience—nonetheless, 3½ million people may be watching our special orders that we participate in day in, day out, to bring our agenda, what we consider the American agenda, the American people's agenda, to those membership that might be watching in their offices. And certainly I welcome any Member on the Republican or Democrat side to participate, to indulge in colloquy, if they so desire, after I finish presenting my case. And as you can well see, there is no one in the Chambers at this point in time, and it is 8:15 Washington time.

I was referring earlier to equal access. I was referring earlier to an issue that, thank goodness, passed Congress. Even though there were shenanigans in Congress, several weeks ago the issue was brought up, equal access. It was brought up under a special rule which requires not a simple majority vote, as it ought to and as most bills do, but required, rather, a two-thirds vote. So equal access, the opportunity for students at noninstructional times, at their own initiatives, to use public facilities for ideological or religious activities, was voted down.

We had far more than the majority, but not two-thirds of the vote, as required under the special order.

The Speaker of the House had the option of bringing it up under normal circumstances and under normal rules to allow a straight up or down majority vote, as every other issue ought to be brought up under a normal rule. But no, not this time, because it was not an item that the Democrat liberal leadership wanted. So, as a result, there was manipulation.

Well, they gave us a vote indeed. And, thank goodness, we even had a chance to speak on the issue for once. But again the shenanigans of the two-thirds vote defeated the equal access bill.

So back to committee it went. And then it required whom? It required Members of the Democrat Party themselves, a minor rebellion of sorts, demanding that this bill be brought up once again, and it was, but guess what. The bill was brought up under the same old rule requiring another two-thirds vote, but his time the membership of this Congress—I give them credit for it—decided, in great wisdom, in my opinion, to pass equal access legislation, at least the amendment to the bill, and they passed it by an overwhelming number, over two-thirds vote this time.

So even with the shenanigans of the liberal Democrat leadership, it required their own internal rebellion and enough votes on both sides of the aisle to finally put into action, into a bill, equal access.

Now, as also alluded to earlier, many have suggested equal access is not really needed, that people have complete freedom, the students have complete freedom to meet presently and discuss religious activities if they so desire and this bill is unnecessary.

I would like, if I may, to point out several citings of court rulings and specific examples as to why equal access is important and why equal access is necessary.

There was a case in 1981 by the Supreme Court called Widmar against Vincent. In the Widmar against Vincent case, the Supreme Court ruled that students may in fact—and this is what the opponents of equal access point out to us—that students may in fact meet and congregate and talk about religion if they so desire. However, that ruling dealt only with college-level students and not secondary students in kindergarten through 12 schooling atmospheres and environments.

Later on, in Brandon against Guilderland Board of Education ruling in 1982, the Second Circuit Court of Appeals ruled a little bit differently and more specifically. They said: "* * * Even the mere appearance of a secular involvement in religious activities might indicate that the state has placed its imprimatur on a particular religious creed. The symbolic inference is too dangerous to permit * * *"

So what the Brandon against Guilderland Board of Education decision said, essentially, is that, while it is all right for college students to meet, it is not all right for high school students to meet.

And the same decision went on with their three reasons why it was decided that high school students should not meet for religious activity. They said, No. 1, that high school students are too immature and could be unduly influenced. No. 2, the court argued that teachers' presence and acting as supervisors inevitably would become involved in a particular activity. And, No. 3, that students might be required by compulsion to attend the particular function.

So based on this decision—and I think some reasonable criteria for why they decided what they did—it certainly makes it clear that students, by the court ruling, this court's ruling, makes it clear they cannot in fact meet as has been advocated on the floor of the Congress.

In Civil Liberties Union against Lubbock Independent School District (1982) the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals ordered the school district to ban student groups meeting for religious purposes, such as prayer or Bible reading, even though the school had adopted a policy allowing students to form a wide range of campus organizations, such as, to be included with others, religious ones.

The court also stated that allowing voluntary student religious clubs was in and of itself aiding religion and "excessively entangling the State with religion," another ruling that makes it clear that school districts do not now have the option if they so desire locally to allow students in their own initiative, their own time, to meet and discuss the Bible, the Koran, the Torah, or whatever religious documents or religious theology they care to read or discuss at their own time in a public school.

In the early 1960's, the Supreme Court ruled two different rulings which I think are very pertinent to discussions dealing with equal access. The Engel against Vitale ruling in 1962 by the Supreme Court declared it unconstitutional for the Government to compose prayers or require public schools to recite prayers.

That is clear enough. In a second decision in 1963, Arbington School District against Shemp and Murray against Culette, said the Supreme Court again declared that reading of the Bible passages and to recite the Lord's Prayer in public school was also unconstitutional.

These decisions, whether you agree with them or not, have been made. These decisions, seemingly, with the debate on the floor earlier this day, in any event, make it very confusing to most school districts. Can we or can we not allow students to meet and talk about religion? There is a deep sense of confusion among school boards. Letters to our offices certainly indicate that. They want to be responsible. Local school boards want to abide by the law; they want to abide by decisions made by the courts, but they really are confused because we have many court decisions.

As I mentioned, one saying students may meet, others saying they may not meet and one meant college students, others meant high school students. Some say you can pray and some say you cannot. Some say you may not read the Bible and others say you may. It is very, very confusing and I do not blame anyone at the local level.

Many of us in Congress are lawyers; I am not. My chief of staff, however, is. I have asked him to study and look at this; he is a lawyer. Many of my colleagues who are lawyers who I have talked with cannot really give me a clear word if I were a school board president or a member of a school board ready to vote on whether or not we want to allow our students to meet if they want to. I would not know what to do legally, and they would not know what advice to give to me. If the lawyers cannot figure it out, I would certainly think, fellow colleagues, that I do not think most Americans could figure it out and certainly not this Member, MARK SILJANDER.

Students' rights are being violated, they are being violated in five areas: Freedom of excercise of religion is No. 1; No. 2, freedom of speech; No. 3, freedom of assembly; No. 4, freedom of a public forum; and, No. 5, constitutional equal protection principles. These are five specific areas where the present court rulings, in my opinion, have clearly left students in a very, very diabolically inferior position in terms of their constitutional rights that all peoples certainly have a right to benefit from.

Others say these are only specific examples of problems. They say you have only cited one or two. Allow me to finish my special order by citing some examples, further examples, specific local examples of problems in the confusion as I have outlined earlier, that these court rulings have led to in the grassroots. Then I would like to finish by explaining specifically what we passed, and try to address some of the questions about the Ku Klux Klan and the Moonies coming to the schools. All this emotional rhetoric that we have heard in my opinion, is outlandish.

Now to the examples: According to the assistant superintendent in the Boulder, CO, schools, a group of two or more may not sit together for the purpose of spiritual or religious discussion. That is a little bit extreme, is it not? Colorado's Jefferson County School District is considering a policy that would put an end to any baccalaureate services or any school function if there is a prayer at that service.

In Indianapolis, IN, students are not allowed to get into a car or be picked up at the end of the schoolday by a youth pastor or by a worker. In Philadelphia, several students were reprimanded because they discussed their faith, shared a booklet with Bible verses in it with other students. In Minnesota, a fourth-grade student was reprimanded by her supervisor for bowing her head and praying before her meal. A fourth-grade student. They say that equal access is unnecessary. In Philadelphia a teacher was told to remove the wreath from his classroom door because it represented Christmas, and that is religious. In the Denver area, at a high school, three teachers were warned that their jobs may be in danger if they participated in a Bible study activity even if it was at night and held off campus. Now, that is pretty extreme in anyone's book, in any mainstream moderate American's viewpoint of the world, I am sure.

A teacher in the Boulder schools was reprimanded for handing out private invitations to a Christmas party because the invitations contained the word Christmas, and the policy of the school is to refer to the season simply as winter holidays. We are getting a little bit extreme.

Last, in Cincinnati, a principal issued a statement that it is illegal to even mention God, even mention God in the public schools. Now, ladies and gentlemen, it certainly seems ridiculous that in the public schools a student could not at least mention the word "God," but up at this podium each and every day before session begins and so much so in the Supreme Court and equally so in the Senate, the day begins with a prayer. The day begins with a prayer. And lo and behold, the name of God and many other prophets including Moses, whose picture is facing me on the wall of the Chamber, are mentioned in this taxpayer-funded establishment in edifice.

So, yes, indeed, clarity is needed. The equal access bill is important, and this equal access bill, as watered down as I think it is, is at least a compromise. It is at least, and I thank God, a step in the right direction. The equal access amendment that passed today in the House says very simply that any students who wish to conduct a meeting within the limit of an open forum, which means an open environment, on the basis of religious, political, or philosophical, or the content of the speech at such meetings, is legal. That is all it says.

If those words are too confusing, it is very simple. It just says that students that want to gather and talk about philosophy may do so legally in public schools. Students that wish to gather and talk about politics like we do here every day, they may legally do so as well. And, yes, if students so determine they wish to talk about religion of any kind, the students may do so as well.

Let me emphasize according to the amendment that was passed today, this is only during noninstructional times, when school is not normally in session. Before school, after school, or when school is on break. Is this so radical? Is this so unfounded; is this so rightwing to simply suggest that students may have free access during noninstructional times to talk about philosophy, politics, or religion? I think not. I do not think the average American really believes that allowing public school facilities to be used as such is unreasonable.

The bill even goes on to clarify this and make things so succinct and so clear that any rational-minded person could hardly think anything but supporting this bill. It says that schools shall be deemed to offer fair opportunity to students who wish to conduct a meeting within this limited open forum if such school uniformly provides that.

Now, understand, this is very important, five points: No. 1, that the meeting is voluntary student initiated. It must be voluntary. It must be student initiated; it cannot be done by teachers or deans or principals or parents or outsiders, it must be students, and they must initiate it and it must be voluntary, if they want to meet after school or before school.

No. 2, there can be no sponsorship of the meeting by anyone except for the students themselves. So the accusation of, oh, the Ku Klux Klan and the Moonies, they are going to raid our schools and be selling flowers and burning crosses in the halls is a vicious distortion of what this bill and what this amendment does.

Students will not burn crosses. You cannot have a member of the KKK or the Moonies hold a forum; that is not what the bill says. It must be student related. No sponsorship.

In fact, point 3 says that employees or agents of the school or Government that are present at a religious meeting can only be there in a nonparticipatory capacity. They cannot even participate if they happen to be in the room or the area.

The fourth point: If the meeting does not materially and substantially interfere with the orderly conduct and educational activities within the school. So you cannot have Moonies rushing in and crosses being burned in the halls. Even if the students were Moonies, even if the students were KKK members, they cannot disrupt the orderly process of the educational institution.

Is that not clear enough?

And the fifth point: Nonschool persons may not direct, conduct, control, or regularly attend the activities of student groups. Now, then, how can all these fanatical groups and cults, as we have heard on this floor, that made my stomach turn, all this emotional oratory, how in the world can these cults come in with this clear language that sets up very clear barriers and parameters by which this bill would take effect?

"Nothing in this title," it says in the bill, "shall be construed to authorize the United States or any State or any political subdivision," meaning local school districts, "to influence the form or content of any prayer or religious activity." So the school cannot influence a prayer. The school cannot write a prayer. If the students want to meet at their own initiative in a noninstructional time, they can formulate their own prayers, but no one else or subdivision can have a State-decided or State-written prayer. That is not allowed under the bill.

No. 2: To require any person to participate in prayer or religious activity. No one is required or forced or overly encouraged or undue pressure can be applied to a student to participate in a prayer during noninstructional time with groups of other students in the educational institution.

Keep in mind, we are not talking about voluntary school prayer in this issue. This is just equal access for students to use facilities for religious, political, or philosophical discussions. That is all. And in the context of those discussions, if the students decide they want to pray, then they cannot be mandated.

I mentioned several court rulings that said, "Oh, we cannot have equal access because students will be forced to pray and the State could formulate prayers, or the local school board or the teacher, or there could be undue influence on these young, impressionable minds," as the court ruled, but that is not so. It is not so in this bill.

This clarifies and makes specific that the school and the institutions, the Government, may not do any of those specific citings that I have mentioned.

They cannot extend public funds beyond the incidental cost of providing the space for student-initiated meetings. So the school cannot take their money to fund buying Bibles, or Torahs or Korans. That is not allowed.

They cannot compel any school or agent or employee to attend a school meeting if the content of the speech at the meeting is contrary to the beliefs of the agent or employee. So the school cannot force teachers or administrators or deans or principals or the janitors or anyone to participate, to attend or in any way involve themselves in this after-school activity.

They cannot sanction meetings that are otherwise unlawful, like burning of crosses by the KKK, or the Moonies selling flowers in the halls, the same old rhetoric we have heard all day.

And last, they cannot limit the right of groups of students which are not a specified numerical size or to abridge the constitutional rights of any person.

How much more clear does one need to be to explain the details of simply allowing, not prayer in school, but equal access of students to our taxpaid edifices and facilities across the country.

The other argument is, "Oh, but what if a school district decides if this amendment is passed," which it did pass today and likely will go through the entire legislative process within the next several weeks, I am very optimistic of that, "What if a school district decides not to allow students to meet at noninstructional times on their own initiation? Will we cut off Federal funds to schools or to the community or to the county or to the State?"

No; it says that nothing in this title shall be construed to authorize the United States to deny or withhold Federal financial assistance to any school. It says so right there in the bill.

So what is the due process? All it does is say that if you are a student or a club or a group and you want to meet to talk about philosophy, politics or religion, and you are denied that equal access, we simply give that student or that group of students due process, legal due process, to take their concerns through the judicial system. The same if you are discriminated against as an adult, as a white, as a black, as a Hispanic, as an Asian. If you are discriminated against, the present law allows you to take that person or group or agency or institution that discriminated against you to court—the same thing.

I hope this special order makes abundantly clear that this legislation, the equal access bill, the amendment that, thank God, passed today by an overwhelmingly majority of votes, is so balanced that the membership bent over backward to make sure that every concern by the courts and concerns by many Members of Congress about the misuse or abuse of utilizing school public facilities by students will not be abused.

I am just thrilled to say that this bill was successful and will be successful, and for the first time that I know of, students soon will have the right to meet, to discuss, to deliberate political, philosophical, and theologically religious views if they want to before or after school or during any time the school is not in official session.

It is a step in the right direction. Does it answer the hopes of those who want to allow voluntary prayer in public schools? It does not. It does not. However, it certainly is a victory for many of the millions of Americans across the country who have been praying, who have been writing letters to their House and Senate Members, pleading with them, "If you will not pass prayer in school, voluntary prayer, then please at least allow our students to meet and talk and discuss without any undue influence or pressure," and we have done exactly that.

So, my colleagues, I appreciate the time that you have taken, those of you who are in your offices listening, because as many of us can see, there is no one else on the floor. A lot of people might be wondering, who have tuned in, the Members in their offices, "Well, where is everyone?" I alluded to this earlier in my presentation and will repeat it one more time before closing out my special order.

As a Republican, as someone who believes in the American Opportunities Society view of the world versus the old liberal society, liberal welfare society, views of the past, our views are not heard in committees because the Democrat leadership runs the committees. Our views are not heard on the floor during normal sessions because they run all bills and decide what will or will not come up, and they determine how long the debate in fact will be.

The other element is, is it not interesting that the wide-angle lens is used to try to embarrass some of us? I am not embarrassed a bit. I know that C-SPAN is hooked up to 18 million households. That is certainly more Super Bowls full of people than I could ever hope to speak to. I am not embarrassed at all because I know there is hypocrisy behind it, because when we began talking about the American agenda, about a balanced budget amendment, about voluntary school prayer, about equal access, about the crime package, about so many issues on special orders, our only forum as those who believe in American opportunity, our only time to discuss the issues without being gaveled out of order, this is our only forum we have, special orders, when normal business is completed, when most Members are gone, doing their thing elsewhere, and for good reason, because there will not be any more votes.

But the House is still technically in session.

Why is there a wide-angle lens only on special orders? Why? Because most of us are the ones that tend to dominate special orders. The intention in my opinion was to embarrass those of us in front of the many millions that are watching C-SPAN, to embarrass us, to make it look like we are talking to virtually no one, but we are talking to many millions of people and those in their offices that are listening to C-SPAN, the Members themselves.

I ask one last question. Why if the wide-angle lens is used for our special orders, why is it not used gavel to gavel throughout the day? Why not have the wide-angle lens during normal session hours when we do vote and we are in active debate?

Well, I will tell you why in my opinion, because the House Chamber looks about the same. The House Chamber looks about the same because there are committee functions. We are at meetings and hearings and we can watch it again on our own television in our offices.

I think there should be uncensored C-SPAN. That is my opinion. That is the opinion of the American Opportunities Society. As part of their organization, I am excited to support total openness of C-SPAN, gavel to gavel, allow the cameras, wide angle, tight angle, whatever they desire, gavel to gavel. Let us not just limit it to when we happen to be speaking.

Sure, they do it with Democrats, that is true, if Democrats are speaking on special orders, but how many do speak on special orders? Very few; so the object is to embarrass one or two Democrats and embarrass dozens of Republicans, especially considering the hours that we take versus what the Democrats take—I should say the liberal Democrats that believe in the liberal welfare society, that we in the American Opportunities Society have been fighting and trying to change the course of America with a new vision of the country, a new vision of opportunity for our futures.

So I am just closing to suggest that I hope the membership will agree and support the resolution of the Republican Caucus that says from gavel to gavel there should be open, uncensored opportunity for all the C-SPAN cameras to show exactly what is happening during normal business hours and during votes. Do not blank the screen out during votes to show how many votes. Superimpose that over with the wide-angle lens to show exactly what happens during the votes.

I am sure the 18 million households that are hooked up to C-SPAN knows and would be very fascinated to see exactly what happens on this floor during votes, to see the arm twisting and to see the chaos and the beehives that disappear. Maybe then there could be more order instilled in the House if we knew that the wide-angle lens could be on us any time gavel to gavel.

So we as the Republican party, we as the American Opportunities Society, believe in uncensored, open, free press, and C-SPAN which has a great effect as a great educational tool for 18 million potential households should not be censored, should be open to all people, should be allowed to go wide-angle lens from gavel to gavel, not just during the times that Republicans tend to have special orders for the most part, to try to embarrass us.

I thank the Speaker very much for the time and the opportunity to share my viewpoint and use this forum in a special order to talk about equal access, missing children and, yes, fairness in terms of the usage of the C-SPAN cameras in this House Chamber.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

By unanimous consent, permission to address the House, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered, was granted to:

Mr. WALKER, for 60 minutes, today.

Mr. SILJANDER, for 60 minutes, on August 1.

Mr. SILJANDER, for 60 minutes, on August 2.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

PICK-SLOAN MISSOURI BASIN PROGRAM

HON. THOMAS A. DASCHLE
OF SOUTH DAKOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing legislation to amend section 5 of Public Law 97-273 to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to make available Pick-Sloan Missouri Basin Program pumping power to the Hilltop and Gray Goose Irrigation Districts in South Dakota.

Since passage of the Flood Control Act of 1944, the people of South Dakota have been awaiting fulfillment of the irrigation development envisioned by the Pick-Sloan Missouri Basin Program. As compensation for the permanent loss of more than 520,000 acres of South Dakota's richest and most productive agricultural lands due to the construction of the Oahe, Fort Randall, Gavins Point, and Big Bend Dams on the main stem of the Missouri River in South Dakota, the development of irrigation for more than 960,000 acres in South Dakota was slated under the Pick-Sloan program. After more than four decades, this development has not yet occurred.

In 1982, with the passage of H.R. 4347 which became Public Law 97-273, Congress recognized the continuing obligation to assist irrigation development in South Dakota by authorizing the Secretary of the Interior, in cooperation with the Department of Energy, to make available Pick-Sloan Missouri Basin Program pumping power to the Grass Rope irrigation project in South Dakota. In addition, section 5 also authorized the Secretary of the Interior to make available Pick-Sloan Missouri Basin Program pumping power to other irrigation projects subsequently authorized by Congress to receive this power. The legislation which I am introducing today to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to make available Pick-Sloan Missouri Basin Program pumping power to the Hilltop and Gray Goose Irrigation Districts further recognizes the continuing obligations to support irrigation development in South Dakota and was anticipated by the Congress in 1982.

Because of reoccurring drought, the Gray Goose and Hilltop Irrigation Districts were organized to provide needed increased economic stability. Today, however, the economic viability and future of the Hilltop and Gray Goose Irrigation Districts and their individual family farm members are threatened because of the combined effects of high farm operating costs including energy costs and low market prices.

The importance of making available Pick-Sloan pumping power to the Hilltop and Gray Goose Irrigation Districts and the need for speedy consideration of this legislation has already been presented in detail to Congress in testimony submitted to the Subcommittee on Water and Power Resources by representatives of both irrigation districts. I ask that a portion of this testimony be printed in the RECORD at this point for the benefit of my colleagues.

WRITTEN TESTIMONY OF THE HILLTOP IRRIGATION DISTRICT, CHAMBERLAIN, SD

ORGANIZATION AND BACKGROUND

Hilltop Irrigation District was organized as a statutory irrigation district in 1976. Under South Dakota law, irrigation districts are political subdivisions, and have some taxing powers, as well as other general powers usually associated with such entities.

The District is located about three miles northeast of Chamberlain, South Dakota, and is entirely within the boundaries of Brule County. There are seven farm family members. It encompasses approximately 2,000 acres, and no operator irrigates in excess of the maximum 960 acres. The cost of the project was $925,000.00, of which the District members contributed $75,000.00 and the other $850,000.00 was financed through a bond purchased by the Farmers Home Administration (FmHA). It is a forty year bond at 5% interest. No Grant moneys were involved in the project.

The project was engineered by Benjamin, Kasl and Associates of McCook, Nebraska, a nationally recognized engineering firm with extensive experience in irrigation projects.

Environmental impact studies at the beginning of the project showed that the soil is well suited for sprinkler irrigation, the quality of the water was and is good for irrigation, and that the over-all impact of the project was very advantageous to the environment and the community.

DISTRIBUTION METHODS

The project is all electric. The District entered into a contract with Tri-County Electric Cooperative for 2,500 horsepower for ten (10) years, with a minimum cost of the demand charge and any overage subject to adjustment by the cooperative annually.

The project utilizes 3-phase underground distribution and equipment provided by Tri-County Electric Cooperative, as well as overhead lines and substations provided by East River (SD) Electric. Actual pumping and distribution is effectuated by a main pumping plant on the Missouri River impoundment (Lake Francis Case) using 1,600 horsepower, a district booster station using 275 horsepower, and individual booster motors at each of the districts 13 individually owned electric drive center pivots.

Water is distributed through an enclosed pipeline system, utilizing flow meters at all tap offs. The system is considered by nationally recognized standards to be of modern, efficient and economical design. It has a maximum capacity of 10,000 gallons per minute with 385 feet of lift.

FEASIBILITY

The District-financed feasibility study was done dated August 30, 1976, by Benjamin, Kasl and Associates. The study projected a net profit of $38.15 per acre based upon a corn crop with a yield of 125 bushels per acre and a market price of $2.50 per bushel. The projected pumping cost was $30.08 to apply 18.72 inches of water per acre, or 2,638 acre/feet of water for the entire district. During its operation the district has never used that amount of water.

Today's reality makes operating within the District at a profit almost impossible. The operators, in a continuing effort to continue to increase the efficiency of the project, hired a professional consultant, Agricultural Technology Company, to provide scientific and technical expertise to the District and its operators. Based upon the experience within the district during its operation, the professional consultant projects a total cost per acre to operate within the district of $468.26! Breakeven point under those circumstances is 150 bushels per acre corn yield and a market price of $3.12 bushel. According to ASCS figures, the yield in the district has never reached 150 bushels per acre, and during the past five years has had an ASCS average of 129.4 bushels per acre. These projections do not take into consideration the cost of transporting the crop from the field to the dryers, nor from the farm storage to market.

This projection further presumes that there will be no 1984 increase in the cost of electrical power. Projections of a $3.12 per bushel market price for corn, and no increase in electrical power rates, both appear at present to be very unlikely.

PROPOSAL

Hilltop Irrigation District proposes that P.L. 97-273 be amended to include Hilltop Irrigation District and Gray Goose Irrigation District (which has similar experiences and similar problems) as eligible for low rate power.

JUSTIFICATION

The District feels that the inclusion of these two relatively small districts in the low rate power authorization has more than sufficient justification. The major points are as follows:

1. Electrical power suppliers have made it quite clear that increases in rates can be anticipated for the future. Even without continued increases in the cost of electrical power to the Districts, the continued ability to operate appears questionable at best. There is presently land in both Districts in some state of foreclosure proceedings. Although an irrigation district is a political subdivision, its taxing power is so limited that it is totally dependent upon collecting water and power fees from its members.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by the Member on the floor.

When these can no longer be collected, the districts are broke.

2. Because of the demand charge, the District cannot rely on periodic years in which rainfall is sufficient to offset the dry years in which there is a loss. Even if the District does not pump a drop of water, it is obligated to pay the demand charge of $25,000.00!

3. Power costs have been one of the largest single expense of operating the irrigated acres in the district, and based upon the projections will probably be the largest single expense in 1984.

4. Power rates have increased nearly 300% since 1977 (more than 300% since the feasibility study was done).

5. Both Tri-County Electric and East River Electric have significant investments made in the facilities necessary to provide power to Hilltop. Failure of the District means both the loss of revenue and the inability to use the facilities by both.

6. Failure of Hilltop or Gray Goose or both would have a negative impact on the future of irrigation projects in South Dakota and elsewhere.

7. Failure of Hilltop would mean that FmHA would have to "foreclose" on the equipment of Hilltop, which has little or no actual value, which in turn would mean significant monetary loss for FmHA.

8. Low rate power has been favorably treated for many Tribal projects. Including Hilltop and Gray Goose would help to equalize the treatment of off-reservation producers.

9. Inclusion of these districts in the low rate power authorization would help fulfill the commitment Congress made to provide low cost power to irrigation projects, which commitment was made when the Pick-Sloan Act was passed several years ago.

10. Irrigation is one of the most effective weapons against the drought, which in turn is one of the most common reasons for the expenditure of huge sums of money for drought relief programs on the part of Congress.

11. Irrigation stabilizes the cash flow in the area, benefitting both operators and support businesses, such as agricultural product outlets, financial institutions, and area retail stores.

12. Economic dictates that in exchange for small investment in low cost power, there is a larger reduction in farm relief program expenditures, less aid to rural electric co-ops, less low income assistance to rural and community families, and increased revenues through income taxes.

SUMMARY

Based upon present rates, costs, and farm prices, it appears likely, perhaps inevitable, that Hilltop and Gray Goose Irrigation Districts will go under without low rate power. Admittedly, other factors have an impact upon financially stable operations, but the fact remains that electric power is rapidly becoming the single most expensive item in the operation, it is the item which has had the largest increase in cost during the period 1977-1983, and it is the one item about which something can be done and at the same time fulfill the long-time commitment of the Pick-Sloan provisions for irrigation.●

YOUNG IDEAS

HON. BARBARA BOXER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform my colleagues of an extraordinary organization, the Media Explorer Post 400 in San Francisco. In collaboration with video professionals, these student members of the Explorer Scouts of America produce a weekly cablevision show, "Young Ideas." They design the show content and operate the equipment. Episodes feature good news, brief performances, and serious interviews with guests from the corporate, political, or social service communities. One of their recent programs featured an interview with the Collins family whose son, Kevin, age 10, has been missing since February 10. This program was designed not only to help the Collins family, but other families who suffer the same loss. The following article best describes their efforts to locate missing children like Kevin Collins:

MY CHILD IS MISSING! CAN YOU HELP?

(By Keith St. Clare and Michael Krische)

February 15th: By eight o'clock that Wednesday night, the Post had just finished putting away or returning equipment used weekly to tape "Young Ideas." I had just gotten home. The phone rang. It was a viewer. He was now a volunteer working with the Collins family and eager to know if we could interview the father, David Collins in hopes of alerting our public to their plight—the loss of Kevin Collins.

An Explorer Post is organized for action, and a community access program is designed to serve viewers who are committed to your topic area. Within minutes the Post Leader, Marc Kennedy and show host, Eric Ward were on the "phone-tree" alerting twenty-two scouts and developing a production plan that included parents, other advisors, and the local business community. During school the next day, they would reach out to their teachers and fellow students. We were going to do our best to help the Collins find Kevin!

By Friday, a circle of concern had developed. With the assistance of the The Public Eye, Inc. we were able to identify a number of corporations that might help us in post production and distribution of this important message. The matter was urgent. That weekend the Post Public Relations intern, Malanie Ramos and I worked up a series of press releases, and target letters designed to seek aid from businesses that provided video services, communications, and bulk mailing. I also wrote a request for funds suitable for charitable foundations. While Ms. Ramos met with the editors of The San Francisco Independent, who were known to be good friends of scouting and to have a son involved—Mathew Fontes.

Monday and Tuesday calls, letters, articles and releases went out to those selected. We were committed. Some jobs were given to a Scout, some to an advisor, some shared by a committee. The San Francisco police department was eager to help, supplying a file tape re-enactment of the crime. The Foundation for Community Service Cable Television provided a detailed list of all the access channels in California as well as invaluable encouragement and consultation about state-wide distribution. The Collin's volunteers contacted every possible source of new or used video tape. None of the vendors would help, but several advertising agencies, KTVU, KPIX, and ATT were generous with used and some new stock. KPIX agreed to cover the actual taping and place it on the news prior to air time. The San Francisco Independent put out of a front page article on the eve of the playback. The goal: to reach the widest possible local audience and then to collect up to one hundred tapes to use for distributing the Collin's interview. By Wednesday morning we had seventy five units. We were prepared to record.

All of our tapings are remote. We meet at the Golden Gate Chapter of the American Red Cross, which also loans us equipment, provides occasional consultation and space for a make-shift studio. Usually a guest arrives at 3:30 pm and then some youth conduct a pre-interview, while others work on tech or various clerical aspects of the production. This one would not be different—except that we were planning for a substantial post production period. Ours is a one-camera show, 1½ inch, color, with a graphics credits tape made with the assistance of our Post sponsor, Viacom Cablevision of San Francisco.

The Collins family arrived, we taped the interview and begun the awesome task of editing, making multiple copies, packaging and distribution. Without the assistance of Breene Kerr, Penderson and Associates and Blue Stone Video, we could never have produced as viable an edited edition. In turn, many access channels could not have shown the work on their station. There was still the problem of copying, packaging and postage—but by now faith was very real to us all. We knew that it was just a matter of finding persons who could identify with the situation from Kevin's point of view.

Curtis Corum of ATT heard of our need and helped move the request up the corporate ladder. Everyone we talked to understood and was sympathetic. It was just a matter of reaching a general understanding, and finding the right office or department. Because of the recent moves in the company, some matters, such as corporate charity, are unsettled.

Within a week following the interview, the program had been competently edited, noise reduction and time-code had been applied. Just as we were beginning to wonder what to do next, ATT called. They would provide postage! Almost immediately afterward, Russ Quon called to say that his company, Opinion Relay in Oakland, would be happy to computerize the list and to package the copies episodes. It seemed to be too good to be true—until One Pass capped the day. Iris from the Duplication Department had received a letter from us seeking copies or funds for copying. They could not provide a cash grant, but would seventy-five copies help?

The unity we felt—the Post, the Collins family, those concerned persons from local businesses, the cable system representatives could not have been described that weekend as we worked to do all that would make the next three weeks of actual distribution go smoothly. One hundred and fifty copies were made in all. They were sent to a hundred and twenty-five California systems; twenty-five in several states. The packaging was designed to "piggy back—bicycle" from station to station. A primary targeted station would receive the copy and a package designed to receive that or another copy for sending on to another station. We have continued to edit and update the interviews with supplemental information, and to recycle the copies returned to us back out into the cable community. Some have estimated that as many as 43 million people will eventually see this message.

The need for preparation, proper identification of children and quick action on the part of authorities and responsible community groups is very real. Post 400 of the Explorer Scouts of America is proud to serve. We hope that not only will YOUNG IDEAS help to bring Kevin home someday soon, but that the advice and example given by the Collins family will aid parents and children who might otherwise suffer the same loss—if they are not better prepared.●

OCTOBER AS "SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY AWARENESS MONTH"

HON. DON FUQUA

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. FUQUA. Mr. Speaker, we are living in a progressively more technological era. That technology depends on the basic research that is done by our Nation's scientists. Nevertheless, most of our citizens accept the material changes that occur without recognizing effort, the planning, and the financial support that underlies these advances.

Dr. Alvin W. Trivelpiece, Director of the Office of Energy Research, Department of Energy, has proposed that October be designated as "Science and Technology Awareness Month." I concur in that suggestion. For the RECORD, I include the letter which Dr. Trivelpiece has written to various science and engineering journals and to service organizations urging that knowledgeable individuals address the service clubs on the role of science and technology in today's society. A well-informed public is as crucial in this area as it is in any arena of public concern.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY AWARENESS MONTH

During the past 3 years I have been director of the Office of Energy Research, I have testified before several congressional committees on various aspects of some of the Department of Energy's (DOE's) science and technology programs. A recurrent theme of the questions asked by the members of these committees has been, "What are we getting for our money by supporting basic research?" In reply, I have used what I now call the "standard argument." I usually cite some of the federally supported basic and applied research conducted 10 or 20 years ago. I then point out how many of our present goods, services, products, health care benefits, and so forth can be traced to that support. For DOE it is an impressive list that includes nuclear power, nuclear medicine, and radiation processing. It is clear that some substantial portion of our gross national product comes from this kind of activity. Unfortunately, this explanation is not particularly useful to a representative or sentor seeking ways to explain to the nonscientist constituent why the present levels of government support for basic and applied research are essential for the future economic growth in certain technical areas where the United States must remain among the leaders. Without such support, we could easily lose our ability to compete internationally in these areas.

The importance of having members of Congress informed on this issue cannot be underestimated. Those of us who testify help in the process of keeping them informed. But they are busy, and science and technology are not always their highest priority. For this reason, I believe that in the final analysis it may be more important for a substantial number of our citizens to have a better appreciation of the fact that virtually everything that they eat, drive, fly, view, take, wear, and so forth exists in its present form in part due to past government support of basic and applied research. Industrial support of applied research and development is also essential to this process and needs to be encouraged. However, at the moment, I am more concerned with the government role in the basic end of the activities.

I have a suggestion on how to improve this situation of public understanding of the role of science and technology in our lives. I believe that it is time for scientists and engineers to take more responsibility for explaining science and technology in ways the rest of our citizens can understand and appreciate. That is, we need to convince them that science and technology are important to our nation's future. How to accomplish this? Pamphlets, television, radio, and other media events help. Traveling lecturers who give excellent views of technical subjects in entertaining ways help. However, in my opinion there is no substitute for person-to-person contact between scientists and engineers and members of the rest of the community in which they live.

Therefore, I propose that October be designated "Science and Technology Awareness Month." What this means is that members of the AAAS, the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics, the Society for Industrial and Applied Mathematics, the Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers, the American Physical Society, the American Physical Society, the American Nuclear Society, the American Chemical Society, and so forth volunteer to give a simple, jargon-free talk on what they do and why they believe it is important to our nation. They should give these talks to their local chapter of the Lions, Kiwanis, or Rotary clubs; Chamber of Commerce; or any other appropriate civic or service organization. Far from being put off, the public I come in contact with is fascinated by science and technology and is willing to learn about them and the benefits they produce. It helps if things are put in terms that they understand and the explanation comes from a friend or neighbor.

My objective is to cause the greatest possible mixing of those who earn a living as scientists or engineers with those who do not. If this kind of interaction is to occur, it needs to be stimulated but need not be too highly organized. In my attempt to try to stimulate this activity, I am sending this same letter to several civic service clubs and booster organizations in the hope that they will contact the various local or national technical professional societies to make arrangements to have volunteers talk to them. Those who believe that a better informed public is important for the health of U.S. science and technology should volunteer to help make conditions better by giving such talks to their local service club, high school PTA, or civic clubs. Mayors, councilmen, representatives, and senators should also be invited. They might enjoy the talk and add some thoughts of their own. Since this is being suggested in the spirit of volunteerism, I will give a talk on DOE's basic research programs to the first service or civic club that invites me.

LENDING POLICIES OF THE WORLD BANK

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues a correspondence I had with Mr. A.W. Clausen, president of the World Bank, concerning an article which appeared in the Christian Science Monitor on June 25, 1984.

That article claimed that the lending policies of the World Bank had shifted dramatically, from programs designed to help the underprivileged to programs designed to enhance the value of private investment and bailout insolvent governments and their imprudent creditors. Mr. Clausen addressed himself to those disturbing charges in a letter dated July 20. The Monitor article, and the ensuing correspondence follow:

THE WORLD BANK AND WORLD POVERTY

(By Robert F. Wasserstrom)

While public attention has been focused on the growing debt burdens of Latin American countries, the World Bank has quietly revised its longstanding policy to assist the disadvantaged in developing areas. Early in May, senior bank officials gathered in Bedford Springs, Pa., to hear a special report from Paul Volcker, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, and to dismantle the barriers that have traditionally insulated development aid from the politics of international finance.

Since the bank was created in 1946, underdeveloped nations have borrowed large sums to build roads, dams, ports, irrigation works, factories, and power systems. Much of this money was raised in the international capital markets, where the bank's assets, supplied by such donors as the United States, France, Britain, and Japan, made it an attractive customer. This capital was re-lent with a modest markup to developing countries which could not obtain adequate credit. In cases of extreme need, such countries were even allowed to take out loans at virtually no interest for up to 50 years. The justification for these loans arose from the view that poor countries sometimes required a little extra help in laying the groundwork for self-sufficient economic growth.

Under President Robert McNamara, who took office in 1968, the World Bank adopted its much-acclaimed "poverty orientation" and expanded its involvement in health, nutrition, education, agricultural credit, land reform, and population control. It also devised procedures to measure how many people lived below the poverty line in underdeveloped areas. At McNamara's insistence, lending officers were then required to ensure that these people received substantial benefits from every project the bank supported. Finally, he set up a special office of environmental affairs to suggest how bank staff might improve techniques for managing natural resources and protecting the rights of ethnic minorities.

When McNamara departed in 1981, he left a unique legacy and a highly proficient technical staff whose reputation for competence and fairness set the standard for other international organizations. Unfortunately, this legacy has not been maintained. Under McNamara's successor, A. W. (Tom) Clausen, the bank's most cherished asset, its relative independence from partisan interference, appears to have eroded. In the past three years priorities have shifted from projects designed to benefit the underprivileged and now factor large-scale capital ventures which enhance the value of private investment. Programs in health, education, and rural development have been curtailed. Even agriculture has suffered.

What has brought about these changes? Pressure from the Reagan administration has played a primary role in altering the bank's fundamental commitments. Such pressure underlay the public controversy that erupted briefly last year over US contributions to IDA, the bank's special fund for disadvantaged nations. The message this controversy conveyed was reinforced by the administration's decision to abrogate previous understandings and reduce support for the fund. Simultaneously, as countries like Mexico, Brazil, Argentina, and the Philippines have fallen farther behind in payments to private lenders, US officials at the bank insisted on blurring the line between development assistance and so-called structural-adjustment loans; i.e., loans that may be used to pay external debts. The effect of this arrangement has been disturbing: Instead of stimulating economic progress, the world's largest source of public capital is now being used to bail out insolvent governments and their imprudent creditors.

Implementing the new order will involve considerable alterations in bank procedures. No longer will project officers be required to demonstrate that people below the poverty line will benefit from major investments. Lending to some financially troubled nations will be accelerated, with the paradoxical effect that the size of their external debt, not the technical merits of their investment program, may determine how much money they receive. Bank staff have been told they will have less opportunity to focus on project design and will spend less time monitoring compliance with the loan agreements. Finally, as if to ensure that supervision will become a mere formality, senior officials plan to permit more "front-ending" among favored borrowers; that is, loan funds will be disbursed in one lump sum rather than in a series of payments as development milestones are reached.

Clearly, such modifications spell the end of McNamara's strategy to alleviate world poverty, preserve the global environment, and further the embattled cause of ethnic and racial minorities. They also signal a new stage in the bank's history, when technical decisions may be subordinated to the political agenda of whoever happens to hold public office in the US. Most troubling of all, such policies appear to have been formulated behind closed doors without wider discussions or review. Surely, a transformation of this magnitude must undergo full congressional scrutiny before it is allowed to proceed any further than it already has.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, June 28, 1984.

Mr. A.W. CLAUSEN,
President, World Bank,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CLAUSEN: As you may know, an article by Robert F. Wasserstrom, of World Resources Institute, appeared in the Christian Science Monitor earlier this week concerning the World Bank and its policies.

Mr. Wasserstrom's article, which is enclosed, is very critical of certain changes which have taken place in the bank's overall strategy and programs since your tenure began. In particular, the author attacks the bank's shift away from focusing on basic human needs in developing countries to concentrating on structural adjustment lending to the major debtor countries of Latin America. Mr. Wasserstrom also is critical of what he believes to be the excessive influence of the Reagan Administration over bank policy.

As a strong supporter of the Bretton Woods institutions, I found the article disturbing. I understand that the exigencies of the debt problem require a certain shift in policies by the bank if it is to be effective in helping to resolve this difficult problem. However, I do not believe that the bank, the single largest source of development finance, should turn its back on the needs of the poorest in the developing countries.

Accordingly, I would very much appreciate it if you would respond to the charges leveled at your institution by Mr. Wasserstrom. At a minimum, we should clear the air on this matter.

I look forward to hearing from you,

Sincerely,

LEE H. HAMILTON,
Member of Congress.

THE WORLD BANK,
Washington, DC, July 20, 1984.

Hon. LEE H. HAMILTON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR LEE: Thank you for your June 28 letter enclosing the recent article in The Christian Science Monitor alleging that the Bank has revised its policy of trying to alleviate poverty in our developing member countries.

I too was disturbed by the article but I assure you it is based on a misunderstanding, or ignorance, of what the Bank has been doing, and continues to try to do, on this important issue.

You will recall that in the early 1970s the Bank began to focus increasingly on the question of equity and how development strategies and investment programs could be designed to improve more rapidly the lives of millions of desperately poor by increasing their ability to produce more. It involved a major shift in our lending in agriculture to emphasize smallholder farmers, an expansion of our lending to small- and medium-scale industrial enterprises and a major effort to redirect public services—ranging from extension services to potable water supplies—from the relatively rich to the neglected.

We have had some false starts, we have made mistakes but we have also achieved success and learned much. Today we can say with confidence that this increased concern for equity, for improved opportunities and living standards for the poorest has not come at the expense of growth. To the contrary, increases in agricultural production in many countries have resulted from the provision of inputs and technical know-how to small farmers, stimulated by adequate prices to produce more. In country after country, the adoption of more appropriate standards for low-income housing, for health service delivery, for water supply, has dramatically increased the share of the population serviced at no, or modest, increases in expenditure.

Lending commitments of the Bank and the International Development Association (IDA) to low-income countries (with per capita incomes below $680 in 1979) increased from 37 percent of the total program before 1968 to 58 percent in the 1979–83 lending program. IDA now lends only to this group; indeed more than 90 percent of IDA resources go to countries in Sub-Saharan African and Asia with per capita incomes of less than $400 a year. Details of our experience with poverty alleviation, including specific country and project examples, are contained in the enclosed booklet, "Focus on Poverty", which we issued early last year.

The Monitor article implies that the difficult external environment for developing countries has forced the Bank, more recently, to de-emphasize our fundamental commitment to poverty alleviation and to relax internal procedures on poverty monitoring. There is no doubt that our member countries face enormous immediate problems such as large debt repayments, high energy costs and the necessity of undertaking difficult structural adjustments in their economies. These are urgent priorities and, understandably, there is an impulse to defer longer-term objectives such as the reduction of poverty, especially given the scarcity of external financing, and particularly concessional financing such as is available through IDA.

Nonetheless, we feel that this is a temptation that must be resisted. Necessary short-term adjustments should not distort longer-term development programs that pursue growth and the alleviation of poverty. We are most sensitive to this and you might be interested in some recent decisions of Bank management and our Board of Executive Directors that reflect this concern:

In Brazil, where we are assisting with a major economic restructuring effort, the Board in May approved a second health project that will directly benefit some of the poorest people in the city of Sao Paulo; there have been many such projects recently in other countries.

Throughout Sub-Saharan Africa we are working closely with scores of countries to reorient and readjust public investment programs with a view to sustaining basic programs in education, training and health that directly affect lowest-income groups while, at the same time, sustaining or rehabilitating productive activities.

Poverty alleviation remains a centerpiece of our economic and sector work and in the continuing dialogue we have with member countries on long-range development strategy and objectives. The latest World Development Report, issued earlier this month, and also enclosed, concentrates on the problem of excessive population growth and how it affects the world's poorest peoples.

Non-project lending, which incidentally accounts for a small percentage of the total, is not necessarily devoid of poverty alleviation impact simply because it is fast-disbursing or may be focused on, say, export promotion. The policy framework within which such lending is made can have significant consequences—for example, increased producer prices designed to boost productivity can be enormously beneficial to poor smallholders.

Internally, we have recently appointed special coordinators for reporting and monitoring poverty alleviation work and we have updated our methodology. Among other things, these new methods are designed to provide a system of country-level reporting of all Bank work with significant poverty relevance; we are particularly interested in assessing the experience with poverty alleviation in countries that have been implementing austere stabilization programs.

I apologize for this lengthy response, but I was particularly concerned that you, who have so diligently supported the Bank and IDA over the years, should know that despite constraints on the Bank and the very difficult economic environment that confronts our members, we are not wavering in our central aim to help alleviate poverty in the developing nations.

Thank you for writing and please let me know if you require clarification or additional information.

Sincerely,

A.W. CLAUSEN,
President.●

A SINGLE MILITARY COMMANDER

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, as the debate over the reform of the Joint Chiefs of Staff continues, I ask my colleagues to read the following editorial which appeared in the Chicago Tribune. It clearly describes the efforts of those of us who are trying to establish a more efficient military command.

The article follows:

[From the Chicago Tribune, July 3, 1984]

A SINGLE MILITARY COMMANDER

It may be obscured by the size of this year's hardware-laden defense bill, but there is legislation now alive in Congress that would significantly improve America's military capability—even though it doesn't procure a single bullet.

Sponsored by Rep. Ike Skelton [D., Mo.] and other reformers, it would give the military what it has not had for 35 years—a military commander. The chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff would cease to be an unheeded adviser to the service chiefs. Instead, the chairman would be placed directly in the chain of command—subservient to the president but superior to the individual chiefs.

Responsible for the welfare of the entire military, he would be empowered to suppress the interservice rivalries that have done so much to drive up defense costs and decrease military efficiency. To aid him in this mission, the JCS staff would be made into a more elite, homogenous and professional body, dedicated to providing the best possible advice and decision-making for all the military.

American defense has become a bloated creature with three bodies and no head—for all practical purposes, three independent militaries at war with one another. The loudest argument against changing this system comes from those like Navy Secretary John Lehman, who say it would lead to a loss of civilian control. But, of course, civilians would remain in control; the services secretaries' role might be diminished, but the authority of the president and secretary of defense would remain unchanged. A centralized system is used by Britain and other democracies—as it was by the U.S. during World War II. Mr. Skelton's measure is supported by former defense secretaries James Schlesinger and Harold Brown, as well as by retired Generals Maxwell Taylor, Andrew Goodpaster and David Jones.

The chaotic existing arrangement contributed to the U.S.' losing of the space race with the Soviets after World War II. The stakes now are much higher. Members of Congress who fear an eventual fiscal catastrophe in defense spending ought to support this measure.●

CONGRESS MUST MONITOR THE NCPSSM

HON. JOHN EDWARD PORTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, today I join a number of my colleagues who have already expressed concern with Mr. James Roosevelt and the activities of his National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare [NCPSSM].

As you may know, James Roosevelt is the son of the late Franklin Delano Roosevelt and is an 11-year veteran of the House of Representatives. Currently he is the chairman of the NCPSSM, an organization which concerns itself with the Social Security and medicare systems. In order to raise funds for the group Mr. Roosevelt initiated a direct mail campaign in 1982. Since that time over 20 million elderly Americans have received this letter, which is pitted with misleading and false statements and asks for a $10 contribution to help save Social Security and medicare. In fact, less than 10 percent of the $5 million which Roosevelt has raised has gone toward lobbying efforts on behalf of NCPSSM's members. The other 90 percent has been used for research, publications, advertisements and administrative costs. Unfortunately, the letter also paints an exaggeratedly grim picture of the future of Social Security and medicare and implies that unless seniors immediately contribute to NCPSSM the system could go bankrupt.

Mr. Roosevelt goes on to describe the Congress as a bunch of "fat cats" who don't have a care for the elderly or for the less fortunate. He claims in his solicitation, and unfairly so in my judgment, that some Congressmen would say "Let the retired widow go without a decent meal or enough heat or health care. Let her live in an unsafe neighborhood and wear shabby clothes. But please, not 1 less gallon of gasoline for my limousine."

In fact, Mr. Roosevelt's original mailing contains a number of other incorrect and misleading statements.

He claims that the 1983 Social Security legislation was only a "stop-gap measure." In fact, following the enacted reforms of the President's National Bipartisan Commission on Social Security reform $165 billion was provided in new funding for Social Security. For the first time in a decade the system is taking in more money than it is paying out. In the first 5 months of fiscal year 1984, the fund took in $11 billion more than it paid out. A recent report by the system's board of trustees says that the fund should be financially solvent well into the next century.

Mr. Roosevelt had come under investigation by the Postmaster because of the misleading markings on the envelope he used in his mailings. These were marked "Official Documents," and "Urgent! Important Social Security and Medicare Information Enclosed." These markings are similar to those used by the Social Security Administration and appear to connect the mailing to a Government agency.

In addition the Roosevelt letter of solicitation implies that the enclosed petition would carry greater weight with a Congressman than a first-class letter from a constituent. To this date, only one-third of these petitions have actually been delivered to Washington as promised. Also, Roosevelt claims that he will send his members important Social Security information that only he can provide. In fact, the information provided is only available through the Social Security Administration and will be sent, for free, to anyone who requests it.

Finally, he claims involvement in victories on past legislation. He does not reveal that these actions took place before his group began to lobby on Capitol Hill, only earlier this year.

As a result of investigations by the Social Security Administration and the Postmaster, Roosevelt has made slight changes in his subsequent mailings. However, in my judgment, the mailings continue to mislead elderly Americans into believing that they must send in $10 to stave off Social Security collapse. Many of these elders have been so confused and frightened by Roosevelt's mailings that they have voluntarily walked into offices of the Social Security Administration to offer their $10 contribution to protect their benefits. Although his intentions may be different, Jim Roosevelt appears to be leaving the impression on the elderly that the system is on the brink of collapse and that the $10 contribution will be directly applied to the system, rather than to the Roosevelt lobby organization. Neither of these impressions is accurate.

Mr. Speaker, Congressman PICKLE, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Social Security, Representative BOEHLERT and other Members are actively monitoring the activities of the NCPSSM. I, too, will continue to carefully watch this group and am hopeful that further congressional intervention in this matter will be unnecessary. All lobby groups need to maintain funding levels, but I do not believe that such groups should prey on the fears of the elderly to raise money.

I urge Mr. Roosevelt to correct all inaccurate statements made in his mailings and to present his organization in a fair light which makes his case without frightening the Nation's senior citizens into making contributions to NCPSSM.●

GERALDINE FERRARO ON PUBLIC WORKS

HON. JAMES J. HOWARD

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation, of which Ms. FERRARO has been a member since she came to Congress, I would like to highlight some of her outstanding contributions to the work of the committee.

Ms. FERRARO has been an extremely valuable and important member of the committee. She has taken the initiative on a wide range of issues, especially those of concern to her New York constituents, but many times with an eye to the overall national impact.

She has been closely involved with many of the important pieces of legislation that have been considered by the committee in recent years. She has taken an active role in the committee on several water-related issues, on economic development, on aviation, and especially on surface transportation issues.

From a wider perspective, Ms. FERRARO's initiatives have centered on reorienting Federal programs to help New York City and other older urban areas. To do this, she has attempted to increase the Federal role in providing funding for rehabilitation and repair of our infrastructure problems although not to the point of neglecting the new construction needs in other parts of the country.

For example, Ms. FERRARO has been a strong supporter of title VIII of H.R. 3678, the Water Resources Development Act of 1984, which creates an $800 million a year loan program for decaying urban water systems.

In another instance of that policy, Ms. FERRARO earlier this year introduced H.R. 4367 to establish a formula for distribution of funds under section 3 of the Urban Mass Transportation Act. She proposed a formula to meet the needs of those areas pursuing rail modernization while at the same time recognizing the need for funds for new starts. Her legislation was an important contribution in the debate on the formula that was eventually adopted by the House on June 5.

Ms. FERRARO has been a strong supporter of adequate funding for our Nation's transportation and aviation programs—a claim that not every Member can make. She supported and worked for the 5-cent-a-gallon gas tax in 1982 which can also be described as a user fee to pay for highway and mass transit needs. She worked for that increased funding for one of the Nation's most pressing needs and she worked to include new formulas in the bill to apportion the money where it was needed.

At the same time she has been one of the leading advocates on the committee on highway safety issues. She has introduced H.R. 5568 which would allow local officials a voice in routes that could be used by tandem trailers through heavily congested urban areas that might not be suitable for larger trucks. It is Ms. FERRARO's bill that would allow local officials to have that input and it is the Reagan administration's Federal Highway Administration that originally set the routes for the double trucks without consultation with local officials.

It is no secret that the Congresswoman from New York and I have had our disagreements on issues affecting the New York-New Jersey area. In the metropolitan area, such conflicts are not extraordinary. There is not one Member of the House who does not put priority on the protection of his or her constituents' interests—which is exactly what Ms. FERRARO has been doing.

Our disagreements on these issues were not personal or vindictive. They were strictly on the issues and Ms. FERRARO was always a strong adversary. She has been an extremely effective advocate for the interests of New York City on the Committee on Public Works and Transportation. She has served her constituents in Queens well and I expect that she will serve the entire Nation as well as Vice President.●

TRIBUTE TO RAQUEL MARQUEZ FRANKEL

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in tribute today because the Hispanic community has lost a good friend and leader. Raquel Marquez Frankel, a woman of great strength and character who played a pivotal role in the founding of the Congressional Hispanic Caucus died on Sunday, March 11, 1984, and her presence within the national Hispanic community will be sorely missed.

Raquel was the first director of the Congressional Hispanic Caucus and served from 1977 to 1980. She helped to create an organization that will hopefully endure for years to come and we are forever in her debt. She was an inspiration to us all. She helped the national Hispanic community begin its own process of politicalization. Raquel was always working to empower those with less opportunity, or less education. She leaves behind a legacy of national Hispanic organizations that she cultivated in their infancy.

Born on May 14, 1923, in Albuquerque, NM, Raquel's early years were spent in the mining region of northern New Mexico. Her parents, Jesus Pable "J.P." and Constanza Marquez were activists who taught their children how to involve themselves in solutions to public problems. Mr. Marquez was a long-time community organizer. After raising a family of 12 children—all college graduates with advanced degrees—he joined a Catholic order dedicated to serving the poor.

Raquel used to say that her earliest memories were of dancing in jail among miners and their families arrested during strikes. When the miners went on strike, their families joined them on the picket lines. They and their families were rounded up en masse and sent to jail. A movie was made years later, called the "Salt on the Earth" depicting those unfortunate days of labor history. These early events and family commitment prepared her for a life dedicated to serving others.

Raquel graduated from St. Mary's Catholic High School in Albuquerque, NM. She then came back to Washington, DC, and attended the Western School for Private Secretaries and worked at the Pentagon during World War II. She returned to New Mexico, enrolled at St. Joseph's College and completed her undergraduate studies within 3 years while working as a local radio broadcaster. She was the first woman admitted to the University of New Mexico Law School but decided instead to pursue a career in social work. Raquel transferred to Northwestern University and completed her masters in social work at Loyola in Chicago.

She began to work as a social worker in Chicago's famous Hull House and quickly went on to form her own Mexican American organization serving the local migrant population. It was during this time that she met Dr. Hyman "Hy" Frankel. They met in jail. Raquel was protesting loudly because her client was denied his constitutional rights, and Hy was the young Ph.D. conducting a study on prison reform. They sent Hy in to try to rectify the situation.

The result of this meeting was a marriage that all admired and emulated. Hy and Raquel joined their creative forces in a lifetime of building bridges between people.

Raquel Frankel had an amazing capacity for work. And she recognized the profound need for institutions dedicated to improving the quality of life for the Hispanic community. The legacy she leaves behind is astounding. She was instrumental in creating several national Hispanic organizations, including the congressional Hispanic caucus, the National Association of Latino Elected & Appointed Officials, Mujeres en Accion, and the Mexican-American National Women's Organization. Her community contributions included: The Multicultural Career Internship Program, the Spanish Education Development Center, GALA Bilingual Theater, the Washington Urban League, the Hispanic Women's Center. This year she was nominated a Washingtonian of the year by Washingtonian magazine.

At her untimely death, she was in the midst of working actively within the John Glenn for President campaign, and she was creating a new board of directors to help fund Amigos del Centro Catolico, an organization dedicated to helping the Hispanic refugee community in Washington.

Today a very special event is taking place at the Peruvian Embassy. Friends of Raquel are gathering together to pay tribute to this great woman by continuing her work within the Hispanic community. Today, her friends are continuing to honor her memory by working together to enable the Spanish Catholic Center to continue its work within the greater Washington area. The primary purpose of the Spanish Catholic Center is to help Hispanic newcomers make the difficult adjustment to American life and to full participation in their new cultural environment. Founded in 1967, the center has two offices serving over 20,000 clients a year without regard for color, creed, ethnic background or religious affiliation. It delivers critical services not available through local or Federal agencies to clients throughout the Washington metropolitan area.

The center's health programs include a range of family medical and dental services provided by a staff of volunteer physicians and dentists who work with the center's paramedical staff. Educational and job-related training programs offer literacy, English as a second language, GED, bilingual secretarial skills, word processing and computer languages. El Pregonero, a free weekly Spanish-language newspaper published by the center provides news and public information not otherwise available.

Raquel Frankel was truly a Mujer en Accion. She possessed creativity, endurance, and leadership, those qualities that we all seek in serving our communities. Most of all, Raquel was giving of herself. She served her community unselfishly and she gave unselfishly of her time, her understanding, her knowledge, her laughter, and her enthusiasm for life. She is irreplaceable. Raquel will be missed deeply by her family and friends, but we are all much richer for having known her.●

HON. BILL GREEN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, summer is usually considered a time to relax and enjoy spending time with one's family. Yet, one of America's great tragedies is the number of children who disappear each day from our Nation's families.

All of us who are parents, grandparents, or relatives or children, or who have seen the increasing number of documentaries and stories about missing children, are very disturbed. We hear about too many children who are victims of kidnapings and exploitation, or who just run away out of feelings of discontent.

Yet, accurate statistics are hard to come by. The National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, established last April with a grant from the Department of Justice, has not yet compiled all the statistics necessary for an accurate national picutre. From a quick call to the New York Police Department, however, it appears that fewer children have been reported missing this year than last year, possibly due to their increased public awareness of the problem. According to the NYPD, 47 children under the age of 10 from New York City have been reported missing so far this year.

Because the National Center is finding that the compilation of this data is an arduous task, the Congress should take more clear and decisive steps toward committing the Federal Government to take an even more active role in finding missing children.

For this reason, I urge the Senate to pass H.R. 4971, the Juvenile Justice, Runaway Youth, and Missing Children's Amendments of 1984. Passage of this legislation would do a number of things, including: The establishment of a national toll-free telephone line for gathering tips about the whereabouts of missing children; the establishment of a national resource center giving technical help to State and local governments while spreading the word about successful new approaches; helping public and nonprofit agencies launch research, demonstration, or service programs such as stranger awareness instruction for youngsters or voluntary fingerprinting efforts; requiring the first periodic national incidence studies of this national tragedy. In addition, it would provide a renewal of U.S. juvenile justice and delinquency programs, which help support 200 centers for runaway youths across the United States, and provide other important aid and prevention efforts.

Summer is a time to be with one's family, not to be worried sick about a missing child. As Members of Congress, we must do our utmost to ensure that the Federal Government plays an important and efficient role in finding missing children. For this reason, I urge my colleagues to work with their local police departments and nonprofit organizations and agencies in an attempt to locate our missing children, and to urge the Senate to pass H.R. 4971.●

STEEL PROTECTIONISM

OF ILLINOIS

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, today I submit for the RECORD a letter I recently received from a constituent, William H. Rentschler, chairman and C.E.O. of Medart, Inc. Medart, Inc., is a 110-year-old manufacturing company based in Lake Forest, IL. It maintains five small steel fabricating units in Michigan, Tennessee, Georgia, and Mississippi.

Mr. Rentschler's letter provides accurate insight into the implications of granting wholesale protectionism to major domestic steel manufacturers. I hope that my colleagues will read this letter recognizing current pressures on Congress and the administration to provide protectionist measures for the steel industry.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN PORTER: I am writing you and a few other Congressmen and Senators I know and respect to provide a small business perspective on an issue of great significance to the Nation.

Specifically, it is the question of whether our Government should give protection to various segments of the U.S. steel industry against imports, especially from Europe, Latin America, and the Far East. The principle is applicable on a far wider scale than steel alone.

My insights are based directly on my present role as chief executive officer of five small steel fabricating companies located in Michigan, 130 employees; Tennessee, 95 employees; Georgia, 105 employees; and Mississippi, 2 companies, 265 employees. We use variously in considerable quantities sheet, coil, bar, and structural steel.

With its highly effective lobbying apparatus, Big Steel has made its case to Congress and the public. In certain respects, it is highly distorted. What damage imports may do to the steel industry is more than offset by the benefits of hundreds of fabricators of steel, like ourselves; thousands of their employees, and millions of consumers, who buy countless products made from steel.

Let me cite a specific example. In Jackson, MI, our company, Jackson Forge Corp., make custom forgings for such major companies as Chrysler, Mack Truck, Clark Equipment, Cummins Engine (Atlas Crankshaft Division), and others.

During the recent deep and prolonged recession, our sales declined by 50 percent. We took aggressive steps to beef up our marketing in preparation for the inevitable economic upturn. But when it came, we found ourselves frozen out in the early stages, largely because of excessive domestic steel prices. Our main suppliers include Republic, United States Steel, and Bethlehem. We were high on quote after quote to our customers and prospects because of their relatively high steel prices, which were critical to us as a maker of material-intensive forgings.

We were completely unsuccessful in getting them to give us prices which would enable us to compete with imported forgings and with competitors buying foreign steel.

This forced a hard decision on us. We, too, would buy some foreign steel. With the arrival of our first shipment from Brazil, our domestic suppliers came flocking to our door, suddenly "discovering" for the first time they could make certain price concessions. Our decision to buy some steel from abroad—even though it represented only 30 percent of our total requirements—literally saved our life.

Since then, with a competitive price mix on steel, our sales are up nearly 100 percent over the past 9 months. There is not the slightest doubt in my mind that our imported steel gave us the bargaining clout we needed to buy at reasonably competitive prices from the big domestic producers.

Their problems do not stem from foreign competition, but far more from their own long-term arrogance, complacency, and shortsightedness. While some visionary companies like General Electric were resisting excessive union demands some years ago, Big Steel (and the auto companies as well) was giving away the store, taking the easy way out, and creating impossible future conditions. Now they want a Government bailout.

I respectfully submit that small and mid-sized companies, their employees, and the American consumer should not be penalized and perhaps driven out of business and out of work to atone for the past sins of Big Steel. It is inevitable that the major steel companies will immediately raise their prices the minute foreign competition is curtailed, inflicting severe, even lethal, damage on defenseless smaller companies with limited alternatives.

Let me add that the unwarranted strength of the dollar worldwide and the absence of any genuine zeal by the administration to press major deficit reduction initiatives also are contributing to a dangerous scenario for our economic future.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM H. RENTSCHLER.●

THE ST. PETERSBURG TIMES CELEBRATES A CENTURY OF SERVICE

HON. C.W. BILL YOUNG

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, an active and free press is one of our Nation's most important and basic rights and there is no newspaper that better symbolizes that freedom than the St. Petersburg Times, which today proudly celebrates its 100th anniversary of service to the people of Pinellas County and many areas in Florida.

The first issue of the Times was published July 25, 1884 from its offices in the backroom of a small drugstore. From its humble beginning, the Times has grown to be the second largest newspaper in the Southeastern United States with a daily circulation in excess of 260,000 and a Sunday circulation of 330,000. In contrast to its early years, when five people produced the newspaper, the Times today is a major employer in Pinellas County with more than 1,300 full-time and 1,400 part-time staffers. The newspaper has expanded from its original backroom offices to now include two main building and its bureaus scattered throughout Florida. The Times also has an active bureau here in Washington.

The Times has received national recognition and numerous awards and honors from its peers including two Pulitzer Prizes for distinguished public service and a Time magazine rating in April as one of our Nation's top 10 daily newspapers. The Times is in particular noted for its state-of-the-art production facilities and its outstanding staff of artists and photographers who provide attractive and informative graphics that are an excellent supplement to the stories they accompany.

In addition to being a major source of information in Pinellas County, the Times Publishing Co. has sought through public service projects to improve Pinellas County. The Times has also established the Poynter Institute to provide young aspiring journalists and experienced professionals with a place to learn and grow.

The St. Petersburg Times has made many important contributions to Pinellas County and the field of journalism during its first century of service, and I join today in wishing the newspaper's staff success in continuing to grow during its second "Century of Service."●

LEGISLATION TO AMEND THE FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT TO ALLOW HOMEWORKERS TO KNIT AT HOME

HON. OLYMPIA J. SNOWE

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, 50 years ago, Congress enacted the Fair Labor Standards Act to establish certain minimum employment standards to protect all working Americans. The single, most important purpose of the act was to eliminate the substandard labor conditions commonplace in the late 1930's. We are all familiar with these conditions—the sweatshops cramped with countless immigrants, small children, and women. With passage of the act, Congress extinguished these conditions forever, and safeguarded the minimum wage.

Today, the protections set out by the FLSA are prohibiting thousands of Americans from working in their homes. I am speaking specifically of the home knitter. Knitters may again be subject to the outdated restrictions on homework encompassed in the act, as the freedom to knit at home continues to be the focus of court and regulatory actions. In my view, reapplying the ban would be an unnecessary and unfair burden on these workers. Thus, I firmly believe we must challenge the opponents so that Americans may be allowed to knit at home.

A final decision on regulations proposed by the Labor Department to lift FLSA restrictions is still pending—with the outcome unclear. Because of my commitment to eliminating the restrictions so that American entrepreneurs will not be inhibited, I believe it is time to initiate legislative remedies to protect knitters at home.

In 1980, questions were raised about the effectiveness of the homework restrictions in safeguarding the minimum wage during an extensive review of the FLSA on industrial homework. Participants concluded that knitters, specifically, were being deprived of employment alternatives because of the act. Consequently, the ban on knitting was lifted with the promise that the industry would be carefully monitored by the Department of Labor for inconsistencies. I am gratified to report that no instances of abuse in the home knitting industry have been reported since that time.

Because the future remains uncertain for these homeworkers, I am introducing legislation to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act to permanently permit knitting at home. This bill would rescind the provisions of the FLSA restricting home knitting. My action is based on my belief that the FLSA has failed to conform to our changed society, and has been unable to stay in stride with the broad reforms evolving in the American workplace. Simply put, knitters should be allowed to work at home free from the burdensome restrictions of the FLSA.

Cottage industries play a vital role in the economy of the State of Maine, large parts of New England, and other areas of the Nation. Home knitting is an old, established industry in my home State and has been part of Maine's culture for many years. The independent nature of homework, and the unavailability of alternative employment opportunities make working at home ideal.

Knitting at home makes sense. It is time to safeguard the freedom to choose to work at home. To this end, I intend to continue my efforts to guarantee the right of Americans to choose to knit at home. Americans want to work at home, and I urge all of you to join me to ensure that their right to knit in their homes is protected.●

ARMS CONTROL AND COMPLIANCE

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, I submit for the RECORD a statement I delivered today in a hearing before the Foreign Affairs Committee.

The hearing was held to examine current arms control issues, and my statement focuses on the Soviet compliance record with existing arms control agreements, and on the implications of this poor compliance record for future negotiations.

The statement follows:

STATEMENT OF CONGRESSMAN JIM COURTER BEFORE THE HOUSE FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE, JULY 25, 1984

Mr. Chairman, Members of the Committee, I thank you for this opportunity to testify on the future of arms control and I commend you for holding this important series of hearings.

I would like to focus on an issue which is of critical importance to the future of arms control: the issue of Soviet compliance with existing arms control agreements and commitments.

Without compliance, arms control agreements can't serve the interest of national security, which is their highest objective. In fact, it can be argued that agreements which are routinely violated can actually be detrimental to security to the extent to which they create the illusion of mutual military restraint and reduced political tensions between the signatory parties.

A nation's compliance record also reflects on the prospects for new arms control agreements, because it is a direct indicator of a nation's trustworthiness. In negotiating new treaties with a nation that has violated existing agreements, it becomes necessary to account for the possibility that the new treaty may be violated as well, and to plan for a response in the event that a violation does occur.

If, as a result of the current diplomatic activity, the United States and the Soviet Union enter negotiations on antisatellite weapons and other weapons in space, several of these compliance issues will come into play.

On June 20, 1984, Assistant Secretary of Defense Richard Perle appeared before this Committee and confirmed that the Soviet Union has used electronic interference to, in effect, "jam" the electronic intelligence satellite that the U.S. uses to monitor missile telemetry. This is a vital element of SALT verification, and the Soviet interference is a clear violation of the SALT II treaty's ban on interference with national technical means of verification. I have been briefed in detail on this subject and I can attest to the gravity of this pattern of Soviet conduct.

What does this mean in the context of the ASAT negotiations? First, it gives a distinctly hollow ring to Soviet statements of peaceful intentions in space. Second, it imposes the requirement that ASAT talks encompass earth-based actions which disable or destroy satellites. Lastly, as a violation of a SALT II obligation, this raises the question of whether the Soviets would comply with a future agreement to protect communications and intelligence satellites from harm.

Mr. Chairman, satellite interference is one aspect of Soviet noncompliance which happened to be confirmed before your Committee. Two reports available to your Committee show that there is a broad pattern of Soviet violations of arms control agreements.

One is the report issued by the President on January 23, 1984. It lists seven initial areas in which violations or probable violations of arms control agreements have occurred. The violated agreements range from the Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention of 1972, to the Helsinki accords' provisions on notification of military exercises, to the SALT and ABM treaties.

The second is the report of the President's General Advisory Committee on Arms Control and Disarmament, entitled "A Quarter Century of Soviet Compliance Practices Under Arms Control Commitments: 1958–1983." This report has been made available to Congress in the form of oral briefings only, and numerous briefings have taken place before Members, Committees and cleared staff of the House and Senate.

The value of this report is its historical perspective. It focuses on patterns of Soviet behavior, not just on incidents, both in negotiations and in military development. After being briefed by the General Advisory Committee, I was left with the conclusion that in some instances the Soviet Union has planned to violate agreements even as they were being negotiated.

Another valuable element of this report is its excellent treatment of the Soviet program of strategic camouflage, concealment and deception, which transcends in both purpose and effect any concept of military secrecy that we know in the West.

I would strongly recommend that this Committee be briefed on this report.

Mr. Chairman, the patterns of Soviet violations is clear. What do they mean, and what purposes do they serve?

The ABM radar at Krasnoyarsk, which violates the ABM Treaty of 1972, has a clear purpose: to give the Soviet Union a strategic edge through a missile defense system. This fact is best appreciated when one looks at this radar in the context of overall Soviet ABM development, and understands the important role it fills.

Other violations seem to carry relatively little military significance or purpose. The failure to provide notification of the 1981 Soviet military exercise, which violated the Helsinki Final Act, is one example. It signals a disregard for the letter and spirit of agreements and acts as a minor irritant in East-West relations.

In yet other cases, such as the encryption of missile telemetry, it is difficult to ascertain the military significance of the violation, because we are denied information on the missiles being tested, and are prevented from knowing whether they violate SALT limits. The denial of this information is in itself a very serious violation of SALT II. In June of 1979, referring to the possibility that a violation of this type could occur, President Carter said: "A violation of this part of the agreement—which we would quickly detect—would be just as serious as a violation of the limits on strategic weapons themselves."

It is clear to me that the entire pattern of Soviet violations poses the single greatest threat to the arms control process today.

It also poses two challenges, one often stated, one seldom stated. We often hear that we need to negotiate new treaties which are absolutely verifiable. That is of course true, but it isn't enough for us to merely ensure proper verification in future agreements. If we take these agreements seriously, we must also answer the question: How will we respond when we verify that existing agreements are being violated by the Soviet Union? How have we responded to date?

To try to answer this question is to reveal that the United States has no clear policy of response.

Look at the situation from the Soviet perspective: the violations can serve many purposes. One is to gain military advantage. Another is to test U.S. intelligence capabilities, by seeing which actions elicit responses and inquiries from the State Department. Political resolve can also be tested in the same manner, as the Soviets wait to see how far their actions will be tolerated by the United States.

It is often argued that ironclad verification provisions in treaties will act as a deterrent to violations. That is true, if you assume that a verified violation will elicit a response from the offended party. If no response is forthcoming, the entire deterrent effect of our elaborate and expensive verification apparatus is forfeited.

Today, our failure to respond to the broad pattern of Soviet violations risks sending a very dangerous signal to the Soviet Union: that we take compliance as lightly as they do. If the now beleaguered arms control process is to perish, it is surely this attitude that will deliver the fatal blow.

If we all agree that compliance is essential to arms control, let's consider a hypothetical situation. Suppose that none of the doubts about verifying any provision of an ASAT ban, a START agreement or a nuclear freeze existed. Assume universal agreement that these treaties would be completely verifiable. Then assume that we reach agreement with the Soviets in each of these three areas. Given the lack of a U.S. response to violations to SALT, ABM, the Threshold Test Ban Treaty, the Geneva Protocol of 1925, the 1972 Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention, the Helsinki accords and other important agreements, what would provide the Soviet Union with an incentive to comply with any new treaty?

Looking to the future, Mr. Chairman, it is clear to me that our attitudes toward arms control must change.

First, our body politic must learn to come to terms with the issue of Soviet violations. The difficulty in doing so is often a bipartisan phenomenon, and it must change.

It is demonstrated by the Administration's reluctance to deal with the issue except when prodded by Congress.

It is demonstrated by the widely held perception that arms control is more threatened by public discussion of violations than by the violations of the treaties themselves.

It is demonstrated by the relative absence of the compliance issue in the House's recent defense authorization debate, which was largely focused on arms control questions.

It is demonstrated by statements that these compliance concerns are overstated and based on vague treaty language. These statements ignore the many clearcut violations, such as the chemical and biological weapons matter, or the telemetric encryption, about which there is no ambiguity at all.

And it is most clearly demonstrated by the widespread adherence to the notion that arms control agreements have an intrinsic value, almost without regard to compliance concerns, and by the general abhorrence of the idea that Soviet violations of arms agreements may one day render these agreements inoperative from the American perspective as well. This is despite the accepted principle of international law that an agreement breached on one party is no longer binding on the other party.

The United States should not relish the idea of being released from treaty commitments when the treaties have been broken by the Soviet Union. All efforts should be made to bring the Soviet Union into a posture of compliance, and keep the agreement in force. The classified version of the President's January report details the unsuccessful record of United States diplomatic efforts, in the Standing Consultative Commission and in other channels, in resolving compliance issues. But common sense dictates that if the Soviet Union violates a treaty and the violation dictates that if the Soviet Union violates a treaty and the violation bears on U.S. security, then the defense of the United States should not be constrained by unilateral observation of a treaty.

The jury is still out on this question—in fact, it has barely begun to deliberate. The Administration and Congress need to evaluate the full range of Soviet-American agreements and negotiations in light of Soviet violations of arms control agreements, and evaluate the strategic impact these violations have had. We should pay particular attention to studying Soviet advances in ballistic missile defense and the wisdom of maintaining the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty of 1972 as an element of U.S. security policy.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, we would do well to rid the arms control issue of all emotion, tense expectation and apocalyptic rhetoric, and to view arms control as one of several available instruments of United States security policy. It can be an effective counterpart to deterrence and diplomacy, and it is highly desirable, but if arms control doesn't work as expected and is not the centerpiece of defense policy, we needn't be alarmed. Above all, in the interest of arms control, we should stop basing our judgment of the entire U.S.-Soviet relationship on the state of arms talks; in a world of global superpower competition, this is too large a burden for the arms control process to bear.

In today's political arena, there is much questioning of whether we are "serious about arms control." Given the fact that arms control is only one element of our security policy, and given the mounting evidence of the shortcomings of the major U.S.-Soviet arms control agreements, we should focus our concern on our ability to face the objective facts about arms control, and on the question of whether the U.S. Congress has been sufficiently serious about American security and all its requirements.●

SUPPORTERS OF THE HUNGER RELIEF ACT

HON. LEON E. PANETTA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, in the near future the House of Representatives will consider H.R. 5151, the Hunger Relief Act of 1984.

This legislation represents a bipartisan approach to help alleviate the serious problem of hunger in the United States. It would provide what I have called a downpayment on domestic hunger. Many of the provisions included in the bill are based upon recommendations of the President's Task Force on Food Assistance.

GROUPS SUPPORTING H.R. 5151

American Association of Retired Persons, American Jewish Congress, Bread for the World, Center for Community Change, Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, Child Welfare League, Children's Defense Fund, Coalition on Block Grants and Human Needs, Commodity Supplemental Food Program Operators, Community Nutrition Institute, Council of Jewish Federations, Interfaith Action for Economic Justice, League of United Latin American Citizens [LULAC], Lutheran Council of the USA, National Association of Social Workers, National Congress of Parents and Teachers [PTA], National Council of Churchs of Christ in the USA, National Council of Senior Citizens, National Farmers Union, National Grocers Association, National Milk Producers Federation, National Urban League, Public Voice, Society for Nutrition Education, The Food Marketing Institute, United Church of Christ, U.S. Catholic Conference, and U.S. Conference on Mayors.●

RECOGNITION FOR ANTHONY R. RICIGLIANO

HON. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a distinguished resident of the Fourth District of New Jersey, Mr. Anthony R. Ricigliano, on the occasion of his retirement from the New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection. Mr. Speaker, it is not uncommon to honor someone for outstanding service to one's community, State or country. However, it is truly rare, and indeed a real honor to recognize an individual who had dedicated his efforts to all three areas of public service. Mr. Speaker, Anthony Ricigliano is such a man.

During the Korean war, Mr. Ricigliano and many other fine, brave men recognized their duty as U.S. citizens and served this country with distinction from 1951 to 1953. As a member of the Army Corps of Engineers, Mr. Ricigliano proved his technical competence and leadership abilities as he was promoted to sergeant first class of his platoon of Army combat engineers and later received a Commendation Medal for Meritorious Services. It is always a pleasure, Mr. Speaker, to honor an individual who has made such an outstanding contribution to his country.

Returning to civilian life, Mr. Ricigliano began a career in the service of the people of New Jersey which spanned 10 years with the New Jersey Department of Health and 16 years with the department of environmental protection. During his career with the health department and the EPA, Mr. Ricigliano distinguished himself in several professional capacities. Apart from his title of assistant director for the division of water resources, he has been a member of several professional organizations and committees. Most notably, Mr. Ricigliano served as president of the New Jersey Water Pollution Control Federation. Mr. Ricigliano's dedication, energy and level of professionalism have left their mark on both the private and public sectors in the field of environmental protection. His colleagues and the residents of our State owe him a well deserved thanks.

Aside from his professional career, Anthony Ricigliano has also found time to serve his community. For several years, Mr. Ricigliano has been actively participating in youth baseball in Lawrence Township, NJ. As in his military and professional career, Mr. Ricigliano did not shy away from positions of leadership and responsibility. He has served as president of the Lawrence Township Junior Baseball Association and was a member of the township's recreation advisory committee.

Last, Mr. Speaker, Anthony Ricigliano is a dedicated family man who recently celebrated his 40th wedding anniversary and is the father of three children. Mr. Ricigliano's dedication as a husband and father is a fitting complement to his professional achievements.

In all of Mr. Ricigliano's endeavors we see a level of commitment that has surpassed the ordinary, the routine, the expected. This kind of commitment and caring is what has distinguished Mr. Ricigliano throughout his career with the State of New Jersey and in his service to his community, country and family. Mr. Speaker, today it is with great pleasure that I add my name to those gathered to honor Anthony R. Ricigliano on his retirement and for the love and respect he has fostered among his colleagues, friends, and family.●

TIGERSHARK JET FIGHTER

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, the F-20 Tigershark is a unique jet fighter. It was privately financed and designed. It is both inexpensive and extraordinarily reliable. Its manufacturer, Northrop Corp., provides purchasers with a comprehensive workmanship and performance warranty. It may well be the equal of any other fighter in the world. Experienced figher pilots who have flown the F-20 have great praise for both its design and performance.

At a time when many nations are finding it increasingly difficult to afford complex, failure prone, and expensive fighter aircraft, one would assume that sales of the F-20 would be booming. Surprisingly, this is not the case. The slow sales of the F-20 have nothing to do with the merits of the airplane, however.

In an editorial titled "Beached Tigershark" the Wall Street Journal places the blame squarely on the Reagan administration for the F-20's lagging sales. Rather than encourage sales of this remarkable airplane, the administration has actually gone out of its way to torpedo the project. For example, the administration refused to allow Taiwan to buy the F-20. In addition, it has encouraged other countries to by more expensive, less reliable, and potentially more destabilizing aircraft like the F-15 and F-16.

The Military Establishment in this country has traditionally been skeptical about any plane designed by outsiders. The Wall Street Journal editors summed up the situation best in their editorial when they wrote:

The Tigershark's real problem is that it wasn't built by a committee, and its success would be an embarrassment to the procurment process. Northrop showed the Pentagon that it's possible to build a high-performance, reliable, easily maintainable aircraft without cost overruns or development delays or taxpayer subsidies.

The people at the Northrop Corp. who have been involved in the design of the F-20 have reason to be proud of their accomplishment. It is sad that the Reagan administration has allowed itself to be bullied by some people in the Pentagon whose pride would be damaged because someone outside of official channels has managed to design a better airplane.

I ask that the complete text of the Wall Street Journal be reprinted for our colleagues' information.

BEACHED TIGERSHARK

Despite some good work by the Reagan administration in rebuilding inventories and the like, military procurement is still a mess. Laying aside the tales of cost overruns and $100 hammers and the like, many of our weapons systems seem ill-designed and we often seem slow to exploit our technological advantages. Something seems to be wrong with the whole procurement system.

So perhaps we can learn something by looking at the problems of the Tigershark. Northrop Corp.'s F-20 fighter plane. The Tigershark, which is now ready for production, came in on time and on budget and performs far better than expected. In flight tests, it has had a 97% reliability record and is very easy to maintain. An Air Force pilot called the plane "outstanding."

One characteristic that sets the Tigershark apart from even the U.S. Air Force's first-line aircraft, such as the F-15 and F-16, is its amazingly quick "scramble" time. This is especially important for countries that need a periphery air defense that can be deployed rapidly against a sneak, close-range attack (such as Saudi Arabia, Taiwan and even NATO's central front). For instance, the F-20 can, in less than four minutes from a cold engine start, intercept another aircraft at 40,000 feet and 50 miles from the base, achieving a speed of Mach 1.6.

More important from a technical viewpoint, the plane's development costs of $750 million have already been paid by Northrop itself. And the company is ready to supply the aircraft and spare parts at a fixed price, thus alleviating the problem of cost overruns. The only problem is that, except for the three planes being flight tested at Edwards Air Force Base in California, no Tigersharks have been sold.

The plane has been intended for the export market; the Pentagon estimates our allies will need over 2,500 new fighters in the coming years to meet our mutual security needs. The Carter administration realized that our non-NATO allies would need a new fighter to replace the widely owned, but aging F-5 series (also made by Northrop). Fearful of exacerbating the arms race, the Carter White House insisted that the new plane have limited capability below that of the U.S. front-line fighter, the F-16. Northrop went ahead on its own to invest $50 million in a new version of the F-5.

Shortly after taking office, the Reagan administration expressed more forcefully its determination to enhance our mutual security arrangements with our allies. "The United States cannot defend the Free World's interests alone," it said. The administration wanted a low-cost, high-performance aircraft other than our own front-line planes to sell to our allies. Northrop responded by investing an additional $700 million of its own money in the Tigershark. The plane quickly turned into a far superior craft to the F-5 series and the Air Force therefore awarded the Tigershark the new designation F-20.

Given an outstanding performance record and secure financial terms, why hasn't Northrop been able to sell any Tigersharks? It's a problem that even Northrop's top-notch salesmen can't handle because the fault lies with the administration. In 1982, the Reagan White House kowtowed to Peking's protestations and refused to let Taiwan buy the F-20. China falsely argued that the plane would be a threat to the mainland. In fact, the F-20 would have been ideally suited to Taiwan's defense needs without posing much, if any, direct threat of attack to mainland China.

More recently, the administration hasn't boosted the F-20 in talks with countries in the Mideast, notably Saudi Arabia, or Latin America. Instead, the administration, with the support of much of the Air Force brass who don't have any vested interest in the Tigershark, keeps hyping the F-15 and F-16 fighters, which are more sophisticated, much more expensive and difficult to maintain.

After investing $750 million and getting such back-of-the-hand treatment from the administration, it's small wonder that Northrop chief Thomas V. Jones is miffed. "The F-20 provides a higher level of military security for [our smaller allies] than any other fighter in the world, at less cost to them and to us," Mr. Jones told a recent shareholders meeting. "In the absence of official U.S. information, foreign countries simply ask for the same fighter the U.S. flies, even if advancing technology has created a better aircraft and a better solution for their special defense needs."

Our own view is somewhat more cynical. The Tigershark's problem is that it wasn't built by a committee, and its success would be an embarrassment to the procurement process. Northrop showed the Pentagon that it's possible to build a high-performance, reliable, easily maintainable aircraft without cost overruns or development delays or taxpayer subsidies. Now who wants to buy a plane like that?●

A TRIBUTE TO RAQUEL MARQUEZ FRANKEL

HON. SOLOMON P. ORTIZ

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Speaker, when I was thinking back on Raquel's life of service and accomplishments, I was reminded of a beautiful prayer. It asks God to: "Make me an instrument of Thy peace; where there is hatred, let me sow love; where there is injury, pardon; where there is doubt, faith; where there is despair, hope; where there is darkness, light; and where there is sadness, joy." It is a wonderful guide for life and provides us with inspiration as we overcome life's obstacles. Throughout her life, Raquel Frankel used this prayer's sentiment to act as a channel of God's peace.

Raquel's greatness lies in her approach to life and in her service as a peacemaker. As outlined in the Peace Prayer, she saw problems and created solutions. She saw poverty and enriched others. She saw barriers and created opportunities. She saw unhappiness and brought joy. She saw despair and offered hope. And most of all, she saw God in the faces of all she met and accepted his admonition to "love one another as I have loved you."

A peacemaker is called upon to make many sacrifices and to soothe troubled waters. Raquel rose above the crowd and displayed qualities that set her apart from the rest. She devoted herself to promoting the public good, sacrificed personal rewards for the rewards of serving many, and accomplished what others could not even envision achieving. She made a lifetime commitment to improving the quality of life for all.

And, most important of all, she did all this selflessly. She sought no publicity or notoriety for herself. Raquel believed in working quietly, behind the scenes, to accomplish what she believed must be done. She persisted when perseverance was required, and sought accommodation from the intransigent. Raquel sought peace and harmony among people, not confrontation or hostility. She was, throughout her life, a channel of God's peace.

Her memory lives on in the thousands she has served. Raquel gave them dignity, hope, and opportunity. And, she gave them the gift of herself—a gift beyond measure and one that lives on in those she served.

Raquel rose from humble beginnings and became an inspiration to all who knew her. What a combination for any person to have. But all the more for a woman and an Hispanic, for she overcame obstacles society created because of her sex and race. Raquel's examples inspired and challenged a generation of Hispanic men and women who were touched by her service. Her accomplishments in organizing and founding Hispanic political and cultural organizations are famous.

Raquel's accomplishments live on in the organizations she founded and in the work her successors carry out in her name. But, most of all, her spirit, her enthusiasm, and her joy for living remain a part of all who knew her. Our memory of her comforts and reassures us as we face life's obstacles.●

IN MEMORY OF RAQUEL FRANKEL

HON. EDWARD R. ROYBAL

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep personal sadness, and with great admiration and respect that I rise today to pay tribute to Raquel Frankel.

Raquel was a remarkable human being. As an esteemed activist, a social worker, a patron of the arts, and a mother of two children, she dedicated her life to social justice and fostered a timely consciousness about the concerns of the Hispanic community in this country and in Latin America.

Raquel was especially concerned about the difficult and unique problems facing women and children. She worked not for personal recognition, but for recognition of and solution to the acute economic hardships affecting women and children throughout the world.

As the first executive director of the Hispanic Caucus, Raquel helped to organize Hispanic Members of Congress into a cohesive group. Under her direction, the caucus defined the issues to be addressed by the Congress and developed a series of effective strategies for congressional action. She worked tirelessly to promote Hispanic unity and raise national awareness of Hispanic issues.

Raquel was a unique leader, full of life, energy, and hope. She was rarely without a smile, or a kind word and a helping hand for someone. She was a loving, caring, compassionate person and we will miss her very much.●

EAST NORRITON TOWNSHIP—75 YEARS RICH IN HISTORY

HON. RICHARD T. SCHULZE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. SCHULZE. Mr. Speaker, East Norriton Township, an area of Pennsylvania that reflects the best of the American spirit, is celebrating its 75th anniversary this year, and I am pleased to recognize this momentous occasion.

Since its incorporation in 1909, East Norriton has grown from a farming community to a diverse modern suburb of Philadelphia. Although benefiting culturally from its proximity to Philadelphia, East Norriton has not lost its hold on its traditional, rural values. The residents maintain strong family and religious ties. These attitudes carry over into every aspect of life and manifest themselves in a great degree of community pride, as well as in numerous community-sponsored activities and charitable causes.

East Norriton residents were highly active supporters of America's Bicentennial celebration in 1976. That community endeavor provided the impetus to individual residents to pitch in to research their own historical backgrounds and unearth previously unknown local lore, historical landmarks and events. Through their efforts they have managed to piece together a record of their proud heritage from the days of the Revolutionary War. This stands as a reminder of the dedication and support the community has given to our Nation over the years, even before they were the township of East Norriton. They perpetuate these proud traditions as they actively participate in our unique system of democracy—faithfully exercising their privilege to vote for the candidates of their choice.

I am proud to represent this township in the House of Representatives and commend the township supervisors and residents for the pride they take in themselves, for their adherence to the traditions they hold dear, and for their interest in their local history. To know the past is to appreciate the present and to prepare for the future.●

TRIBUTE TO TROOP 106, GIRL SCOUT GOLD AWARD RECIPIENTS

HON. GEORGE W. GEKAS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to recognize the achievements of Yvonne Haffling, Michelle Noecker, Donna Rissinger, Wendy Schreffler, and Gwendolyn Witmer, constituents of mine from Rebuck, PA. These young ladies will be awarded the Girl Scout Gold Award, the highest achievement in Girl Scouting.

As young citizens, they have displayed their energetic capabilities by participating in many different projects and community services which have won them special merits of honor.

I am proud to congratulate these ladies for their outstanding contributions to the community. Their unselfish attitudes toward others have set an example for the rest of us to follow. I am honored to have individuals like these living in my district.●

THE SANDINISTA CAMPAIGN TO SUPPRESS FREEDOM OF RELIGION IN NICARAGUA

HON. C.W. BILL YOUNG

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, more than 80 percent of the Nicaraguan people are Catholic, yet the ruling Sandinista government has intensified its campaign to discredit the Catholic Church and discourage the people of Nicaragua from exercising their God-given right of freedom of religion.

The church is one of the last remaining organized forces of any size protesting the Sandinista government and its legacy of broken promises. The rest of the organizations have been disbanded or frightened off by government forces.

In their latest attempt to undermine the Cathloic Church, the Sandinistas earlier this month deported 10 priests who participated with 300 other Nicaraguans in a march protesting the government's house arrest of their colleague Rev. Luis Amado Pena. Reverend Pena is one of many Catholic priests who the Sandinistas have attempted to discredit through their disinformation campaign.

Earlier this year, in a similar propaganda campaign aimed at undermining Catholic leaders, the Sandinistas tried to link Managua's Roman Catholic Archbishop Obando y Bravo to former Nicaraguan President Anastasio Somoza through false headlines and reprints of old photographs.

In April, a pastoral letter was read on Easter Sunday asking that all Nicaraguans enter into negotiations for peace. The Sandinista's Interior Minister Tomas Borge promptly denounced the priests and their call for peace by saying it was a criminal suggestion.

It was the same Sandinista leaders who 1 year earlier organized protests to humiliate Pope John Paul II during his March 1983 visit to Managua. Sandinista followers were ordered to interrupt an outdoor mass given by the Pope and to heckle him as he passed through the city streets.

Freedom of religion is just one of the many basic human rights the Sandinista government promised the Nicaraguan people 5 years ago, but have failed to deliver. This is despite the fact that, in 1979, the Catholic Church supported the Sandinista rise to power.

As is the case throughout Nicaragua, it is the disenchantment with the Sandinista government and its long list of empty promises that is prompting people to rise up in opposition to the government. The rebellion of the Nicaraguan people is not being instigated by another nation, it is being generated and led by the Nicaraguan people themselves who seek to gain the freedoms and rights they were promised 5 years ago.●

ANNIVERSARY OF FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF LEESPORT, PA

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, this year marks the 75th anniversary of the First National Bank of Leesport, PA. Founded on August 16, 1909, by Samuel Deck, the First National Bank of Leesport has built an ever-expanding foundation of service to the community, of which all those responsible can indeed feel proud.

The bank was started with $25,000 and today it has assets of over $70 million. Its growth over the years has indeed been impressive and today 47 individuals are employed by the bank, and they service 4,600 checking and savings accounts, 600 mortgage loans, and 1,900 installment loans. Among the bank's commendable achievements are the 1961 opening of a Blandon branch office and the recent renovation of the bank's main office, which will be celebrated at an open house on Saturday, August 18, 1984.

Congratulations are indeed in order for Mr. John T. Connelly, president of the First National Bank of Leesport, for the staff of the bank, and for the community of Leesport. I am honored to have had this opportunity to bring to the attention of my colleagues the laudable achievements of the First National Bank of Leesport by those who have worked to make this financial institution what it is today. It is certainly my hope that this bank will continue to grow and prosper. Today, I ask my colleagues to join in a salute to this exceptional bank and to send all concerned our best wishes for another thriving 75 years of service.●

FARMERS AND TRADERS

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of my colleagues to an editorial which appeared in the July 21 edition of the Washington Post. The editorial makes a poignant comment on the danger of closing our doors to foreign trade.

The farmers I represent in Nebraska depend heavily upon their ability to compete in foreign markets and sell to our foreign trading partners. Open foreign trade is literally the lifeblood of agriculture in the Midwest. Last year, America's farmers exported one-third of its corn, 60 percent of its wheat, and one-half of its soybeans. This year agricultural exports for the United States are projected to top $39 billion. There is no question that agriculture is one industry in the United States which through its efficiency of production can compete effectively on world markets.

But what is competition without access to markets? The competitiveness of American agriculture has been under attack during the past 10 years—not just from our foreign trading partners, but from our domestic industries too. On two occasions, this body has passed domestic content legislation which supposedly would protect the American automobile industry and American jobs. The majority of this body, however, has apparently been blind to the fact that such policy, if ever it were implemented, would jeopardize billions of dollars of agricultural sales—nearly $7 billion to Japan and over $4 billion to the European Economic Community alone. The recent limitation against Chinese textiles has already cost America's farmers $500 million of agricultural sales.

The biggest self-inflicted wound, however, occurred in 1980 when President Carter imposed the last grain embargo against the Soviet Union in retaliation for its invasion of Afghanistan. While American farmers deplored the Soviet's action as much as any American, it was America's farmers who bore the brunt of this unwise, unnecessary and ineffective trade embargo. The Carter grain embargo cost the United States $11.4 billion in national output and hundreds of thousands of jobs. The impact on our balance of trade payments was staggering. And worst of all, the Carter grain embargo did not prevent the Soviet Union from getting the grain they needed. The last embargo encouraged the Soviet Union to establish new trading relations with other grain exporting nations, relationships which flourish today to the detriment of our Nation, and especially our Nation's farmers.

In the next few days, the House will debate H.R. 4784, the Trade Remedies Act. If this legislation is passed, it could be another severe blow which will deprive the farmers of their ability to compete internationally and to sell in foreign markets. American agriculture is the pride of this Nation in efficiency of production. I am not asking my colleagues to promote agriculture; its efficiency will do that. I do, however, implore my colleagues not to sacrifice our agriculture exports in a vain effort to prop up industries which long ago failed to remain competitive. I urge my colleagues to read and consider the following editorial, to consider the impact and the consequences of the Trade Remedies Act, and to reject the notion that protectionism and closed trading doors somehow and in someway benefit our Nation.

[From the Washington Post, July 21, 1984]

FARMERS AND TRADERS

By coming to the defense of free trade, American farmers are serving the national interest as well as their own. In recent years the politics of foreign trade has belonged generally to the industries—textiles, cars, steel—that have been having trouble competing and that wanted protection from imports. But now other American producers, those that compete successfully on world markets, are beginning to react to the threat that protectionism raises to their own prosperity.

Describing the farmers' increasingly active role, Stuart Auerbach of this newspaper's staff quoted the other day an Iowa soybean producer who said, "There isn't any such thing as a nonagricultural trade issue." By that he meant that every change in trade rules sooner or later affects the exports on which he and most of the American agricultural economy depend.

Half of this country's wheat, soybean and cotton crops are now sold abroad. When the Reagan administration tried last year to hold down imports of Chinese textiles, China stopped buying American agricultural products in retaliation—and the farm organizations say they lost half a billion dollars worth of sales. That's greater than any possible benefit to the textile industry. It was the Chinese decision to stop buying American farm products that has brought the farmers' campaign against protectionism to its present intensity.

Farmers are hardly the only Americans with a stake in maintaining export markets. Last year agricultural goods were slightly less than one-fifth of this country's exports. What's the rest? All sorts of things, but above all machinery and aircraft. Why don't the people who make those products join the campaign against the protectionists? Some of them don't know that they are producing for export. Perhaps others think that trade policy doesn't make any difference to them personally, or to their jobs. But the farmers, after much harsh experience over many years, know better.

One day last month there was a small celebration of a great event: it was the 50th anniversary of the signing of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. That was the first step away from the disastrous tariff legislation of a few years earlier, and it was pushed through Congress by people who knew that the desperately depressed farm economy could not recover without open markets abroad. That extraordinary piece of legislation set a principle that, over the following generation, guided this country and its allies through the most remarkable surge of economic growth any of them had ever seen. That principle now seems to be in danger. It would be shocking to think that, of all the lobbies in Washington, only the farmers could remember what happened half a century ago.●

RECONFIRMATION OF FEDERAL JUDGES

HON. WILLIAM L. DICKINSON

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, as you know, at the present time, Federal district judges, circuit judges, and Supreme Court Justices serve life terms. There is no effective procedure available to remove dishonest, disabled, alcoholic, senile, or otherwise unfit members of the Federal judiciary or prevent them from performing the duties of their office short of going through the impeachment process. The impeachment process is a long and cumbersome process, and as a result, only a couple of jurists have been removed from office in more than 100 years.

Under these circumstances, there is a serious threat to the quality of justice which the people of this Nation will receive in the future from the Federal Judiciary. Accordingly, I believe this is an appropriate time to give strong consideration to my proposal requiring reconfirmation of Federal judges.

Today, I am introducing legislation which proposes an amendment to the Constitution requiring that Federal judges be reconfirmed by the Senate every 6 years. I believe that this bill will make judges more responsive to the people through their elected representatives, and I invite my colleagues to cosponsor. My bill would not require renomination, which is political, but would simply require that every 6 years the Senate look over the list and reconfirm—or not—all sitting Federal judges based on performance and ability.●

EMPLOYEE STOCK OWNERSHIP PLANS

HON. DOUGLAS H. BOSCO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. BOSCO. Mr. Speaker, the remarkably successful and innovative concept of Employee Stock Ownership Plans [ESOP's] received a major boost with the enactment of H.R. 4170, the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984. Thanks to the foresight and diligence of Representative CHARLES RANGEL and the rest of the conferees, H.R. 4170 contains four key changes in tax law which will greatly encourage the implementation of ESOP's, a proven method of uniting labor and management in the common goals of efficiency and profit.

Basically, ESOP's enable average working people to acquire a part ownership of their workplace, thus allowing them to produce through their ownership of productive capital and their own labor. ESOP's provide a unique relationship whereby what is good for the capital side of the company is good for the labor side, because those who perform the labor also own the stock: labor benefits from the successes of the company.

There are over 5,000 firms today that have instituted some form of ESOP, in which employees have purchased stock and become part owners of the company that employs them. I would like to share with you the following ESOP success stories:

Lowe's Co. is a major home center chain in the Southeast, with about 9,000 employees and $1.3 billion in sales. They are listed in America's 100 best companies to work for, just published, primarily because of their ESOP. Their ESOP has full employee-shareholder voting rights, and employee votes are typically even more promanagment than outside shareholder votes.

The Mad Butcher is the largest retail grocery chain in central Arkansas, employing about 500 people. The percentage of employee ownership grew gradually during the 1970's and reached 100 percent in a final transaction last year. They did not have employee-shareholder voting rights originally, but voluntarily decided to do so after becoming 100 percent ESOP owned.

Bofors Lithographers is a 100-percent employee owned printing firm in San Mateo. While Bofors does not have employee-shareholder voting rights, they do stress heavily employee shop-floor participation is decisionmaking, and keeep their books open to all employees.

Weirton Steel is the well publicized West Viginia ESOP that saved 7,000 jobs earlier this year. In their first quarter of operation as an independent employee-owned firm, they brought back 600 laid-off workers and earned a profit of $9.7 million. Not only was this their first profitable quarter since 1981, but it was the biggest first quarter profit of any American steel company this year—including Weirton's former parent, National Steel. The Weirton plan includes extensive employee involvement in shop floor decisionmaking, and voting rights will pass to employees as the loan is paid off.

Prior to Weirton Steel, Hyatt-Clark Industries was the biggest ESOP buyout in a plant-closing situation. It has been a GM plant losing $1 million a month; now it is 100 percent employee-owned and making $1 million a month. As is the case in Weirton, voting rights are scheduled to pass to employees as their loans are paid down.

Up-Right, Inc. is a scaffolding and farm equipment manufacturer in Berkeley about 40 percent ESOP owned, and with full employee-shareholder voting rights. The two industries they serve are in depressed conditions, so they are not presently making a substantial sum of money, but management is confident they are doing much better than they would have been without the ESOP.

Fastner Industries, an Ohio manufacturer of nuts and bolts, is 100 percent employee owned and has a highly democratic management structure including not only employee-shareholder voting rights but immediate 100-percent vesting and a strong commitment to employee participation in decisionmaking.

Old Stone Bank in Providence is 33-percent employee owned and is thus no longer afraid of the bank takeover boom expected to accompany deregulation. Their employees like their ESOP so much that management is confident they would use their employee shareholder voting power to resist a takeover.

ComSonics Corp. is a Virginia cable TV equipment producer and a high ranking member of Inc. magazines' list of the 500 fastest growing private companies. Employees own 20 percent of its stock and will ultimately own 100 percent; the majority owners is an outspoken advocate of what he calls "participative management" and the firm is one of three finalists for a Virginia Productivity Award.

The four major changes in tax law that should encourage many more ESOP success stores are:

1. Lenders that make loans to ESOP companies can now exempt from taxation 50 percent of the interest earned from such loans. Reducing capital gains by 50 percent should greatly encourage investing in ESOP companies.

2. Dividends of ESOP companies passed on to employees will now be tax deductible for ESOP employers.

3. A sale of a 30-percent interest to an ESOP will now be a tax-free exchange similar to a sale to a larger company.

4. Finally, an estate may now transfer its estate liability to an ESOP by transferring an equivalent amount of stock to the ESOP.

I commend the fine work of the tax bill conference committee and am proud to have played a part in the enactment of these important changes to our Tax Code.●

TRIBUTE TO MONSIEUR BERTRAND BARRE

HON. MARILYN LLOYD

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, Monsieur Bertrand Barre will be returning to France this month after having served nearly 4 years as nuclear attaché to the Embassy of France. During his tenure, Mr. Barre has been an eloquent spokesman for the French nuclear energy program, and I have regarded his expertise on nuclear matters both here and abroad with great admiration. He was the first foreign national to present his Government's viewpoint on nuclear energy and breeder reactor technology before our subcommittee hearing on the Clinch River breeder reactor last year.

As many colleagues know, France is a leading proponent of breeder reactors among our allies, and has assumed a position of world leadership in developing this technology for comercial use. The 1,200-MWe Superphenix reactor will be the largest operating breeder reactor in the free world when it goes on line next year. Mr. Barre has always counseled the Energy Research and Production Subcommittee that the United States must participate in a substantive way in this worldwide enterprise. In his testimony before my subcommittee last September, he stated that, "The world needs a U.S. breeder program, as [the U.S.] needs a European and Japanese program." He went on to say, "If you give up, I don't think that will doom the breeder programs elsewhere in the world, but we will certainly miss you."

Well, we will certainly miss you, Mr. Barre. On behalf of myself, the subcommittee, and the staff, we bid you a fond "au revoir," and wish you well in your future assignments.●

SOVIET MASSACRES OF INNOCENT AFGHAN PEOPLE CONTINUE

HON. C.W. BILL YOUNG

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, the ruthless Soviet Army has massacred thousands of innocent Afghan villagers in the 5 years since the Kremlin directed the invasion of Afghanistan.

It is a record so repulsive that many Soviet officers and soldiers have defected and given themselves up rather than continue to obey their orders to slaughter the Afghan people. Afghan refugees crossing into Pakistan recently told of Soviet massacres in three villages near Qandahar. Jonathan Broder of the Chicago Tribune has written of their horrifying recollections of one day last fall when Soviet troops killed 360 Afghan civilians.

Survivors described in detail how the Soviets entered in tanks, armored personnel carriers and on foot, cutting down old people, women and small children where they stood. They said some villagers were lined up against walls and shot; others were gunned down in their homes.

Bloody and inhumane scenes such as this have been repeated time and again by Soviet troops throughout the world. Unlike the Soviet Union, we have never used our military to slaughter innocent men, women, and children as the Soviets have done in Afghanistan. We have never used our powerful military strength to eliminate the national identities of nations as the Soviet Union has done in the Ukraine and the Baltic States of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania. We have never used our military power to oppress the rights of people as the Soviets have done in Hungary, Poland, and Czechoslovakia. We have never created surrogate hoodlums to roam and terrorize the world as the Soviets have done with Cuba and Vietnam.

Instead, our Nation has sought to preserve freedom and liberty for ourselves and our allies. Our military has been a deterrent force to those who would seek to deny those freedoms and has proven to be ready to respond to aggression by our enemies. Never has our military been ordered to deny the freedom of a nation or randomly slaughter people as the Soviets have done.

Following my remarks is one of many stories of the Afghan refugees. It is a stirring reminder of the great differences that exist between the Soviet Union and our own Nation.

The article follows:

[From the Chicago Tribune, July 17, 1984]

SURVIVORS SAY SOVIETS MASSACRED CIVILIANS IN AFGHAN VILLAGES

(By Jonathan Broder)

QUETTA, PAKISTAN.—Soviet troops killed at least 360 civilians in three villages near the southern Afghan city of Qandahar last fall, then doused the bodies with a chemical that promotes rapid decomposition, according to witnesses and survivors.

The massacre in the villages of Bala Karz, Mushkizi and Kulchabad, clustered on the outskirts of Qandahar, occurred Oct. 12 after two days of fierce fighting between Soviet troops and Moslem mujaheddin fighters.

The killings appeared to have been committed in revenge for heavy Soviet casualties, said survivors who have become refugees in this dusty Pakistani border city 140 miles south of Qandahar.

There have been repeated claims of massacres by Soviet troops since Soviet forces invaded Afghanistan in December 1979, but the stories have been difficult to confirm because of secrecy and poor communications.

Last fall western diplomats in New Delhi gave sketchy reports of large numbers of civilians killed near Qandahar. But the first details from witnesses emerged only last week after survivors crossed Afghanistan's southern border into Pakistan.

More than a dozen survivors and witnesses were interviewed through independent Pathan-speaking interpreters in hospitals and refugee camps in Pakistan.

All spoke of heavy Soviet reliance on helicopter gunships and artillery in the preliminary battles against the Afghan guerrillas. The effectiveness of such tactics and the retreat of the mujaheddin into the surrounding fields left the civilians defenseless when Soviet armored columns rumbled into the three hamlets on the morning of Oct. 12.

Survivors described in detail how the Soviets entered in tanks, armored personnel carriers and on foot, cutting down old people, women and small children where they stood. They said some villagers were lined up against walls and shot; others were gunned down in their homes.

Survivors said the Soviets doused the corpses with a chemical that accelerates decomposition to a matter of hours. They said the Soviets were aware of the widely held Afghan superstition that the bodies of mujaheddin fighters decompose more slowly than those of the enemy, thereby proving the superiority of their religious struggle.

Survivors said the three villages are deserted. Before the reported massacre, the population in each had swollen to 3,000 because of the influx of squatters from the countryside.

In reconstructing the events, Abdul Wassi, 25, an Afghan guerrilla commander, said that two days before the massacre he led 200 fighters of the Jamiat-i-Islami guerrilla group, one of six major rebel organizations in Afghanistan, in a successful ambush against a Soviet armored column about four miles northeast of the three villages.

The next afternoon, on Oct. 11, Wassi said he learned that about 500 Soviet soldiers had regrouped and were moving with about 50 tanks and 50 armored personnel carriers toward the Khalki bridge intersection, which commands the western approach to the hamlets.

"We fought them at the bridge for several hours," Wassi said. "Then . . . we retreated to the orchards and fields around the villages after sundown and from there staged hit-and-run attacks against the Soviets during the night."

Survivors said the people of Bala Karz, Mushkizi and Kulchabad could hear the fighting in the orchards that dot the slopes about two miles from the villages. But they said it was not until dawn on Oct. 12, when a few guerrillas managed to slip back into the hamlets, that some people learned that Soviet and Afghan Army troops were about to enter the villages. Some villagers fled to the surrounding fields, survivors said, but many awoke that morning not knowing of the danger.

In Bala Karz, Gul Bebe, a widow in her 40s with four children, said she awoke early that day to lend a hand at a village wedding. She said she was visiting the groom's house when she heard shooting and explosions in Mushkizi, 300 yards down the road.

"I started to run home to fetch my children," she said. "A dozen women came running toward me and said the Russians had entered Mushkizi and killed many people. We began to run the other way, toward Kulchabad, when another group of women came running from that direction, warning us to turn back because the Russians had entered Kulchabad from that side. So we ran into the nearest house."

Gul Bebe said the 25 women watched from the windows as 50 Soviet soldiers appeared suddenly on the street, firing wildly and then fanning out to conduct house-to-house searches. One of the soldiers kicked open their door, and 10 Soviets entered the house, she said.

"The first thing the Russians did was start looking for food," Gul Bebe said. "They found some bread and began stuffing it into their mouths. They were very hungry. . . . Then they ordered us outside to another house."

Inside the second house, Gul Bebe said, they joined five other women. She said the Soviets began taking their jewelry and money.

"We told them to take everything but don't touch us," she said. At that point, Gul Bebe added, a few Afghan Army soldiers entered the house. Lowering her voice in shame, Gul Bebe then said, "There was an attempt on us. A few Russians took two girls, about 15 or 16 years old, and separated them from the rest of us. They tried to remove their chadors (full-length Moslem veils).

"One of the old women took out some money she was hiding in her dress and offered to the Russians to leave the girls alone. The Russians took the money and kept on handling the girls and trying to tear off the front of their dresses. Then I heard an Afghan soldier shouting at the Russians in their own language. I looked at him, and he was trembling with anger.

"I was not worried about the girls anymore. I was very frightened for myself, and I was looking for a hiding place. Then I heard a long burst of gunfire, and I saw three Russians fall down. Then there was a silence, and I ran away as fast as I could. As I was running, I heard more explosions and shooting, and then I felt a hot pain in my leg. I fell into a hole and passed out."

At the same time that the Soviets were sweeping through Bala Karz, witnesses said, other units attacked Mushkizi and Kulchabad, which flank Bala Karz on the east and west.

Sardar Mohammed, 55, a Kulchabad farmer, said he was among about 30 elderly men who had gathered in front of the Kulchabad village mosque to await the Soviets.

"We had several instances before when the mujaheddin retreated, and Russian and Afghan soldiers came in to search the village. Sometimes the old people even used to accompany them," he said. "But this time we heard shooting and explosions, and I ran to my house."

Sardar Mohammed said he reached his home just ahead of a group of Soviet soldiers who stormed into the house of Issa Jan, his neighbor.

"My daughter and I looked over the wall and saw 10 or 12 Russians and one Afghan soldier in Issa Jan's house," Sardar Mohammed said. "We could hear Issa Jan say to them, 'If you want to search, please come in.' Then the soldiers shot him."

Sardar Mohammed said his daughter fled to another neighbor's home while he hid in the house's grain bin.

"I stayed in the granary for hours. I could hear footsteps and smashing when the Russians entered and searched the house and then left," he said. "All the time I was hiding, I could hear shooting and explosions, then silence and screaming outside."

Meanwhile, in Mushkizi, Rai Mahmad, 20, a farmer and guerrilla sympathizer, stood on the roof of his home in the morning and saw armored personnel carriers advancing over the Khalki bridge into his village.

He said he ran through the streets, shouting, "The Russians are coming!" and then dashed home, where he and his father hid in a concealed tunnel under the floor.

"When we finally came out of the tunnel, it was almost dusk. Everything was charred and burned. Then we heard wailing and cries for help and went outside. The Russians had gone. The first thing we saw was four old men lying dead in the street, and they were just the first bodies we saw."

In Kulchabad, Sardar Mohammed said, the same sudden eerie silence, punctuated by wailing, prompted him to climb out of his grain bin and walk outside. "I came out in the late afternoon and went to the house of my friend, Ahadar Mohammed," he said.

"Everyone was dead. Ahadar, his wife and his baby were lying on the floor covered with blood. His 9-year-old daughter was hanging over the window, half in the house, half out. It looked like she was shot as she tried to run away.

Sardar Mohammed said other survivors joined him as he went from house to house in Kulchabad, searching for relatives, neighbors and friends. "I saw with my own eyes 60 bodies altogether that day, and when we buried all the dead, I stopped counting after 150," he said.

Together with about 60 other fighters, a young rebel who got his family out in time, Lal Mohammed, 25, entered his village of Mushkizi to find Rai Mahmad, his father and other survivors dragging corpses into the center square.

"We went from house to house and found everyone dead. Even the animals—the cows, the donkeys, the cats and dogs—were shot dead," he said. "Outside in the street, we found nine dead children. All were shot in the head. Some of them still had their toys in their hands."

Meanwhile, in Bala Karz, Gul Bebe regained consciousness at the bottom of a 3-foot-deep ground oven, unable to move her right leg where a bullet had shattered her shin.

"The first thing I heard was a small baby crying," she said. "After a while, I heard footsteps above and shouted for help. The person who took me out of the oven was my husband's cousin. He put me down in the middle of the courtyard and wrapped his turban around my leg.

"I looked around the courtyard and saw many bodies of dead women and children and old people lying there. My husband's cousin went over and picked up the baby, which was trying to suck the breast of his dead mother. He carried the baby over to me and asked me to keep it until the rest of the villagers could come and identify their dead relatives.

The villagers spent the night burying the dead in a mass grave, survivors said. Sardar Mohammed said 360 victims were buried. Lal Mohammed, who also helped bury the bodies, estimated that 100 people died in Bala Karz, another 100 in Mushkizi and between 160 and 170 in Kulchabad.

The morning after the massacre, Gul Bebe said, she was wrapped in a blanket along with the infant and placed atop a camel for a 60-mile journey with armed guerrilla escorts across the desert to the Pakistani border town of Chaman, where the International Committee of the Red Cross maintains a clinic for wounded Afghans. There, Red Cross officials put them on a train to Quetta, she said.

Most of the other survivors interviewed said they remained in their villages until a few months ago to harvest their crops, then moved to Qandahar to join relatives. But on June 28, the survivors said, Soviet warplanes heavily bombed the guerrilla-controlled quarter of Qandahar, killing at least 200 people.

Sardar Mohammed, Rai Mahmad, Abdul Wassi and their families were among those who crossed into Pakistan last week after the Qandahar bombing, according to records of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees in Pakistan.●

FAMILY PROGRAMS HURT BY BUDGET CUTS

HON. PATRICIA SCHROEDER OF COLORADO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I have prepared for my colleagues an analysis of the impact of the budget cuts on children, youth, and families.

The Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families, on which I serve as chair of the Economic Security Task Force, has held extensive hearings which reveal that families have suffered as a result of the budget cuts during the last 3 years. These cuts represent a step back from this country's commitment to children and their families.

Programs that serve children, youth, and families will be cut by almost $62 billion during the Reagan administration. These figures are based on projections of the Congressional Budget Office. They are literal estimates of reductions in outlays based on 1980 law before the legislative changes instituted under the Reagan administration.

The damage done by these cuts would have almost doubled if Congress had not rejected an additional $52 billion in cuts proposed by the Reagan administration during fiscal years 1982-84.

The tables below are based on official administration budget requests and actual congressional appropriations for major programs that serve children, youth, and families:

[1] September budget revisions contained block grant proposals and line item estimates.
[2] Proposed consolidation of vocational education and adult education.
[3] Although the administration originally proposed consolidation of categorical health programs into two health block grants, funding levels for fiscal year 1982 were established by the Omnibus Budget and Reconciliation Act of 1981, the provisions of which were worked out by the White House and the House Republicans.
[4] The administration proposed combining maternal and child health with the WIC program, to be funded at $1 billion $278 million less than fiscal year 1982 funding levels. It is assumed that if passed the reductions would have been shared equally.
[5] The administration proposed combining migrant health, family planning, and black lung clinics with the primary care block grant in fiscal years 1983, 1984 and 1985. It is assumed that if passed the reductions would have been shared equally.
[6] Based on amount appropriated. Does not include unspent funds from a previous fiscal year.
[7] Includes supplemental appropriations requested by the administration to complete funding for the full fiscal year. Current WIC appropriation expires on July 10, 1984, and the administration's supplemental would provide $167 million. For child nutrition programs, which run out of funds on August 15, 1984, the administration requests a supplemental of $545.5 million.
[8] Reflects administration proposal to fold WIC into the maternal and child health care block grant, with funding $278 million less than 1982. It is assumed that if passed the reduction would have been shared equally.
[9] Does not include State administrative funds, or food service equipment assistance, which was terminated at the end of fiscal year 1981 under the 1981 Budget Reconciliation Act.
[10] Includes all commodities needed to meet the entitlement. Bonus commodities are not included.
[11] Administration proposed consolidating various categorical programs into a social services block grant. Although Congress created the social services block grant, it maintained some of the programs separately. Although earlier budgets were proposed by the administration, funding levels were agreed upon by the White House and House Republicans and established by the Omnibus Budget and Reconciliation Act of 1981.
[12] The community services block grant replaced antipoverty activities previously conducted by the Community Services Administration, which was abolished by the Omnibus Budget and Reconciliation Act, effective October 1, 1981. Although the administration originally proposed to consolidate these activities into the social services block grant, Congress rejected this proposal and created two block grants.
[13] Administration proposed consolidation of these programs into expanded block grants; funding for child welfare services at $161 million and foster care at $245 million.
[14] In fiscal year 1983 the administration proposed consolidating the child abuse discretionary, adoption opportunities, and child welfare research and demonstration programs with funding at $5 million. In fiscal year 1984, the administration proposed a single amount, $6 million, for the 3 programs and in fiscal year 1985 requested $7 million.
[15] Comprehensive Employment Training Act/Job Training Partnership Act.
[16] JTPA is funded by program year (July 1–June 30) rather than by fiscal year.

NEW VIEW OF OFFSHORE DRILLING

HON. JOHN McCAIN

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. McCAIN. Mr. Speaker, when the House considers H.R. 5973, the Interior and related agencies appropriations bill for fiscal year 1985, that bill will contain prohibitions against Outer Continental Shelf [OCS] leasing off the coast of both Massachusetts and California. An amendment to strike these restrictive provisions during the Appropriations Committee markup failed by the narrow vote of 20 to 21. More and more, the public is beginning to recognize that these offshore drilling moratoriums are counterproductive and shortsighted.

In fact, U.S. oil imports during the first 6 months of 1984 surpassed last year's levels by 25 percent. The U.S. remains dependent upon foreign sources for nearly one-third of our crude oil and oil product requirements. The cost of imported oil in 1983 was $55 billion, an amount nearly equivalent to our total trade deficit for the year.

In the face of these figures, we face growing pressure to replace our declining domestic reserves with new discoveries. These discoveries take time, and sometimes a decade or more is required before newly discovered oil and gas can be brought onstream.

In light of these facts, the last thing we need is a on-again/off-again policy toward exploration and production on offshore Federal lands, where the largest new discoveries are likely to be made.

A recent editorial appearing in the Arizona Republic highlights these concerns. I commend it to the attention and review of my colleagues.

Although the process has been slow, Congress seems to have been gradually changing its attitude toward offshore oil drilling.

However, a general ban on offshore drilling will probably not be lifted until a new Congress convenes next year, since the months ahead will be devoted to political conventions and then the fall election.

There are reasons for the change of attitude:

The nation's vulnerability to oil-import disruptions, particularly increasing risks caused by the Iran-Iraq war.

The patient work of Interior Secretary William Clark who has made domestic energy development a top priority.

The United States has reduced its dependence on Persian Gulf imports. But the possibility of American military intervention in the area remains because U.S. allies in Western Europe and Japan are still highly dependent on Arab oil.

Americans spend $52 billion on imported oil last year. That was three-fourths of the nation's total trade deficit in 1983. The total deficit may soar to $130 billion this year.

This should not be. The federal government has 4 billion acres available for leasing where oil might be located. Only 20 million acres has been leased.

Moreover, Congress ordered the interior secretary in both 1953 and 1978 to make such offshore oil and gas deposits productive. However, in the past two years, Congress reversed itself and prohibited production on 52 million acres containing an estimated 2.2 billion barrels of oil.

The House Appropriations Committee recently approved renewed drilling bans off both Massachusetts and California. But it allowed a ban off the Florida Gulf Coast to lapse and decided not to prohibit drilling off Alaska's Bristol Bay.

Clark, who believes the attitude in Congress is starting to swing his way, argues that after more than two decades of talk about producing offshore oil, the country still does not have a producing oil or gas well in federal waters off Alaska or the Atlantic Coast.

He also cites how Interior consults far more with state and local governments in choosing or rejecting development and production sites, and Clark says no environmentally sensitive areas will be leased.

Congress has been talking one way and acting another for more than 20 years. It has ordered Interior to produce more domestic energy while placing one barrier after another in its way.

A reversal of this attitude cannot come too soon.●

TRIBUTE TO NORMAN GILL

HON. JIM MOODY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment to express my gratitude for the work of one member of the community of Milwaukee, WI, whose life has been one of selfless dedication to the public good. That person is Norman Gill.

On July 1, 1945, when some of the current public officials in Milwaukee were still children, and many were not yet born, Mr. Gill became the founding father of the Citizens Governmental Research Bureau. This organization, funded through donations by private industry in Milwaukee, has since been synonymous with Mr. Gill's tireless inspection of public policy and social trends in the Greater Milwaukee area. That its voice has been one of dispassionate and respected analysis has been exemplified by the long list of community leaders that have served on its board of directors.

But beyond the strength of his organization, Mr. Gill's own personal presence has served as a dynamic to foment solid public policy at all levels in Milwuakee's decisionmaking bodies. He has tirelessly given of his time and expertise whenever called upon, and his words and insights have been the bedrock of many of the policies which guide our city today.

Although Mr. Gill has chosen to retire at this time from the Citizens Governmental Research Bureau, he intends to remain highly visible and active in his new position in the Political Science Department at Marquette University. Upon this new endeavor I wish Mr. Gill well, and look forward to his words of wisdom for many years to come.●

TRIBUTE TO DR. JOHN F. BRENSIKE

HON. ALBERT GORE, JR.

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, on July 1, 1984, this Nation lost a selfless public servant and one of our greatest leaders in the field of preventive health care—Dr. John F. Brensike. Dr. Brensike, only 41 when he died, was the founder and president of the National Health Screening Council for Volunteer Organizations, a nonprofit organization which provided health education and screening services to millions of Americans through a nationwide system of health fairs.

It is impossible to overstate Dr. Brensike's contribution to the public health and his enduring legacy in the health fair organization. John Brensike was a dreamer. Nine years ago he dreamed of an organization that would make available free health screenings for the entire population of the United States. He envisioned senior citizen health fairs, student health fairs, minority health fairs, employer initiated health fairs, and government health fairs. He wanted screenings to be made available to everyone free of charge, not as a substitute for a physical, but as a yardstick to make decisions about one's health and lifestyle. He didn't want to preach, he wanted the health fair screenings to speak for themselves. He had a deeply felt belief that people properly informed, would make the correct decisions about their health.

Now, nearly a decade later, his organization has accomplished all this and more. Operating in nearly every State in the country and several countries overseas, the NHSCVO has provided hundreds of millions of dollars of free health screening services to millions of Americans. Dr. Brensike perhaps did more than any single individual in promoting our awareness of our health risks and how we can promote better health. He helped give Americans a reason to hope and the courage to change. He saved literally thousands of lives.

This is no small measure of a man but it doesn't begin to tell you the level of his sacrifice. The health fair organization rested entirely on his shoulders. He was its visionary, its fundraiser, its administrator and its conscience. Nine years ago there were but one or two employees, today there are more than 150. He was a cardiologist who worked 24-hour stints in the emergency rooms of hospitals to feed his family. But he spent every other waking minute devoted to health fairs. What is remarkable is that Dr. Brensike never took a cent for his work. Health fairs were his hobby, his love, his dream and to be paid somehow seemed wrong to him. Those of us who knew Dr. Brensike were humbled by his selflessness, his caring and his devotion.

John was persistent and enormously persuasive, driven to show you the underlying logic of his idea. A meeting with him was exhausting but thought provoking and exhilerating. John told me before his death that his next project was to end world hunger without the use of Federal funds. He laid out a credible vision of how his world hunger plan would work, but the idea seemed impossible. One person to coordinate all those resources with private money and volunteer services and without government funding? But on further reflection it occurred to me that as fantastic as his concept was and as devastating as the problem is, it would be Dr. John Brensike that could make it happen.

Many of my colleagues had not had a chance to meet Dr. Brensike before his death, yet they, their staffs and their constituents were touched by him. For 4 years he organized the House-Senate health fairs—a service we have almost begun to take for granted. Several years ago when I asked if he would bring his program to Tennessee, he was on the phone the next day. His personal energy was enormous, his commitment unshakeable.

John left a loving wife, Linda, and five children, John Scott, Doreen, Eve, Karl, and Julie. They were his reason to pursue his dreams and the strength of his success.

Two weeks ago a funeral service was held for Dr. Brensike. He was eulogized by noted health educator Dr. Tim Johnson. I would like to preserve Dr. Johnson's remarks as a tribute to this remarkable man. Dr. Brensike's energy and vision will remain a challenge to all who knew him.

EULOGY BY DR. JIM JOHNSON

There are many among you this morning who knew John more intimately than did I, but it is not inappropriate that I stand here on behalf of those many he touched in the public sector, because that was such a large part of his work and time, and I am honored to speak on their behalf. In one way, it is not difficult to remember John, because, as the cliché goes, what you saw was what you got. He was not subtle in either appearance or style. Indeed, when one thinks of his appearance, one has to smile inwardly if not outwardly. The holes in the shoes, the ancient labels in the suits, the hairstyle from another era. John was, I think, the only man or woman that I have known who truly did not care about unimportant things. Nor was his style one of subtlety. His persistence, his refusal, to accept "no" as an answer on behalf of his dream, the late night phone calls when most of us were heading for bed, or already in bed. The pushing for "just one more consideration", one more vision. But to judge John Brensike just on his style or appearance would be to miss the point, because those were merely symbols of the greater truth about John, namely that he was one of those very rare individuals who not only had a dream but who lived it out, who was a true believer in his dream. And who among us this morning would dare to suggest that John could have or should have lived any differently than he did, because he followed his dream, he explored depths in himself and caused others to feel depths in themselves that otherwise would have been missed. John's dream required that he use the vast resources of his intelligence, and make no mistake about it, John Brensike was a very bright man. A quick study, a sponge. His dream required that he explore the depths of his own commitment to the welfare of others. His dream required a willingness to stir up the establishment, to cause government bureaucracy and corporate structure to do things which they otherwise would never have done. John's dream required so much of him and his family. But who is to say that what he accomplished in his all too brief 41 years is not worth far more than what most of us will accomplish in a so-called "full" lifetime. Now, John was not always easy to live with, and those of you who worked with him on a day-to-day basis know that better than I do. There were times that I dreaded a phone call from John, because I knew he was going to talk me into something that I really didn't want to do. And even as I came down yesterday instead of departing on vacation as I was scheduled to do, as I said to Linda last night, I couldn't help but smiling and saying "Well, John got me again." But I'm sure I speak for all of you when I say that I wouldn't have missed him for the world. And that I am a better person because I knew him. Now, finally, I want to say a very personal word about my own faith and convictions, especially to the family. I do believe that our personhood does not end with the death of the physical body, even though there is great evidence of evil and injustice and unfairness in the world, I think if we take the time, we find greater evidence of power of love and intelligence that will call us. And it will surely call someone like John who gave himself to others, to their betterment, and to their welfare. I believe that John this day is with the God who created us and will one day call us unto Himself. May God bless his memory among us all.●

IN MEMORY OF RAQUEL MARQUEZ FRANKEL

HON. ESTEBAN EDWARD TORRES

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay homage to a dear and trusted friend of mine who recently passed away. Raquel Marquez Frankel was truly an inspirational force in my life and in the life of this Nation's Hispanic community. She was a friend who I could always turn to for counseling and support.

Raquel's steadfast commitment to helping others is probably best exemplified in the founding of the Spanish Catholic Center in Washington, DC. One of her most enduring contributions, the center exists to help Hispanic immigrants make the difficult adjustment to American life. The center's services, which are provided to clients without regard for color, ethnic background, or religous affiliation, include everything from medical help to educational and job-related programs.

It is with great pride that I remember Raquel's capacity for work, demonstrated in her tremendous contribution to the Congressional Hispanic Caucus, since its inception in 1977. Raquel worked tirelessly with my friend, Congressman EDWARD ROYBAL, in founding the Hispanic Caucus. She served as its first director from 1977 until 1980 and was instrumental in its incorporation in 1978. The Hispanic Caucus is an institution that all Americans can be proud of because it has expanded the scope of this House of Representatives.

With her untimely death, Americans lost an individual who was always working to enrich the lives of those with little opportunity. She realized that in order to improve the quality of life for Hispanics, institutions dedicated to people were a necessity. The Hispanic Caucus and the Spanish Catholic Center are a part of the grand legacy Raquel left behind. As many of my colleagues have pointed out, Raquel was instrumental in the creation of several other national and community Hispanic organizations, including the National Association of Latino Elected & Appointed Officials, Mujeres en accion, the Spanish Education Development Center, GALA Bilingual Theater.

Raquel's commitment to her work and to her friends, will surely be missed. She epitomized vision, hard work, and endurance. These are all qualities that not only brought her tremendous admiration from those who knew her, but especially from those, like myself, who are eternally grateful for her ceaseless help.

There will be countless memorials for Raquel Frankel because she possessed qualities we need to respect and to emulate, and qualities essential to serve our communities. She will be remembered because she was an exceptional leader, one who rather than working to make people think highly of her, worked to make people think highly of themselves. For this I am proud to remember her as my friend.●

INTERNATIONAL FAMILY PLANNING PROGRAMS

HON. PETER H. KOSTMAYER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, earlier this week the Philadelphia Inquirer joined those expressing their opposition to the administration's efforts to abandon America's commitment to International Family Planning programs.

The Inquirer editorial makes the case against the administration and for the continuation and in fact, the expansion of one of America's most worthwhile foreign aid programs.

I recommend the editorial to my colleagues.

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer, July 23, 1984]

WORLD POPULATION BOMB MUST BE DEFUSED NOW

For domestic consumption, to please a single-issue crowd, the Reagan administration is threatening to fan the fuse of the global population bomb. If there aren't guarantees that U.S. birth control funds won't go to international groups that subsidize or counsel abortion, the administration says, millions of American dollars—perhaps more than $50 million—might just stay at home.

Congress has forbidden since 1974 the use of federal funds for foreign abortion-related activity, but the Reagan proposal would go farther by cutting off funds to family planning groups that may subsidize abortions using other resources.

One prime recipient has been the United Nations Fund for Population Activities. And the administration will lower the boom at a U.N. World Population Conference in Mexico City on Aug. 6. The so-far prevailing White House view? World population growth isn't as bad as it's cracked up to be. And, if it was, free enterprise is a better way to combat it than birth control.

While the birth rates of developed countries, in fact, have been declining, the poorer nations—and especially cities—of the Third World are showing no such trend. Former World Bank president Robert McNamara makes a convincing case that, unchecked, the birth rates in India, El Salvador, Nigeria and other African and Asian states will bring on an ugly future: Massive unemployment, disease-infested urban jungles, food shortages, denuded environments and crushing poverty.

Consequence? Mr. McNamara predicts in Foreign Affairs magazine that poor families will be driven increasingly to the crudest means of birth control—abortion and infanticide—simply to survive.

That is the ultimate irony of the Reagan proposal developed by the Office of Policy Development and National Security. In the end—and long after the Reagan era—it will exacerbate what it purports to cure. In the interim, former Sens. Robert Taft Jr. and Joseph Tydings warned in a letter to Congress, its "fundamentalist, knownothing" political philosophy is likely to cause the U.S. serious foreign policy embarrassment.

While Mr. Reagan plays to his right wing, the realities of world politics continue to spin out their own grim scenario.

New evidence has come to light of massive starvation in China during the late 1950s when that nation attempted to readjust its industry and agriculture to serve an expanding population. Even currently in China there are widespread reports of the killing of female infants. Unfettered population growth is also likely to deepen the international debt crisis, strengthen the hand of authoritarian regimes and trigger a new wave of protectionism.

Former Delaware Gov. Russell W. Peterson, president of the National Audubon Society, has warned that the $240 million the U.S. has allocated for international family planning "is the best antidote to abortion" the U.S. can buy.

Yet, at home Mr. Reagan has pursued the same strategy—cutting funding and support for the Family Planning Services and Population Research Act, which since 1970 has been the backbone of national efforts at reducing unintended pregnancy and the need for abortion.

Economic expansion alone is not enough to defuse the population bomb. In fact, in a speech in Nairobi, Kenya, World Bank president A. W. Clausen insisted that population growth stalls the very economies that Mr. Reagan sees as saviors.

"Poverty and rapid population growth reinforce each other," Mr. Clausen said. "Therefore the international community has no alternative but to cooperate, with a sense of urgency, in an effort to slow population growth if development is to be achieved."

That's no news to the Agency for International Development, the U.S. State Department or a host of other economic experts in and out of the government who called on Mr. Reagan's inner-circle to drop the threat to defund world family-planning programs.

Their concern is palpable: Under the distracted gaze of America, they see hunger and disease expanding in the poor nations of the world. And they see the United States being further isolated and surrounded by a sea of humanity oblivious to the tub-thumping of domestic politics. Talk about a march of folly.●

NEW JERSEY ANNUAL PUERTO RICAN STATEWIDE PARADE

HON. PETER W. RODINO, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, this Sunday, July 29, as I have done for the past two decades, I will have the pleasure of attending the 21st annual Puerto Rican statewide parade. It is indeed a day of celebration for the many citizens of our Puerto Rican community. And it is a time when we pay tribute to the Puerto Rican people of our State of New Jersey for their outstanding contributions to our society. It is a time when we celebrate the rich cultural heritage and traditions of Puerto Rican people. And it is a time when all of us—of every ethnic background—salute our friends in the Puerto Rican community and join with them in this spirit of celebration.

The parade's theme is register and vote. This theme is especially significant now in this important election year. Our political system can only grow in greatness with the greater participation of its citizens. The parade will, therefore, provide all of our citizens with a vivid and forceful reminder of the importance of the right to vote.

The statewide parade caps a week of festivities, including the opening of a Puerto Rican cultural exhibit which will be on display at Newark's city hall rotunda through August 3. The show features paintings, artifacts, and photographs by Puerto Rican artists, along with a musical program.

Newark's Mayor Kenneth Gibson will host a preparade breakfast on Sunday morning. This year's parade is appropriately dedicated to its founders: Marie Gonzalez, Antonio Perez, Ramon S. Velez, Ana Ateca, and Dr. Jose Rosario.

The grand marshal for this year's parade is Johnny Torres. The invocation will be given by Bishop David Arias. Among the many dignitaries participating will be Maribel Crespo, who was crowned Miss Puerto Rico of New Jersey for 1984.

The Puerto Rican statewide parade committee works year round to ensure the parade's success, and there are many people responsible for this mammoth undertaking. Most important is this year's president, Luz Miriam Hernandez Sanchez, who is also a staff member of the Newark Human Rights Commission. Her dedication and hard work are second to none.

The honorary members of the Puerto Rican statewide parade committee are Mayor Kenneth Gibson; Carlos Romero Barcelo, Governor of Puerto Rico; New Jersey Gov. Thomas Kean; and Dr. Jose Rosario, a founder and past president. The officers of the committee are Juan Antonio Rivera, first vice president; Juan "Johnny" Cossio, second vice president; Leslie Zayas, third vice president; Eddie Vega, fourth vice president; Luis Rodriguez, fifth vice president; Hilda Negron, sixth vice president; Iriz Ruiz, executive secretary; Marie Ruiz and Juanita Giordano, secretaries; Julio Matos, recording secretary; Freddy Soto, treasurer; Gaspar Colon, subtreasurer; William Rivera, sergeant at arms; and Miguel Rodriguez, adviser. The members at large are Matilde Baretto, Frank Rosario, Olex Heredia, Gerardo Toledo, Tony Maldonado, Ruben Rivera, and Rosin Vega. The coordinators are William Sanchez, Mariano Colon, and Sixto Lopez. Finally, the following people served as committee chairpersons: Luis Lopez [annual running marathon]; Ana Floes [Miss Puerto Rico of New Jersey pageant]; Matilde Barreto [annual yearbook]; and Miguel Rodriguez [annual banquet].

It will indeed be a privilege and pleasure to join once again with my many friends in the Puerto Rican community in this year's outstanding celebration of the statewide Puerto Rican parade.●

THE TUOLOMNE RIVER AND ENVIRONMENTAL POLICY

HON. BARBARA BOXER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, this administration has failed to name even one addition to the Federal Wild and Scenic River System.

I invite the President and his Environmental Agency people to do what I did last weekend—to take a raft trip down the magnificent Tuolomne River near Yosemite—and then to make their first addition—the Tuolomne River.

When I completed the overnight raft trip the press asked me what I had learned. I explained that it wasn't so much what I learned but what I felt.

As I looked around the setting of this river, the rushing whitewater, the magnificent mountains, the beautiful natural beaches, the waterfalls—I realized that there would be no way for humankind to improve on nature—no way.

The Tuolomne River is God's gift to us: we owe it to our generation and to future generations not to destroy this wonder of nature.

"We have not inherited the Earth, we are borrowing it from our children." So said David Brower. I say Amen.●

MASSACHUSETTS REJECTS CRISIS RELOCATION PLANNING

HON. BARNEY FRANK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, even as President Reagan's defense policies have reduced the response time for a nuclear attack to fewer and fewer minutes, and even as the evidence mounts that there is no possible way to localize the effects of even a small nuclear exchange, the Reagan administration continues to pursue the Federal Emergency Management Agency's crisis relocation plan. Crisis relocation is a plan to move millions of Americans from urban areas into rural areas in anticipation of nuclear attack.

I do not believe that it is constructive to deal with the nuclear threat in this way. In the first place, the plan is highly impractical. Every major city in our Nation is faced with traffic problems that reduce car travel to a standstill during rush hours. It is inconceivable that an exodus such as that envisioned by FEMA could be carried out in any sort of logical way free of hysteria. Furthermore, it is becoming more and more clear that there is nowhere to run. The so-called nuclear winter, which is gaining credibility even among the Defense Establishment, affects both urban and rural areas with equal devastation. Finally, crisis relocation planning is the kind of preparing for nuclear war that has caused people around the world to doubt the Reagan administration's commitment to nuclear disarmanent. For these reasons and more, many States and localities have strongly resisted FEMA's offices in this area.

The State of Massachusetts has, I believe, responded in a responsible and rational way to FEMA's misguided strategy. Gov. Michael Dukakis has signed an executive order that restores emergency management to those areas where assistance can be effective. Massachusetts has properly determined that precious resources to aid victims of both manmade and natural disasters will not be expended for an absurd effort to make nuclear conflict seem less horrific than it is.

I applaud Governor Dukakis for his reasonable response to an unreasonable Federal program. And I commend Massachusetts' Executive Order No. 242 to all my colleagues:

EXECUTIVE ORDER No. 242

(By His Excellency Michael S. Dukakis, Governor)

Whereas, every community across the Commonwealth is exposed to multiple hazards, all of which have the potential to disrupt the community, damage property and cause loss of life; and

Whereas, such emergencies come in many categories: technological and man-made hazards caused by the production, transportation, use and disposal of chemicals, radioactive materials and fuels; urban fires; nuclear power plant accidents; natural disasters such as hurricanes, tornadoes, floods, earthquakes, drought, blizzards, extreme cold, and sea surges; internal disturbances such as riots, demonstrations, prison breaks, strikes leading to violence or lack of human services, acts of terrorism; energy and material shortages from weather, strikes, price wars, labor problems and resource scarcity; and finally, the ultimate emergency, attack by a hostile power, whether nuclear, conventional, terrorist, chemical or an attack accomplished through biological warfare; and

Whereas, from time to time circumstances require that we reevaluate the direction and goals of agency programs, including close examination of the nature of evacuation plans being developed under Executive Order 31 and dealing solely with the threat of nuclear war; and

Whereas, the decreased warning time of nuclear attack makes evacuation impracticable; and

Whereas, evidence and analyses establish that there are no safe havens from a potential nuclear attack, since rural areas could be hit by design or by error, and even so-called "limited attacks" confined to military or economic targets could contaminate vast areas of the country with hazardous levels of radiation; and

Whereas, nuclear weapons do exist and until they are eliminated could affect the population of the Commonwealth in the form of limited or full scale enemy attack, terrorist activities, accidental launch or detonation; and

Whereas, the existing and potential strength of nuclear weapons is such that nuclear war can neither be won nor survived, it can only be prevented; and

Whereas, the only effective defense against the horrors of nuclear weapons lies in their elimination and in the prevention of nuclear war or attacks; and

Whereas, emergency planning should concentrate on broad ranges of hazards, with particular emphasis on those catastrophes for which planning can provide realistic opportunity for mitigating impact.

Now, Therefore, I, Michael S. Dukakis, Governor of the Commonwealth acting in the authority of Acts of 1950, Chapter 639, as amended, and in particular Sections 4, 6, 7, 8, 16, and 20 thereof, and all other authority vested in me by law, hereby rescind Executive Order No. 31 of 1956 and order as follows:

1. Henceforth, the Commonwealth will continue to develop the concept of Comprehensive Emergency Management to deal with major disasters or emergencies in the Commonwealth, with the qualification that the Commonwealth shall not engage in crisis relocation planning in preparation for nuclear war.

2. The purpose of Comprehensive Emergency Management is to develop a comprehensive emergency management program which seeks to mitigate the effects of a hazard, to prepare for measures to be taken which will preserve life and minimize damage, to respond during emergencies and reduce the impact of the emergency, and to establish a recovery system to channel financing and other resources in order to restore the governance and other essential functions of the community.

3. A Comprehensive Emergency Management Program will identify public and private resources and direct and encourage the application of such resources in the most productive manner, in order to coordinate disaster activities.

4. The Commonwealth shall seek to ensure the safety of its citizens by pursuit of policies reflecting a serious commitment to prevention of nuclear war. Such policies shall include education of citizens concerning the real nature of nuclear war and efforts to influence national policy towards negotiation of an end to the nuclear arms race.

5. No funds shall be expended by the Commonwealth for crisis relocation planning for nuclear war.●

TRIBUTE TO DANIEL B. WESTAWSKI

HON. FRANK HARRISON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, on August 5, 1984, an outstanding young man from Plains, PA, will be awarded the highest distinction in Boy Scouts.

Daniel B. Westawski will receive the "Eagle Scout Court of Honor" at a ceremony to be held in his honor. Daniel is a member of Troop 100, Plains, PA. This represents an outstanding achievement and one in which all of us can take justifiable pride.

We all know that the youth of today represent the leaders of tomorrow, and in this case, Daniel is so duly honored.

Mr. Speaker, I join with Daniel's family and friends in paying tribute to this outstanding young person.●

CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO HIS EXCELLENCY MAXIMOS V. HAKIM

HON. ROBERT A. ROE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, July 29, the diocese of Paterson, my congressional district and State of New Jersey will be the focal gathering place for visitors throughout our Nation to welcome his excellency, Maximos V. Hakim, patriarch of Antioch, Alexandria and Jerusalem, Syria, and Peroya of Arabia, Messopitomia, of Ethiopia, Egypt, Palestine and all the East. This highly revered patriarchal visit of his beatitude, Maximos V. Hakim, the esteemed leader of the Melkite church worldwide, is an occasion of great joy for St. Ann's Melkite Catholic Church of West Paterson, host of the patriarchal visit, and a great honor to have with them their "shepherd of shepherds" and "father of fathers."

Mr. Speaker, at the outset may I commend to you the dedication, diligence and hard work that is being extended by Father Nick Samra, pastor; Father Nick Antiba, associate pastor; deacon, Basil Samra; the clergy, officers and members of St. Ann's Byzantine Melkite Church and the patriarchal visit committee who have been working with the Melkite diocese of Newton under the quality leadership of Archbishop Joseph Tawil, in devising an outstanding program and seeking full citizens participation in this most important commemorative visit of his beatitude, Maximos V.

It is also important to point out that this highly unique honor of the patriarchal visit is further blessed with the celebration of the feast of St. Ann and the eighth anniversary of the dedication of the icon of Our Lady of America.

Mr. Speaker, with your permission I would like to insert at this point in our historic journal of Congress a brief history and background of the Melkite Catholic Christian Community. Let me preface it with the following description of the spiritual leader, nationally and internationally, of the Melkite Church as related to me by Father Nick Samra, pastor of St. Ann's Melkite Church:

Our patriarch bears the title: "Patriarch of Antioch and all the East, of Alexandria and Jerusalem." He is the direct successor of the apostles, mainly Peter, who was the first bishop of Antioch. As patriarch, he is the head of a particular church, sharing authority over the church with his bishops who form with him a holy synod. Presiding over this synod is the patriarch.

A profile on the early beginnings of the Melkite Catholic Christian Community is, as follows:

HISTORY AND BACKGROUND, MELKITE CATHOLIC CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY

The Melkite Catholic Christian Community is scattered throughout the United States, and has its origins in the countries of the Middle East. They use the Byzantine Rite for their worship and theology. Their Christian ancestory grows out of the ancient cities of Jerusalem, Antioch and Alexandria. In the Ecumenical Council of Chalcedon in 451 A.D., those who followed the king (Melak) who was faithful to the united Catholic faith at that time, were nicknamed Melkites.

In the 11th century, when the church was divided between East and West, the predominant Rite used in the East was the Byzantine Rite. In the 18th century, several Bishops retaining their Eastern theology and striving for unity of the separated churches, created a union with the See of Rome.

Melkites in the United States of America number about 23,000 with approximately 3500 Melkites scattered through New Jersey. There are 27 Melkite Churches throughout the United States.

Shortly after the turn of the century, large numbers of Syrian immigrants began to arrive in the United States, mostly from Aleppo, Damascus and Lebanon. They were attracted to this area, the then textile center of the world, to pursue employment in their ancient craft, weaving and textile merchandising.

With a constant devotion to their ancestry and tradition they were served in the early days of their migration by visiting Melkite priests who held services in Paterson and in Union City and this status continued until December of 1919.

At that time, a young priest, Father Cyril Anid, who had just arrived in New York from Lebanon, was invited to serve the Christmas liturgy in Paterson. He celebrated the first Divine Liturgy for them in the Chapel of Saint John's Church, which is now the present Cathedral of the Paterson Diocese. The success of this early mission was apparent, when, within a very short time the facilities at St. John's Chapel proved inadequate to accommodate the crowds that responded to this unique "ritual pattern" of the Eucharistic Liturgy of St. John Chrysostom. The Reverend Father Carlo Cianci, then the Pastor of Saint Michael's (Italian) Parish, apprised of the situation, graciously offered the use of his Church and the emerging Melkite Community began to meet here for worship in January of 1920.

The first census showed 350 families—200 belonged to the Melkite Rite, and the other 150 to the Armenian, Syrian, and Maronite Rites. The need for a more permanent house of worship arose and a committee was delegated to undertake the responsibility of establishing a formal parish in the City of Paterson. The Most Reverend John O'Connor, then Bishop of Newark, consented to appoint Father Anid as permanent pastor and the new Parish of Saint George's Melkite Rite was launched, and concurrently, immediate plans were undertaken for the construction of a church of their own.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to call this most noteworthy historic event to the attention of you and our colleagues and seek this national recognition of the Melkite Catholic Christian Community and the patriarchal visit of their world-renowned leader. As a Nation of people of all nationalities and religious beliefs, their commemorative program in celebration of the patriarchal visit of his beatitude, Maximos V, helps assure all of us that the faith, courage and perseverance inherent in the original settlers of our land is still infused in the hearts and minds of the families of today's society where man's religious beliefs and aspirations tend to seem obscured by the modern and so-called sophisticated world of time and space.

We do indeed extend our heartiest congratulations and best wishes to his beatitude, Maximos V, Hakim, and all of the clergy and members of the Melkite Rite and St. Ann's Byzantine Melkite Church on the outstanding contribution they are making, in service to God and to our people, toward the spiritual, cultural and educational endeavors of our community, State and Nation—so vitally important to the quality of life and way of life here in America.●

ONE HUNDRED CLUB OF HOUSTON

HON. JACK FIELDS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my distinguished colleagues the outstanding achievements in law enforcement made by the One Hundred Club of Houston.

The One Hundred Club of Houston came into being in 1953 when 100 citizens established an organization to assist law enforcement efforts. The club adopted the following goals:

To provide assistance to dependents of certified peace officers who have lost their lives in the line of duty while protecting our lives and our property; to provide life protecting equipment that cannot be secured through regular channels for lack of funds; and to provide law enforcement with education and life saving programs.

The One Hundred Club of Houston has contributed millions of dollars in Harris County, TX, in support of these goals.

Law enforcement is important in the United States today in guaranteeing the rights and privileges of all law-abiding citizens. The efforts of private citizens and neighborhood groups are crucial in our constant efforts to provide high quality and equitable law enforcement measures. The One Hundred Club of Houston epitomizes the type of community organizations needed in our Nation.

The One Hundred Club of Houston was the first organization dedicated to law enforcement that formed in our Nation. Their generous monetary contributions, growing membership, now totaling over 6,000 members, and successful policies have made the club the model for similar organizations forming across the country.

I ask my distinguished colleagues to join with me in honoring the members of the One Hundred Club of Houston for their dedicated and distinguished service to law enforcement and the community. I applaud their efforts and encourage them to continue to support their praiseworthy goals.

ROBUST ECONOMIC GROWTH ACCOMPANIED BY LOW RATE OF INFLATION

HON. C.W. BILL YOUNG

OF FLORIDA

Tuesday, July 24, 1984

● Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the most recent economic good news simply makes the point that President Reagan's economic program has done all that it promised by stimulating the economy while restraining inflation.

The Commerce Department reported yesterday that the gross national product, the measure of American economic growth, increased 7.5 percent during the second quarter of 1984, well above the 5.7-percent figure predicted by the administration midway through the quarter. While the economy continues to grow, the Department of Labor reported today that growth has not been accompanied by rising prices as the Consumer Price Index increased in June just two-tenths of 1 percent. Calculated on an annual basis, prices for the first 6 months of the year have risen just 4.1 precent.

The economic figures of this week, combined with those released earlier in the month, show our economy is in the midst of a boom that is unequaled in more than 30 years. Earlier this month, the Department of Labor reported that unemployment fell in June to 7.1 percent, the lowest figure since April 1980. Unemployment in Pinellas County, FA, which I represent, earlier this year fell to 3.9 percent, the lowest mark in 10 years.

All of these facts and figures mean that our economy is stronger than it was 4 years ago and a key component to our economic recovery has been President Reagan's tax reduction plan. In terms of dollars and cents, the strong economy, lower inflation, and tax cuts mean more spending dollars in the pockets of American workers. Disposable income, the amount of spendable after-tax income, has risen 8 percent since President Reagan took office in 1981. The tax cuts also mean more money is available for business expansion. During the second quarter of this year, business fixed investment rose 20.7 percent, and housing starts increased 9.4 percent.

An article in today's Wall Street Journal, simply asks, "Are you better off than you were 4 years ago?" The article's answer is "Yes." The Journal's reporter Ashok Chandrasekhar writes:

Economists from both sides of the political spectrum agree that for an overall picture of the country, real per-capita disposable income indicates that the living standard is far higher today than it was when Mr. Reagan began his term.

Clearly our Nation's economy is better off than it was at the turn of the decade when we were plagued with double-digit inflation and interest rates in excess of 20 percent. Our goal now is to sustain the current economic growth through a steady economic program that emphasize keeping inflation to a minimum. In this way we can assure American workers that our economy is healthy again which translates for them to mean an increasing number of jobs, more money in their pockets, and a dollar that goes further and buys more.

ARE WE BETTER OFF?—GAUGING LIVING STANDARDS IN 1984

(By Ashok Chandrasekhar)

"Are you better off than you were four years ago?"

Sound familiar? Well, it should. Four years ago come November, Ronald Reagan swept into the White House on a landside, to a great extent because he convinced voters that the answer to that question was, "No."

This time events have been different, and judging by what many economists deem the best rough yardstick of economic well-being, the answer to the question is a resounding, "Yes." Per-capita disposable income—measured in 1972 dollars to factor out inflation—rose nearly 8% since President Reagan took office in January 1981. At $4,933 in May 1984, the living-standard gauge shows the average amount of spendable after-tax income for each American. The measure includes wages and salaries, interest income, and so-called transfer payments, such as welfare and social security.

Economists regard the disposable-income measure as a reliable gauge of living standards because "it's an indicator of the command of people over resources," says Joel Popkin, president of Joel Popkin & Co., a Washington forecasting firm. John Gorman, a career economist at the Commerce Department's Bureau of Economic Analysis, calls it "the only yardstick."

REAGAN'S GOOD FORTUNE

As the graph indicates, the standard of living is much higher than four years ago based on this figure. Some forecasters estimate that the income measure will rise about another percentage point by the end of the year, meaning a total increase of 9 percent under Mr. Reagan.

Spending power per capita also rose during the Carter years, though by a smaller 6 percent. But most of the income growth took place in the first two years of Mr. Carter's term, then was partially eroded when a recession occurred in his final two years—just in time to be fresh in voters' minds on Election Day. Mr. Reagan had the good fortune to suffer a recession at the start of his term, and living standards have risen briskly since then. Thus, the timing isn't right for Walter F. Mondale, the Democratic presidential candidate, to emphasize this barometer, suggests Lester C. Thurow, an economist and an informal adviser to the Mondale campaign.

Another living-standard gauge some economists follow is dubbed, somewhat facetiously, the misery index. As its name suggests, it's an attempt to gauge the levels of economic misery in the country. Misery is said to increase as the index goes up; economic well-being supposedly rises when the index drops. The index is simply the sum of the inflation and unemployment rates. Just over 10%, the index has fallen nearly one-half since just before Mr. Reagan's term began. Conversely, during Mr. Carter's term, the misery index rose by about one-third.

Ironically, the misery index was devised by the late Arthur Okun, a noted Democratic economist who might not have been pleased to find that his invention shed a positive light on a Republican administration's performance. Mr. Okun half-seriously called 9% the "discomfort" level, above which the country becomes "quite unhappy." Although the index is still over that level, it's much closer than at the end of Mr. Carter's term—within one point as opposed to within 10.

The reliability of the misery index as a living-standard yardstick is implicit in its two components. Inflation expresses the dollar's declining purchasing power. So, a low inflation rate suggests a high living standard, because the consumer's dollar isn't losing value so rapidly. And, a low unemployment rate is a sign of high living standards because it indicates that more people are working, and because on the whole, people with jobs are less fearful of being laid off during periods of low unemployment.

The misery index has been criticized by some analysts for blurring the distinction between inflation and joblessness. While inflation can cause some pain for much of the population, unemployment is a devastation for the unemployed. In a recent congressional study, Harvey Brenner, a researcher at Johns Hopkins University, found a link between unemployment, increased mortality, suicide, crime, and mental illness.

Although unemployment is 7.1% and inching lower, it reached double-digit levels during the last recession in the Reagan administration's early years. "As the country experiences a recovery period, those seriously damaged by the recession, but not participating in the national recovery, experience maximum psychological deprivation stress," Mr. Brenner says.

A COMPLEX QUESTION

Economists caution that the living-standard question is far more complex than one figure can adequately illustrate. Some criticize the disposable-income guage because it doesn't take income distribution into account. While the measure shows the average income for 211 Americans, these economists say it may not reflect certain demographic groups whose incomes may have remained steady or fallen. They contend that the rich are getting richer and the poor poorer.

In an April 1984 report, the Congressional Budget Office presented figures which can be read to suggest that tax changes since 1981 have been substantially more advantageous for higher-income groups. Meanwhile, other economists have testified before Congress that the tax changes have benefited the lower-income groups, and increased the tax burden of the higher-income groups.

Of course, the economy is just one of numerous factors that will influence voters in November. But generally, economists from both sides of the political spectrum agree that for an overall picture of the country, real per-capita disposable income indicates that the living standard is far higher today than it was when Mr. Reagan began his term.●

PATENT, TRADEMARK, AND COPYRIGHT PROTECTION ACT OF 1984

HON. ALBERT GORE, JR.

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing today the Patent, Trademark, and Copyright Protection Act of 1984. This legislation is intended to strengthen the statutory protection provided to owners of American patents, trademarks, and copyrights and to curb the unauthorized use of these valuable intellectual properties by foreign trade competitors.

Violations of U.S. intellectual property laws by foreign manufacturers have increased dramatically in recent years. Not content with the edge they already enjoy because of low labor costs and other factors, foreign firms are robbing American businesses of tens of billions of dollars each year by illegally using patents, trademarks, and copyright material owned by U.S. companies. Each billion-dollar loss jeopardizes the jobs of an estimated 20,000 American workers, undermines the ability of U.S. firms to compete effectively at home and abroad, and exacerbates a U.S. trade deficit that has already devastated many sectors of our economy.

Intellectual property theft may involve the sale of foreign-made counterfeit goods that are passed off as the genuine brand-name merchandise of reputable American companies. It may involve importation of patent-infringing products or the theft of costly, advanced computer technology. In each case, the result is the same. Foreign competitors are illegally reaping the rewards of American ingenuity and are damaging our country's economic interests.

American businesses and workers are not the only victims, however. American consumers who buy goods illegally manufactured by foreign firms find themselves stuck with merchandise that is usually inferior in quality and may even pose serious health and safety risks.

As long as intellectual property theft remains a low-risk, high-profit venture, we will continue to be plagued by this problem. The legislation I am sponsoring focuses on halting the sale of infringing merchandise in this country and making would-be violators think twice before ignoring the laws of our country. Specifically, the bill:

First, allows a patent owner who wins a civil infringement suit to recover actual damages plus any profits of the defendant attributable to the infringement;

Second, provides for the exclusion from the United States of products made overseas using a process covered by a U.S. patent;

Third, eliminates the need for a U.S. patent owner to prove injury when petitioning the International Trade Commission to order the exclusion of patent-infringing imports;

Fourth, establishes criminal sanctions and stiffer civil penalties for persons or companies found guilty of knowingly trafficking in counterfeit goods and services;

Fifth, expands the definition of computer software for purposes of copyright coverage; and Sixth, establishes stiffer criminal and civil penalties for computer software piracy.

Ultimately, intellectual property theft is an international problem that will require joint action with other countries. If we ourselves do not act to strengthen our own laws, however, it is unlikely we will persuade other governments we are serious about promoting greater respect for these valuable proprietary rights. I urge my colleagues to examine my bill and to join with me in halting this damage to our Nation.●

GERALDINE FERRARO: A HISTORIC CHOICE

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN
OF NEW YORK

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, as you know, many of this century's most distinguished leaders have come from my home, the Empire State. From Martin Van Buren to Franklin Delano Roosevelt, New Yorkers have led this Nation through rough times to peace and prosperity. The most recent addition to this long and proud tradition is GERALDINE FERRARO, from my adjoining district in Queens. Her selection as Vice Presidential nominee of the Democratic Party is more than a significant advance for women: We all benefit by having someone in the White House with solid values and good common sense.

The people of Queens are proud of their neighbor and friend, GERRY FERRARO. I am pleased to insert her acceptance speech into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

[From the Congressional Quarterly, July 21, 1984]

NOMINATION BY ACCLAMATION ACCEPTED BY FERRARO

Ladies and gentleman of the convention: My name is Geraldine Ferraro. I stand before you to proclaim tonight: America is the land where dreams can come true for all of us.

As I stand before the American people and think of the honor this great convention has bestowed upon me, I recall the words of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., who made America stronger by making America more free.

He said: "Occasionally in life there are moments which cannot be completely explained by words. Their meaning can only be articulated by the inaudible language of the heart."

Tonight is such a moment for me.

My heart is filled with pride.

My fellow citizens, I proudly accept your nomination for vice president of the United States.

And I am proud to run with a man who will be one of the great presidents of this century, Walter F. Mondale.

THE FUTURE

Tonight, the daughter of a woman whose highest goal was a future for her children talks to our nation's oldest party about a future for us all.

Tonight, the daughter of working Americans tells all Americans that the future is within our reach—if we're willing to reach for it.

Tonight, the daughter of an immigrant from Italy has been chosen to run for [vice] president in the new land my father came to love.

Our faith that we can shape a better future is what the American dream is all about. The promise of our country is that the rules are fair. If you work hard and play by the rules, you can earn your share of America's blessings.

Those are the beliefs I learned from my parents. And those are the values I taught my students as a teacher in the public schools of New York City.

At night, I went to law school. I became an assistant district attorney, and I put my share of criminals behind bars. I believe: If you obey the law, you should be protected. But if you break the law, you should pay for your crime.

When I first ran for Congress, all the political experts said a Democrat could not win in my home district of Queens. But I put my faith in the people and the values that we shared. And together, we proved the political experts wrong.

In this campaign, Fritz Mondale and I have put our faith in the people. And we are going to prove the experts wrong again.

We are going to win, because Americans across this country believe in the same basic dream.

ELMORE, MN, AND QUEENS

Last week, I visited Elmore, Minn., the small town where Fritz Mondale was raised. And soon Fritz and Joan will visit our family in Queens.

Nine hundred people live in Elmore. In Queens, there are 2,000 people on one block. You would think we would be different, but we're not.

Children walk to school in Elmore past grain elevators; in Queens, they pass by subway stops. But, no matter where they live, their future depends on education—and their parents are willing to do their part to make those schools as good as they can be.

In Elmore, there are family farms; in Queens, small businesses. But the men and women who run them all take pride in supporting their families through hard work and initiatives.

On the Fourth of July in Elmore, they hang flags out on Main Street; in Queens, they fly them over Grand Avenue. But all of us love our country, and stand ready to defend the freedom that it represents.

PLAYING BY THE RULES

Americans want to live by the same set of rules. But under this administration, the rules are rigged against too many of our people.

It isn't right that every year, the share of taxes paid by individual citizens is going up, while the share paid by large corporations is getting smaller and smaller. The rules say: Everyone in our society should contribute their fair share.

It isn't right that this year Ronald Reagan will hand the American people a bill for interest on the national debt larger than the entire cost of the federal government under John F. Kennedy.

Our parents left us a growing economy. The rules say: We must not leave our kids a mountain of debt.

It isn't right that a woman should get paid 59 cents on the dollar for the same work as a man. If you play by the rules, you deserve a fair day's pay for a fair day's work.

It isn't right that—that if trends continue—by the year 2000 nearly all of the poor people in America will be women and children. The rules of a decent society say, when you distribute sacrifice in times of austerity, you don't put women and children first.

It isn't right that young people today fear they won't get the Social Security they paid for, and that older Americans fear that they will lose what they have already earned. Social Security is a contract between the last generation and the next, and the rules say: You don't break contracts. We're going to keep faith with older Americans.

We hammered out a fair compromise in the Congress to save Social Security. Every group sacrificed to keep the system sound. It is time Ronald Reagan stopped scaring our senior citizens.

It isn't right that young couples question whether to bring children into a world of 50,000 nuclear warheads.

That isn't the vision for which Americans have struggled for more than two centuries. And our future doesn't have to be that way.

CHANGES IN THE AIR

Change is in the air, just as surely as when John Kennedy beckoned America to a new frontier; when Sally Ride rocketed into space and when Rev. Jesse Jackson ran for the office of president of the United States.

By choosing a woman to run for our nation's second highest office, you sent a powerful signal to all Americans. There are no doors we cannot unlock. We will place no limits on achievement.

If we can do this, we can do anything.

Tonight, we reclaim our dream. We're going to make the rules of American life work fairly for all Americans again.

To an Administration that would have us debate all over again whether the Voting Rights Act should be renewed and whether segregated schools should be tax exempt, we say, Mr. President: Those debates are over.

On the issue of civil, voting rights and affirmative action for minorities, we must not go backwards. We must—and we will—move forward to open the doors of opportunity.

To those who understand that our country cannot prosper unless we draw on the talents of all Americans, we say: We will pass the Equal Rights Amendment. The issue is not what America can do for women, but what women can do for America.

To the Americans who will lead our country into the 21st century, we say: We will not have a Supreme Court that turns the clock back to the 19th century.

To those concerned about this strength of American family values, as I am I say: We are going to restore those values—love, caring, partnership—by including, and not excluding, those whose beliefs differ from our own. Because our own faith is strong, we will fight to preserve the freedom of faith for others.

To those working Americans who fear that banks, utilities, and large special interests have a lock on the White House, we say: Join us; let's elect a people's president; and let's have government by and for the American people again.

To an Administration that would savage student loans and education at the dawn of a new technological age, we say: You fit the classic definition of a cynic; you know the price of everything, but the value of nothing.

To our students and their parents, we say: We will insist on the highest standards of excellence because the jobs of the future require skilled minds.

To young Americans who may be called to our country's service, we say: We know your generation of Americans will proudly answer our country's call, as each generation before us.

This past year, we remembered the bravery and sacrifice of Americans at Normandy. And we finally paid tribute—as we should have done years ago—to that unknown soldier who represents all the brave young Americans who died in Vietnam.

Let no one doubt, we will defend America's security and the cause of freedom around the world. But we want a president who tells us what America is fighting for, not just what we are fighting against. We want a president who will defend human rights—not just where it is convenient—but wherever freedom is at risk—from Chile to Afghanistan, from Poland to South Africa.

To those who have watched this administration's confusion in the Middle East, as it has tilted first toward one and then another of Israel's long-time enemies and wondered, "Will America stand by her friends and sister democracy?" We say: America knows who her friends are in the Middle East and around the world.

America will stand with Israel always.

Finally, we want a President who will keep America strong, but use that strength to keep America and the world at peace. A nuclear freeze is not a slogan: It is a tool for survival in the nuclear age. If we leave our children nothing else, let us leave them this Earth as we found it—whole and green and full of life.

I know in my heart that Walter Mondale will be that president.

THE GIFT OF LIFE

A wise man once said, "Every one of us is given the gift of life, and what a strange gift it is. If it is preserved jealously and selfishly, it impoverishes and saddens. But if it is spent for others, it enriches and beautifies."

My fellow Americans: We can debate policies and programs. But in the end what separates the two parties in this election campaign is whether we use the gift of life—for others or only ourselves.

Tonight, my husband, John, and our three children are in this hall with me. To my daughters, Donna and Laura, and my son, John Jr., I say: My mother did not break faith with me . . . and I will not break faith with you. To all the children of America, I say: The generation before ours kept faith with us, and like them, we will pass on to you a stronger, more just America.

Thank you●

DORNEY PARK'S 100TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. DON RITTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, the year of 1984 marks the 100th anniversary of the founding of one of America's great amusement parks: Dorney Park, in Allentown, PA. It is an establishment that was founded on the principles of good, clean, wholesome family fun, and it is a company that has adhered to those principles for a full century.

Solomon Dorney founded Dorney Park on a 279-acre tract of land along the Cedar Creek in Allentown, land which had been in the family since 1774. In 1884, Solomon Dorney added a number of mechanical amusement rides to his property, giving the name Dorney Park to the land which he had successfully operated for many years as a trout fishery.

In 1903, Jacob Plarr, an immigrant from Alsace-Lorraine, brought to Dorney Park an incredible device that fascinated adults and thrilled children. It was Dorney Park's first merry-go-round, and large numbers flocked to ride it. They came from New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, and all over Pennsylvania. The merry-go-round literally revolutionized the park.

Jacob Plarr's son, Robert L. Plarr, grew into the business, and when Dorney Park was incorporated on 1923, he became the company's first president. He soon acquired the park outright, and his descendants have managed it ever since: his son, Stephen, his son-in-law, Robert F. Ott, and now his grandsons, Robert S. Ott and Robert W. Plarr.

Dorney Park takes a unique reputation into its 100th anniversary season: it is known as an amusement park with the most up-to-date facilities and attractions, but also as a park with a special charm and orientation toward the family. It is also a park with a special sense of community responsibility, involved with the March of Dimes, cystic fibrosis research, the Multiple Sclerosis Society, the Arthritis Foundation, and many other organizations. Dorney Park has been a leader in the development of Pennsylvania ride-safety regulations, and regards the safety of its guests and employees as its primary responsibility.

Dorney Park has celebrated its 100th anniversary by spending over $4 million on improvements, and expects that it will continue to offer the enticing combination of 20th century thrills with turn-of-the-century pace and family values. Although there are many larger parks in this country, Dorney Park has shown the character and ability to proudly bear the title of "One of America's Great Amusement Parks."●

HON. BALTASAR CORRADA

OF PUERTO RICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. CORRADA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today with my colleagues from the Hispanic Caucus to pay tribute to the memory of a good friend and distinguished leader, Raquel Marquez Frankel, who died on Sunday, March 11, 1984.

As present vice chairman and a founding member of the Congressional Hispanic Caucus, I worked closely with her when she was the executive director of the Hispanic Caucus.

While the Hispanic Caucus has steadily grown in membership and capability as a national force, this advancement would not have been possible without the solid foundation and reputation for credibility and professional expertise that Raquel gave the caucus. She was always committed to improving the quality of life for Hispanic Americans. She worked with every segment of the country in building a coalition that has been a national force in American politics.

In addition, to the Hispanic Caucus, she was one of the driving forces behind such Hispanic organizations as the National Association of Latino Elected & Appointed Officials [NALEO] and Mujeres en Acción and achieved national recognition for her steadfast devotion to the cause of social advancement of Hispanic Americans in every part of the country.

But she will overwhelmingly be remembered and admired for the simple fact that she never forget the goal of her work, and her commitment shone through every simple organizational and political task she was involved in.

Raquel taught all of us who knew her and worked with her a lot. She reminded us that being a politician in a time of some public cynicism about the political process was a high calling, one which called for continued enthusiasm, and the glow from her own dedication was infectious. She enriched our lives, and we have all grown a little more from knowing her and from working with her.

It was symbolic of her career when she passed away suddenly that she was working to raise money for the District of Columbia Spanish Catholic Center, an organization aimed at providing newly arrived immigrant Hispanics with the most basic needs of shelter, food and clothing, as well as counseling to help them in their newly adopted country, and to give them a start in sharing in our American dream.

Raquel will long be remembered for her great work, her selfless dedication to Hispanic causes, and for the historical role in helping us arrive at a position of increasing national prominence.

Raquel will be missed by all of us.●

ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF LT. GEN. WALTER ULMER, JR.

HON. JOHN R. McKERNAN, JR.

OF MAINE

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. McKERNAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend to the House of Representatives Lt. Gen. Walter Ulmer, Jr., whose photograph appeared on the cover of the July 9 edition of Newsweek magazine, in connection with an article entitled, "The Top Brass: Can They Fight A Modern War?" I am proud to claim Lieutenant General Ulmer as a constituent of mine; his hometown, Winthrop, ME, is in my district.

The general's background and credentials are impressive. As an advisor to South Vietnamese forces, he fought with distinction and courage during the seige of An Loc. Later, he was commandant of cadets at West Point when a major cheating scandal broke out. Despite considerable pressure to readmit the 151 students who were implicated in the scandal, Lieutenant General Ulmer refused to bend principle on the matter, and the students were permanently suspended.

As commander of the 3d Armored Division in Germany, and in his present position as commander of the Army's III Corps, Lieutenant General Ulmer has established a reputation as a "No Nonsense General." In his efforts to provide his men with a sense of purpose and direction, he has cut through the mountains of red tape and regulations that are often the bane of the serviceman's existence. As he himself has put it, "The essence of a general's job is to assist in developing a clear sense of purpose * * * to keep the junk from getting in the way of important things."

America is well served by Lt. Gen. Walter Ulmer, Jr., and the many other fine men and women in this Nation's Armed Forces. I am proud to have this opportunity to congratulate the general before this forum, and I would like to extend to him our best wishes for the future.●

COMMEMORATING THE 10TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE LEGAL SERVICES CORPORATION

HON. BRUCE A. MORRISON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 25, 1984

● Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, today, July 25, 1984, is the 10th anniversary of the enactment of the Legal Services Corporation Act, marking the first decade of congressional commitment to Federal funding for legal services to the poor.

The past 4 years have been very difficult ones for local legal services programs. We have seen an LSC Administration and an unconfirmed LSC Board of Directors attempt to wrest control of local programs away from their local boards and undo 10 years of progress.

But I want to assure the more than 30 million poor people who are eligible for legal assistance under the act that this Congress has made it clear that it will not stand by while this successful program is destroyed.

People who care about equal access to justice owe a debt of gratitude to the leaders of the effort to preserve the principles of the Legal Services Corporation: the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. RODINO], the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Courts, Civil Liberties, and the Administration of Justice [Mr. KASTENMEIER], the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Commerce, Justice, State, and Judiciary of the Appropriations Committee [Mr. SMITH], and the distinguished ranking minority member of the Judiciary [Mr. FISH].

I also want to pause today to salute the men and women who are working and have worked in the more than 1,600 Legal Services offices all over the country. To them I say: through your dedication, your idealism, and your professionalism, you have brought justice closer to millions of poor people. Often you are the only person who stands between poor people and disaster for themselves and their families. You enforce the law when clients' rights are violated; you represent their interests in obtaining changes in the law where its effect is unjust; you inform clients of their legal rights and responsibilities so that they can help themselves.

For your clients, you can make the difference between having the basic necessities of life and going without them, between hope and despair. I pledge to you that I will do everything in my power as a Member of Congress to ensure that the Legal Services Corporation will remain a strong and independent agency, sufficiently funded, and that clients of Legal Services programs will be afforded full representation for all their legal problems in the same way that others are represented by their private attorneys.

We cannot commemorate the 10th anniversary of the Legal Services Corporation Act without acknowledging the immense contribution to and support for the program by practitioners in the private sector, as well as the organized bar, including the American Bar Association [ABA], and other State and local bar associations—all partners in the Legal Services movement. Pro bono work is on the rise and the relationship between private attorneys and Legal Services staff programs has never been better. As we commemorate the first decade of this successful joint venture, let us look forward to a continuation of that relationship for the benefit of people who are unable to afford attorneys.●

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

Meetings scheduled for Thursday, July 26, 1984, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

SENATE—Thursday, July 26, 1984

(Legislative day of Monday, July 23, 1984)

The Senate met at 11 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Our prayer will be offered by Dr. Don Benton, pastor of Lovers Lane United Methodist Church, Dallas, TX. He is sponsored by Senator LLOYD BENTSEN.

PRAYER

The Reverend Doctor Don Benton, pastor, Lovers Lane United Methodist Church, Dallas, TX, offered the following prayer:

God of each of us and to all of us, God of our Nation and of all peoples in all the world, we bow humbly to claim and to acknowledge Your presence with us and to contemplate Your mystery and majesty.

You are one. We are many. You have chosen, therefore, to be in our lives and to work through us to fulfill Your purposes in the world. We are not our own. We are Yours. Grant us humility to claim that and to see ourselves in proper perspective. Grant us grace and power to be faithful.

Especially for these upon whom great responsibility rests and to whom many doors of opportunity are open, we pray for vision to see Your will for each of their lives, for those of us who trust them, and for the world. Give them courage for that which is right in Your sight and in the inner confirmation of peace that they have sought it rather than what is expedient, popular, or temporary.

In the unfinished task of freedom, may they pass laws and create opportunities which may increasingly free us and all peoples of the world to know the limitless blessings of liberty and justice for all.

Hear us, then, as we claim Your presence; thank You for all Your blessings in the past and as we report for duty for the future which unfolds to us, for Your glory and the fulfillment of each of our lives. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Chair. Mr. President, I yield to the acting minority leader.

Mr. BENTSEN. I thank the distinguished majority leader.

REV. DON BENTON

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I am delighted to have Dr. Benton with us this morning to deliver the prayer. After listening to the message and the content of it, I know that feeling is shared by all of us. Dr. Benton is not only my good friend; he happens to be married to a very beloved cousin of mine. He is a graduate, as I am sure the majority leader would be interested, of the Presbyterian seminary, he was reared in a Baptist family, and he received his doctorate from Southern Methodist University. So he is somewhat ecumenical.

He is not a flamboyant preacher, but he is a man of deep and sincere convictions. He is articulate, and he is persuasive. I think his messages are inevitably thought provoking; they are very sincere and to the point.

But he is much more than a sermonizer. He does not just stand on the pulpit on Sunday and talk good works. This man performs them. He does not just talk about helping the poor, the meek, and the heavy hearted. He puts out a helping hand.

For several years he has been pastor of the United Methodist Church in Dallas. It is one of the largest Methodist congregations in our Nation—in fact, the third largest in the entire world. Under Don's leadership for these many years, the church has been actively involved not only in spreading the word of God but also in reaching out to the community to help those in need, to help those who are less fortunate.

Don is a man of great compassion, with a concern for children. Don Benton helped start one of the very early homes for runaway children. He has been very active in it and has been very helpful in doing what can be done for these troubled young people, in many cases helping reunite them with their families. He is an officer of the International Board of the Methodist Church for Refugee Relief. He has filled a major role in assuring that the money raised for this program gives the most good to the greatest number of those seeking to escape oppression. I am very proud of Don, of his wife and his children. Rose Marie Benton is a very invaluable member of this team. She has filled a difficult role of preacher's wife with charm and patience and enthusiasm.

Mr. President, I am very honored that Dr. Benton has shared this time with us, and I am most appreciative of the majority leader yielding me time.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Texas, who is one of our most valued Members on either side of the aisle, and we express our gratitude to him for giving us the opportunity to pray with Dr. Benton today.

Dr. Benton perhaps does not know, but Senator BENTSEN does, that I find it almost irresistible after the prayers of our good Chaplain and frequently of our visiting chaplains, to make comments always flattering and complimentary because they are always good, and this is no exception. It was an excellent prayer, and I thank him for it. I cannot resist the temptation of pointing out that the Methodist Church which he pastors in Dallas must be one of the most straightforward, practical groups I ever saw to put a church right there on Lovers Lane. I cannot also resist saying I am a Presbyterian, my mother was a Baptist, and my father was a Methodist, so I understand fully the business of cross-affiliations. I have always felt in my family that it was in the nature of taking no chances.

I thank the distinguished clergyman who is with us this morning. I congratulate him on his prayer, and I express the gratitude, I am sure, of the entire Senate to Senator BENTSEN for making it possible for us to participate with him in this service this morning.

SENATE SCHEDULE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, may I say, in the nature of the agenda of business today, that after the special orders are executed—there are two of them—there will be a period for the transaction of routine morning business until noon. After that, Mr. President, there is no unfinished business and we have not laid down any other measure, but it is the intention of the leadership on this side to ask the Senate to go into executive session for the purpose of considering the nomination of Judge Wilkinson to be a judge of the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Mr. President, I have no illusions about finishing that matter today, but I do anticipate that a cloture petition will be filed. I have advised the minority leader of that situation.

After that, Mr. President, it is possible that the leadership on this side will ask the Senate to resume legislative session and we may consider a number of measures, but three come to mind at the moment: The child abuse bill, the hydroelectric powerplants bill, and perhaps the antitrust R&D bill. These matters are not cleared, and I make the announcement now so that all Members will be aware of the possibility and that the leadership on this side is attempting to prepare these matters for consideration.

Mr. President, there is a small possibility that we might get another appropriation bill today or tomorrow. I am told that the Milcon bill and the D.C. bill may come out of committee without a report. I do not know that yet. However, as Members know, the leadership on this side is anxious to do as many appropriation bills as soon as possible. So now I do not add that to the list of things I would like to see us do today, but I urge Senators to consider that if we can qualify another appropriation bill this week, the leadership on this side will attempt to do so.

We will be in session tomorrow. I do not expect the Senate to be in session on Saturday.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time for the minority leader under the standing order may be reserved for his use at any time during the course of this calendar day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. MATTINGLY]. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the acting minority leader. Does he have any further remarks to make at this time?

Mr. BENTSEN. I have no further remarks.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I do not see the special order recipients on the floor. I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order for me to suggest the absence of a quorum, without the time being charged against their special orders.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary of the Senate proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Wisconsin is recognized for 15 minutes.

YES, "STAR WARS" WILL CARRY NUCLEAR WAR INTO SPACE

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, this is the third in my series of speeches in response to Gen. Daniel Graham's letter to me supporting the administration's strategic defense initiative or "Star Wars." General Graham has phrased his support of "Star Wars" in the form of rebuttals of the arguments be considers the most significant against this administration program. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that General Graham's third rebuttal in support of "Star Wars" be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the rebuttal was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

3. IT MILITARIZES SPACE: CREATES A SPACE ARMS RACE

Answer. Space is already "militarized." 85% of all Soviet satellites are military and 50% of ours are also. If there ever were a nuclear war, space would be full of the most awesome of military machines going in both directions. Further, the Soviets have already developed two generations of space weapons, antisatellite systems.

As far as "arms race" in space is concerned, High Frontier would indeed change the nature of the strategic competition between the superpowers. Today the competition is in the field of more and better offensive nuclear weapons. High Frontier would shift that competition to non-nuclear defensive systems in space, designed to kill weapons, not people. Who can say that would not be an improvement?

Mr. PROXMIRE. General Graham argues that extending the nuclear arms race into space would be "nothing new"—that "space is already militarized." Is General Graham right? Is space already militarized? If so, have there been documented charges that either of the superpowers have violated the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty? One purpose of that treaty is to prevent the militarization of space. This Senator is not aware that the Soviet Union has made any charges of violation against the United States that have been documented or have persuaded neutral observers that we have failed to observe that treaty. It is true that we have challenged the Soviet Union to defend a new Siberian radar that is not located on the periphery of the U.S.S.R. as required by the ABM Treaty. The Soviets claim that their radar does not meet the treaty definition as any part of an ABM system because its purpose is to detect hostile aircraft penetration, not missile activity.

Of course, we can and should pursue this potential violation thoroughly. But General Graham does not even raise this question. Nor does the general in his argument recognize the treaty agreed to by both superpowers prohibiting placing in orbit or in outer space any nuclear weapons or weapons of mass destruction. We have not challenged any Soviet activity as a violation of this treaty—if there has been such a violation, General Graham does not cite it. If he cannot show any violation of a treaty that has been in force for years prohibiting the deployment of nuclear weapons in outer space, what happens to his argument that space is already militarized?

General Graham supports his sweeping generalization that "space is already militarized" by a single assertion, again back up with no documentation whatsoever. He contends that 85 percent of all Soviet satellites and 50 percent of all American satellites are military. What he fails to say is that these satellites are the basis for our arms control verification. These are arms control satellites. They carry no nuclear warheads. They carry no conventional munitions or military projectiles of any sort. They have a single purpose: To determine the military activities, especially the strategic that is nuclear military activities of the adversary. In this sense, they are, indeed, military satellites, absolutely essential to enable this country and the Soviet Union to have any reliance on arms control. These satellites are designed to limit military weapons. And for many years to come they will constitute the absolutely essential sentinels of verifiable arms control agreements. To call them a militarization of space turns their purpose on its head.

General Graham offers one other argument to rebut the contention that Star Wars would create a space race. He contends it would shift the competition from offensive nuclear weapons designed to kill people to defensive weapons designed to kill offensive nuclear weapons and save lives.

What is wrong that? That certainly sounds good. It has only two defects. It almost certainly will not work. As I have said previously, if I were convinced that this would work, would save lives, would give us an effective defense against offensive missiles, I would be willing to spring for $1 trillion to pay for it. But the odds that it will work are overwhelmingly against it.

The second defect goes to the heart of the problem. General Graham contends that Star Wars will shift the arms race from offensive to defensive missiles. That is a nice dream, but only a dream. Under General Graham's plans the defensive arms race would move ahead. But why would the offensive arms race stop? Indeed, why wouldn't the offensive arms race move ahead even faster? After all, offensive missiles would face a brand new challenge. That challenge is, how do they match and overcome the new defensive technology? Neither the United States nor the Soviet military establishment could resist the challenge. On the basis of all past experience, as the defense becomes more efficient and more complex, the offense becomes not only more efficient and more complex but also far more expensive and far more effective. The offensive technology will not up and disappear. It will rush ahead like gang busters, costing hundreds of billions along the way. But will "Star Wars" advance our security? Will it make nuclear war less likely? No. It will raise the possibility that deterrence may not work. It will, therefore, tempt our adversary to take the supreme chance. We will not hammer down or defeat our adversary this way. We will certainly hammer down and defeat our Treasury and our taxpayers.

THE ULTIMATE HOLOCAUST

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, for over a year I have been rising on the floor of the Senate to talk about the overwhelming danger of the nuclear arms race and about the steps we must take to stop it. Hundreds of billions of dollars have been devoted to building our nuclear arsenal and we plan to spend hundreds of billions more in the next few years. At the same time the Soviet Union speeds along with the same nuclear buildup.

Many proposals have been introduced to restrain or even reverse this insane march toward nuclear armageddon. I have repeatedly called for a comprehensive, mutual, verifiable United States-Soviet freeze on the testing, production, and deployment of nuclear weapons. But, for a variety of reasons, we seem to always run into a dead end when it comes to actually taking action on the most important challenge facing man today—the survival of the human species on this planet.

There is no more dangerous threat to the survival of our Nation and of civilization itself than the possibility of nuclear war. A nuclear war would be the ultimate holocaust involving all mankind.

But for the last 17 years, every day on the Senate floor, I have also been urging my colleagues to take action against another threat to humankind. It is called genocide, the systematic extermination in whole or in part a national, racial, ethic, or religious group.

There are no quick and easy answers to diminishing the threat of nuclear war or to halting the practice of genocide throughout the world. But that should not stop us from doing all we can to prevent such holocausts.

One obvious step that the Senate has refused to take for over 35 years concerning the crime of genocide is the ratification of the Genocide Convention.

Thank heaven that a thermonuclear war has not occurred in this world. But unfortunately the same cannot be said of the atrocities associated with genocide. When it comes to the practice of genocide, the 20th century has undoubtedly been the most bloody and ruthless. And the potential for it still exists today.

This is why it is so important for the United States to join the 97 other nations of the world that have already ratified the Genocide Convention. The treaty makes the crime of genocide not just a violation of the international norms of decency but also a violation of international law.

The threat of nuclear war and the crime of genocide must be resolved. We cannot afford to further our delay in finding the solutions to these two crucial issues. The time to act is now. The Senate must begin by ratifying the Genocide Convention.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR LEAHY

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Vermont is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

Mr. LEAHY. I thank the Chair.

S. 2869—TO PROVIDE A TAX CREDIT FOR TELEVISION SUBTITLE EQUIPMENT FOR USE BY HEARING-IMPAIRED INDIVIDUALS

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation to aid those with hearing impairments to acquire television captioning decoder equipment by providing a tax credit toward the expense of purchasing the equipment. I am introducing this important legislation concurrent with a House companion bill introduced by Congressman BONIOR and others.

This is an age in which television has become the most popular information medium in the world. Yet for many of the more than 15 million Americans who are either deaf or hearing impaired, that world is still mute. For them, television has sight, but no voice.

New technology can open up this world through "closed captioning," a method of translating the spoken dialogue into a running script appearing on the television screen. But the words can be seen only on sets equipped with captioning decoders. The cost of these devices is such that many hearing impaired individuals, and their families cannot afford them.

A captioning decoder costs about $250. Television sets equipped with built-in decoders run as high as $500. For the hearing impaired, whose incomes are generally 15 to 20 percent below the incomes of other Americans, these costs are prohibitive. The price of decoder equipment is an obstacle which continues to isolate these Americans from the mainstream of society.

The legislation I introduce today, amends the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, providing a 50-percent tax credit for the purchase of the decoders, with a maximum tax credit of $250. All three commercial networks, ABC, NBC, and CBS; the Public Broadcasting System; the National Association of the Deaf; the National Captioning Institute; and Gallaudet College acknowledge that this legislation would be of great service to those with hearing impairments and have pledged their support.

Today, only 85,000 households have captioning decoders. Only these few have access to the nearly 60 hours of captioned television provided each week by the National Captioning Institute. To reemphasize, Mr. President, that means if one watches a television program without the decoder, it looks and sounds like any other television program. But if the decoder switch is turned on a line appears showing the dialog as it is being spoken. So quite often, any one of us watching television at home in the evening has probably seen these closed-captioned programs without realizing it. If we had a decoder attached to the television, we would see subtitles appearing on the bottom of the screen. I do not believe there is anyone in this body who needs this special equipment.

But there are still an estimated 3.7 million households with hearing impaired members, which do need these decoders. With decoders, these people can enjoy a privilege which the rest of us often take for granted. I find it unacceptable that the technology is available but not accessible to families with hearing impaired members.

Many of these people are elderly, and the shut-in whose only access to the outside world is often through television. With decoders, these people can enjoy the privilege which the rest of us often take for granted. It is unfortunate that this technology is available but not accessible to families with hearing impaired members.

In my home State of Vermont, the third smallest State in the Union, there are 31,000 hearing impaired citizens who do not have full access to this Nation's airwaves. To them, television has only provided further isolation and estrangement from the surrounding community.

I hope you will join me in supporting this legislation. Let's break the barriers which stand in the way of a fuller life for hearing impaired individuals across the country. The time has come to make the Nation's airwaves available and accessible to the entire population. Would it not really be good if we did just that?

We first started talking about this legislation with CBS, ABC, and NBC officials 4, 5, or 6 years ago. I recall each one of the major networks was unwilling to even try it at that time. Now all three networks are involved. I find more and more producers telling me, both in New York and in Hollywood, that they are perfectly willing to involve themselves in the really minor cost of captioning a program. But all of them have expressed the wish that there were more people receiving the program once it has been captioned. This can go a long way toward helping them.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this legislation be introduced, appropriately referred, and printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered, and without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2869

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. CREDIT FOR TELEVISION SUBTITLE EQUIPMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to credits allowable) is amended by inserting before section 45 the following new section:

"SEC. 44I. TELEVISION SUBTITLE EQUIPMENT FOR USE BY HEARING-IMPAIRED INDIVIDUALS.

"(a) CREDIT ALLOWED.—In the case of an individual, there shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year an amount equal to 50 percent of the television subtitle equipment expenses paid or incurred by the taxpayer during the taxable year.

"(b) MAXIMUM DOLLAR AMOUNT LIMITATION.—The amount of the credit allowed under subsection (a) for any taxable year shall not exceed $250 ($125 in the case of a married individual filing a separate return).

"(c) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) TELEVISION SUBTITLE EQUIPMENT EXPENSES.—The term 'television subtitle equipment expenses' means any amount paid or incurred by the taxpayer for the purchase and installation of any television subtitle equipment for use by any hearing-impaired individual who is an individual described in any paragraph of section 152(a) with respect to the taxpayer.

"(2) TELEVISION SUBTITLE EQUIPMENT.—The term 'television subtitle equipment' means equipment—

"(A) which is used in connection with a television,

"(B) which permits subtitles (which, but for such equipment, would not appear on the television screen) to appear on the television screen, and

"(C) the original use of which commences with the hearing-impaired individual referred to in paragraph (1).

"(3) HEARING-IMPAIRED INDIVIDUAL.—The term 'hearing-impaired individual' means an individual whose audible, aural perception is not functional at 70 decibels or lower in the better ear without a hearing aid."

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subpart A or part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 44H the following new item:

"Sec. 44I. Television subtitle equipment for use by hearing-impaired individuals."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to expenses paid or incurred after December 31, 1983, in taxable years beginning after such date.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a time for the transaction of routine morning business, not to extend beyond the hour of 12 noon, with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I believe the distinguished majority leader reserved my time under the standing order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Chair.

WHICH SOVIET POLICY?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, today's news reports carry the story of a White House decision to lift the ban on Soviet fishing in American waters. Apparently, this is part of an election year push to improve relations with the Soviets.

In fact, this decision is in keeping with existing administration policy toward the Soviets—or, at least, one half of that policy. I say this because the past 3 years have convinced me that there are two administration programs with respect to the Kremlin. The first of these is a highly visible and vocal policy of dangerous rhetoric and provocation. This is the evil empire policy that encourages a war of words with the Soviets—trading bellicosity for bellicosity.

But there is another track to the policy. This one is much less conspicuous, and often goes unnoticed. It might be referred to as the policy of business as usual. It manifested itself in the decision to rescind the Soviet grain embargo imposed by President Carter following the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

That was the policy that hurt the Soviets, and then President Brezhnev stated before the world that the agricultural policies of the Soviet Union were not working and that the Soviet Union had very real problems in agriculture. The administration, nevertheless, proceeded to lift the grain embargo and not only did not secure any quid pro quo for lifting it but also apparently did not even ask for a quid pro quo. To the contrary, the administration proceeded to conclude a major grain deal with the Soviet which ties the United States into higher sales levels.

In March of this year, business as usual meant approving the sale of $40 million in oil and gas equipment to the Soviets.

As Members will recall, the administration was quite visible in beating our European friends over their heads in the effort to get them to restrain themselves in connection with the sale of oil and gas equipment to the Soviets.

Oil and gas exports account for more than half of all Soviet foreign exchange earnings, so this meant that we were financing the most important sector of the Soviet economy. Nonetheless, business as usual required that the sale be made.

Now, we learn that the administration is prepared to allow the Soviets to resume fishing in American waters. This may seem a strange decision, given the Soviets' peculiar and deadly fixation for the integrity of borders. Coming less than a year after the brutal and senseless destruction of Korean Air Line flight 007, some of my colleagues might wonder why we are opening our territory to Soviet commercial exploitation.

Perhaps some have forgotten that the Soviets refused to let our ships and the ships of other nations into the waters where it was believed the Korean airliner went down. The Soviets would not let us into that area to look for bodies and the little black box from the ill-fated plane. But now we are going to open our waters to Soviet fishing fleets.

What kind of message does this send? Does this lend certainty and predictability to our policy with the Soviets?

I am sure there are those in the Kremlin who find themselves confused by these very mixed signals. But, after nearly four years, I am sure that many have reached the same conclusion I have reached about our policy. They understand that this administration draws a sharp line between what it says and what it does. And once they understand this approach, the Soviets can afford to take some satisfaction in what it means for them.

The business as usual policy permits a Soviet economy dependent upon foreign sources for its food supply to rely upon regular grain shipments and a commitment to allow fishing in U.S. waters. Access to vital Western technology will allow the expansion of Soviet oil and gas production, with a resulting increase in foreign exchange earnings to finance Soviet adventurism and a military buildup.

At the same time, the public diplomacy that decries the evil empire will permit the Soviets to make a credible claim that this American administration is insincere about limiting nuclear arms. This gives the Soviets the cover they need to back out of arms talks and accomplish a major goal of their foreign policy; avoiding a mutual, verifiable arms control agreement that restrains Soviet military expansion and development.

Thus, the two policies seem to be giving us the worst of both worlds. They provide the Soviets with dependable and regularized economic relations with the United States, while the Soviets are able to deny us the mutual, verifiable arms limitation agreement that is in America's interests, and in the interest of the Soviet Union as well, for that matter.

I appreciate that there are some Americans who stand to benefit from business as usual, and they are understandably pleased with the grain deal, the gas equipment deal, and the fishing agreement, which requires the Soviets to purchase from the United States an amount of fish equal to their catch. I am not eager to deny those Americans a business opportunity. But I am deeply concerned that a commitment to provide the Soviets with what they most want and need from our food and grain resources is a policy that benefits a few at the cost of interests which we all share.

Finally, I wonder what the people of Afghanistan think as they see one sanction after another lifted against their Soviet oppressors. Much of the economic restraint that characterized our relations with the Soviet Union came about in response to the 1979 invasion of Afghanistan. The Soviets have not left Afghanistan. There is no indication that they will leave soon. There are still some 105,000 Soviet troops in that war-torn country, and the people there continue their brave resistance. Does the situation in Afghanistan now warrant the economic favors we bestow on the Soviets? What does business as usual say about our commitment to the struggle of the Afghan people?

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. KASTEN]. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FLOOD OF HEROIN AND COCAINE CHANGING PATTERNS OF DRUG USE

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, it has been said about drug abuse in our Nation that the worst is yet to come.

But, I ask you, how can it be worse than is reported in the article reprinted below?

When cocaine use reaches every level of our society; when the number of cocaine addicts increases by one-third in 1 year; when the supply of cocaine and heroin becomes so extensive the price drops 60 percent in 1 year; when drug-related murders increase 50 percent in 1 year; when the increased purity level of the cocaine on the streets causes strokes and seizures in its unsuspecting young users; it is time to put a stop to it.

Personal histories of those whose lives were devastated by drugs are included in the first of this series of articles on drug abuse. To see a young man ruin a promising career on Wall Street and decimate his savings because of cocaine; to see a young woman fall victim to cocaine addiction thereby losing her job and her husband; to see a ghetto-escapee turn to crime to feed his narcotics addiction; to see a young immigrant break his family's heart by dropping out of school and turning to crime to support his need for drugs; it is time to put a stop to it.

Mr. President, the amount and accessibility of cocaine and heroin in this country have increased to such an extent that law enforcement officials have virtually ceased large-scale investigations into marijuana trafficking to turn their attention to these "more dangerous" drugs. Cocaine and heroin are available in such quantity that former users of only one type of narcotic are turning into "garbage heads"—the street term for users of more than one drug.

It is not as if efforts are not being made to put a stop to this situation. Numerous crackdowns against drug traffic, both on the part of New York City drug enforcement officials and Federal authorities, have been made, as have many seizures of drug and arrests of dealers.

But there is so much money to be made, and so many drugs available, that the dealers who do escape these raids just move to another place to ply their trade. There is another phenomenon that is occuring in New York right now, and that is that average middle-class people, once only intermittent users of drugs, are becoming dealers of cocaine and heroin. Again, the risk is worth it to them because of the tremendous amount of money to be made. The use of heroin and cocaine thus rises in the areas outside the city, as these new kinds of pushers take their wares home with them to the suburbs.

While the situation that is described in this article about drug abuse in New York is particularly horrifying, I think we would be making a mistake to think that these problems are limited to our Nation's largest city. In my home State of Florida, many urban areas are as affected by increased supply and use of drugs as is New York City. The problem drug abuse is our Nation's No. 1 problem, and articles like the one reprinted below point this out in graphic terms.

Mr. President, it is time to put a stop to it.

I ask unanimous consent that the article entitled, "Drug Flood Altering Patterns of Use," of the New York Times, dated May 20, 1984, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DRUG FLOOD ALTERING PATTERNS OF USE

(By Selwyn Raab)

Supplies of illegal heroin and cocaine have grown so plentiful in the New York City area that drug experts see a dissolving of the traditional lines between people who use the two drugs as well as between people who sell them.

Heroin addiction, while still more prevalent among the poor, has recently risen among members of the white middle class, rehabilitation experts say. And cocaine appears to be contributing to the increase. A state study has found that some cocaine abusers have become addicted to heroin after experimenting with that drug to overcome the mental anxieties created by cocaine.

At the same time, cocaine, once the exclusive preserve of wealthy drug users, has become a popular street drug. High-priced cocaine with a purity level as high as 40 percent is still sold for $100 a gram and $1,000 an ounce to affluent users. But for the first time, the drug, with purity levels of 5 to 10 percent, is being widely sold in small units called bags or tins for as little as $10.

Dozens of cocaine and heroin addicts, from all segments of society, from bank executives to admitted shoplifters, described in interviews how with little difficulty they managed to get both drugs. Wealthy cocaine users, whose habits cost more than $50,000 a year, told of using the telephone to arrange direct deliveries to their East Side apartments.

And in the Bronx, a longtime heroin addict who tells of financing his $100-a-day habit by shoplifting and burglaries said that "the dope situation has never been better." He said the recent flood of cocaine at low prices had allowed him to "speedball"—or inject a combination of heroin and cocaine.

Moreover, the difficulties in combating two hard-core drugs have severely strained the police and rehabilitation agencies. And because heroin and cocaine are so much more health-threatening than marijuana, law-enforcement agencies have virtually ceased large-scale investigations into marijuana trafficking, although the drug is openly sold on street corners.

Until several months ago, few dealers handled both heroin and cocaine. But with the surge in illegal use and trafficking in the New York metropolitan area, officials say the two drugs are now being offered together in abundant quantities. New York dealers have coined a name for multiple drug customers—"garbage heads."

GOING INTO DRUG DEALING

"There is so much money to be made that average middle-class people are going into coke and heroin dealing," said Sterling Johnson, Jr., the city's special narcotics prosecutor. "They know the odds are on their side, that most dealers who take care of friends and neighbors don't get caught."

The surge has occurred despite crackdowns by the city's Police Department and Federal authorities against trafficking on the Lower East Side and in Harlem, two of the most notorious areas in the city for narcotics sales. Most officials, including Police Commissioner Benjamin Ward, say that in the wake of the police campaigns many of the dealers have simply moved their operations indoors or to other neighborhoods.

Deaths attributed to narcotics overdoses—mainly heroin—have more than doubled since 1978, to about 500 in the city last year. And the Police Department's last homicide analysis in 1981 estimated that at least 393 slayings in the city, or 24 percent of the total, were drug-related, principally involving heroin or cocaine users and dealers.

"Coke and heroin are probably at an all-time high," said the director of the state's Division of Substance Abuse Services, Julio A. Martinez. "Previously, coke and heroin dealers dealt to different classes of people. Now what you have is a department store—you can get all types of drugs from any one dealer."

The recent police drives seem to have had little effect on experienced heroin users.

"Even if they clean up Avenue D, it doesn't matter," the Bronx addict said of the notorious drug-selling on the Lower East Side. "There's always somewhere else—in East Harlem, College Avenue in the Bronx, Bed-Stuy and Williamsburg. They can't stop it. Too many junkies, too much money. Nobody's worried about it."

With the changing patterns of heroin and cocaine use in the New York area have come other significant trends, according to Federal and local law enforcement agents, rehabilitation counselors, drug addicts and former drug addicts, and public and confidential reports on narcotics problems.

The experts cited these key changes in cocaine abuse:

Use of the drug is rising in the city and the suburbs, according to a study by the state's Substance Abuse Services Division. The study estimated that at least 750,000 of the state's residents have used cocaine, almost double the number in a 1981 survey. About 400,000 people in the state are believed to use cocaine at least once a week.

More patients in drug-treatment programs are citing cocaine as their major problem. Last year, a record number of patients cited cocaine abuse problems when applying for admission to state-financed drug treatment programs. Outside of the city, about 9 percent of the patients who sought help listed cocaine as their major problem, compared with 4 percent in 1981. In the city, the proportion of patients with cocaine problems in state-financed programs rose to 9 percent last year from 6 percent in 1981.

Cocaine is making inroads among low-income populations. For example, a state study found that 26 percent of the residents in the city's single-room-occupancy hotels—many of whom are on welfare—are users of cocaine.

As many women as men are using cocaine, Dr. Arnold M. Washton, a psychologist and drug researcher, said a recent survey of cocaine abusers in the metropolitan area had found that about half were women, up from one-third a year ago. The growing rate among women, Dr. Washton said, stemmed partly from the changing roles of women in society and increased stress faced by those who work.

"Women also are being introduced to cocaine through courtships," Dr. Washton added. "Instead of candy or roses, men bring cocaine as a gift."

Because of apparently abundant supplies, the price of cocaine for large-scale dealers has fallen in New York. According to officials of the Federal Drug Enforcement Administration, in the last year importers have dropped their price to middle-level distributors from $40,000 a kilogram, or 2.2 pounds, to $30,000.

The lower prices have also made it easier for teen-agers in the city and the suburbs to purchase and to try cocaine, drug counselors said.

Many drug experts are concerned that the increasing use of high-purity or more potent cocaine may lead to medical as well as psychological problems among abusers. Because large-scale cocaine use is relatively new, reliable studies on the possible long-term physical side effects have not been made. But Dr. Robert B. Millman, director of drug research at New York Hospital, said there are "ominous signals."

"We are getting a large number of anecdotal reports of young people who use cocaine and who are having seizures, strokes and premature heart attacks," he said.

With heroin, the picture is somewhat different.

The number of heroin addicts in New York State has risen slightly in the last year to about 247,000, Federal and state officials estimate. Most—190,000—live in the city. About 32,000 heroin users live in Long Island and the northern New York suburbs. About 20,000 come from northern New Jersey.

Heroin addicts are still believed to be more heavily involved in violent crime than are cocaine users, who generally are more affluent. Researchers said about 20 percent of frequent cocaine users admitted having committed crimes to support their habits. Most crimes were white-collar offenses, such as embezzlement and theft.

The typical, or daily, heroin addict in the city, in addition to buying, selling and using drugs, commits 209 nondrug crimes each year, according to a study recently completed by the state's Substance Abuse Services Division.

Based on interviews with 201 addicts, the study found that the average addict, who spends between $50 and $100 a day on heroin, had been involved in 12 robberies, 34 burglaries and 91 other types of thefts each year. The typical crime netted $41, the report said.

MOST CRIMES WERE NONVIOLENT

Dr. Bruce D. Johnson, a sociologist who was in charge of the study, said the vast majority of crimes committed by heroin addicts were nonviolent, such as shoplifting, check forgeries and prostitution.

Another sign of heroin use and its link to crime has been noted by officials through a sharp increase in the number of newly arrested inmates in city jails who require detoxification or medical aid for withdrawal symptoms. From 1980 to 1983, the number of inmates who underwent detoxification rose from 7,679 to 13,046.

The proportion of blacks addicted to heroin in the city and the state appears to be falling. Since 1980, black patients in state-supported treatment programs dropped from 48 percent to 38 percent. Meanwhile, the number of Hispanic patients rose from 32 percent to 35 percent and the number of whites from 20 percent to 27 percent.

Experts attributed the drop among blacks partly to vigorous anti-heroin educational programs directed at black youths. The rise in use among Hispanics, the experts said, may have resulted from the easy availability of heroin in Hispanic neighborhoods, including the Lower East Side, Williamsburg, East Harlem and the South Bronx

An increase in heroin use by whites—mainly men and women in their 30's—resulted largely from a relapse problem, rehabilitation experts said. Many former addicts, they said, stopped using the drug in the mid-1970's when it was hard to get but had been lured back by its greater availability and purity.

In the 1970's, purity was usually below 2 percent. Recent Police Department laboratory tests have shown purity, especially on the Lower East Side, as high as 17 percent.

Cocaine, which pharmacologically is not a narcotic but a stimulant of the central nervous system, has also been blamed for an increase in the use of heroin. Heroin is a narcotic that numbs the senses. A state study of new heroin users found a large number who said they had turned to the drug in an attempt to relieve psychological stresses caused by cocaine.

"They get so wired, so hyper-stimulated by chronic cocaine use that, they can't sleep or function," explained Dr. Douglas S. Lipton, research director in the state's Substance Abuse Services Division. "They resort to heroin to avoid the depression which normally happens when cocaine is cut off, only to become addicted to heroin."

In analyzing the recent trends, Dr. Mitchell S. Rosenthal, the president of the Phoenix House Foundation, which runs the largest private drug rehabilitation program in the metropolitan area, said that 20 years ago less than 4 percent of the population had used any illicit drug.

"Today, more than 35 percent of the population has used an illicit drug," Dr. Rosenthal said. "It is no longer a phenomenon of the minority poor, the underclass. Over 20 years, there has been a de facto decriminalization of drug use. Our culture, in effect, has said, you want to get high, then get high."

Dr. Washton, who is director of substance abuse research and treatment at Regent Hospital in Manhattan, said: "What we have is the baby boom generation of post World War II that has shifted from marijuana to cocaine. Many of them got comfortable with the idea of so-called recreational drugs in the 60's and 70's and they are smack dab in the middle of life, dealing with problems they never thought they would have to deal with."

DRUG USERS, RICH AND POOR, TELL OF THE COST AND THE ANGUISH

Some grew up in wealth and comfort in New York City, the suburbs and upstate. They went to private schools and Ivy League universities before moving almost effortlessly into well-paid executive jobs in finance or the fashion industry.

Their lives in New York City involve business deals in the garment district and Wall Street, fashionable Gramercy Park apartments, expensive restaurants and parties.

Others grew up in middle-class Brooklyn and shabby inner-city neighborhoods. Most of them are school dropouts who worked briefly as teen-agers. Now they support themselves and their families by mugging, shoplifting and selling illicit drugs.

All of them—the wealthy, the blue-collar workers and the criminals—are heroin or cocaine addicts.

Some affluent addicts began using drugs, mainly cocaine, often because it was considered a harmless diversion. They could afford it, even if it cost $50,000 a year.

For poorer addicts, cocaine and heroin are sometimes an escape mechanism, a way, they say, of temporarily forgetting their daily plights. And crime is the only way they know of supporting addictions that can cost more than $100 a day.

They described their experiences with drugs and the consequences in taped interviews on the condition that their names be withheld. Whether rich or poor, they spoke of an easy availablity of drugs in the city and often of misplaced confidence that they could occasionally use cocaine or heroin without becoming addicted.

"A DIFFERENT WORLD"

He is a 29-year-old investment banker, a native of upstate New York who graduated from an Ivy League college and moved to the city six years ago. He recently entered a private rehabilitation program.

Like most people of my generation, I started with pot in high school. I experimented with cocaine in college, but it was too expensive then. When I got to the city, a lot of people in my social and business lives were doing it.

I was part of being accepted, like drinking. It was there, and I did it along with everyone else.

It was a form of release at the end of the day. It didn't trouble me because it was illegal. As long as I wasn't selling it, I didn't feel I was committing a crime.

The first couple of years, I was snorting two or three grams a week, costing me $200 or $300, but I could afford it. I was making $50,000 in my job, and I have a considerable outside income, another $50,000.

The people I know are deep into six-and seven-figure incomes. When you make half a million a year, you can afford a cocaine life style. After a deal, you say, 'Let's celebrate, get a couple of suites in a hotel, girls from an escort service, a couple of limos, a case of Dom Perignon and an ounce of cocaine.' It's just part of that good life.

In 1982, I had a lot of business pressures. I wanted to leave the company I was with and start my own investment-consulting company. I was unhappy at work, and at the same time I became friendly with a group of people in the commodities exchange who do it in massive quantities.

I stopped buying a gram or two from friends and started to meet with real hardcore dealers. I needed larger and larger quantities—$2,000 a week. I could afford it, but it was hitting my savings, not coming out of my paychecks.

Last year, I also got married, and there was the pressure of work, and a fight with my landlord. Coke put me in a different world. I didn't care anymore. I was going downhill at work. All I was looking forward to was the next high.

I thought I was concentrating, but I wasn't. I'd go to Lutece for a business luncheon and not eat a thing. There were a couple of deals that I definitely blew.

Last October, I confessed to my wife I was doing it in large quantities. I went to a psychiatrist and stopped for two months. Then it started again, worse then ever. I felt wired, but not in a frenzied condition. My hands shake, and you're always blowing your nose; it's like having a chronic cold.

I was spending money faster than I was making it. In the last year and a half, it cost me more than $100,000. Emotionally, it was tearing me apart. I was losing my temper, losing my shrewdness. I was talking too much when I should have been discreet. I tortured my wife—started fights with her just for the fun of it.

Sometimes I was so high I'm lucky I didn't kill myself by stepping in front of a bus.

"A JOB ONCE A WEEK"

A 35-year-old who grew up in Little Italy and the East Bronx.

I come from a good family. My father was a postman; my brothers and sisters all have good jobs.

When I was 13, a friend had some heroin. He asked if anyone wanted to get high. It was a big thing back then. I said, 'I'll try.' I mainlined, and I've been screwing up ever since.

My parents were immigrants. They didn't know anything about drugs, and they didn't realize I was screwing around until I got arrested for burglary when I was 16.

All in all, I spent about 10 years in prison, for robberies and burglaries. I used to push drugs, and I made $1,000 a week. But I would spend it all on heroin.

I'm married and have two sons, 12 and 7. My wife doesn't know what I'm doing. I never go into the house high, and she never sees my arms. She thinks I'm straight and that I'm a cabby.

I got out of prison about a year ago, after four years for armed robbery. Heroin is costing me about $60 a day. I'm shooting five or six bags.

I pay for it, I pull a job once a week, usually a stickup. Most of the time I don't even know what I'm doing. I wake up and find I have $3,000 or $4,000 in my pocket. Then the picture would come back to me that I stuck somebody up.

My parole officer never looks at my arms. He asks if I'm working and says keep looking. They don't care, as long as you come in and keep the appointments.

It's a bitch out there, getting a job. Certain jobs you have to be bonded. With my record, I can't even get a super's job. I want to stop, but I don't know how. I've been trying to get into a methadone program, but they say come back in three or four weeks, and they still ain't got no room.

It's a hell out there. I get so depressed that instead of looking for a job, I buy a bag of that poison.

"TAKES THE TENSION OFF"

A 35-year-old woman with two children who has always lived in Harlem.

I started messing with drugs when I was 15. It was the last day of school in Washington Irving High School, and a friend gave me a snort of heroin. 'Take a blow, you're going to love the high,' she told me. And she was right.

When I was 17, I dropped out of high school and got a job in the post office. I worked there for about a year, when I found another way of making money—bagging heroin.

You can make about $100 a day in one of the mills. And the bosses always have some cocaine to keep you perky and to stop you from dozing off because of the heroin fumes.

It's hard to get those jobs in the mills, and it cost me $100 to $150 a week to get heroin. I'm on welfare, but that's not enough. I get money in various ways, sell pills, make a heroin run for someone else and get paid by the customer. The one thing I won't do is prostitute myself. I also won't sell drugs to any children.

I've only been arrested once, I was with three other people when the cops caught us shooting up in a hallway. I've tried going cold turkey, but it doesn't work. I have a lot of problems, pressures, finding enough money to raise my kids. If I can't handle something, I have to get high. It takes the tension off of me.

I have this fantasy that someday there will be detoxification centers where you can kick the habit and get good medical attention and then they help you find a good job. That's why so many of us hang out on the streets—because we have no jobs.

"ALL GONE UP MY NOSE"

A 22-year-old fruit and produce wholesaler in Brooklyn. He is married and has two children, and he says he is planning to seek help in a therapeutic program.

My first contact with drugs was while I was a student at Madison High School. Back then it was pot and ludes. After I graduated and started making some money, I had friends in business and in nightclubs who had cocaine connections.

All the rich people, the politicians and the show-biz people were using coke. I was just a working kid, so it was a big thing for me to try something that was a rich man's high.

About a year and a half ago, it got to be a habit for me. I had extra money and time to do it. If there was pressure at work, I'd run and get a gram of coke. I never cheated on my wife, but cocaine became my lover.

In the last six months, it's become unbearable. I've become paranoid. I can't go out of my house without looking behind me to see if I'm being followed. I break out in a cold sweat. I think people are watching me in my living room, that someone will jump through the window and take my cocaine.

I smoke an occasional joint, but nothing helps. I can hardly sleep. I go to work without sleeping, come home to get more cocaine to wake myself up.

The general situation with coke is very bad. You can get it in Flatbush, Bensonhurst, all over Brooklyn, not just Manhattan. Kids are copping half a gram for $40. It's cheaper than it's ever been. Maybe it started out as a rich man's high, but gradually it will be a welfare high.

I make about $30,000, but over the last year I spend about $50,000 on cocaine. I've gone through most of my savings and borrowed from all the people I know. It's all gone up my nose and through my brain.

"INTO TOTAL REVERSE"

A 26-year-old secretary who grew up in Tenafly, N.J., attended a junior college and has been living in Manhattan for the last six years.

I was going out with an older man, about 35, and his entire group was into coke. We used to go to bars on the East Side. They'd hand you a vial, you'd go to the ladies room and snort out of the vial. My boyfriend was paying for it, but when we broke up, I got in touch with his dealer.

At first, I was able to handle it recreationally, only on weekends, and I didn't have constant cravings. Then it got worse. I needed a gram a day. I was paying $100 a gram, but I was such a good customer my dealer lowered the price to $90. My net pay was $260 a week, and I was spending $110 a day. I used a credit card to draw $2,500 from a bank and sold jewelry left to me by my grandmother for $7,000.

In the beginning, it was social. I'd love to go out, gab away, meet people. It made me feel confident, euphoric, that I could conquer the world.

Then it went into total reverse. I couldn't go out, I couldn't walk in the street. I felt everyone was looking at me through the window in my apartment, that the neighbors were spying on me. I really became a wackadoo.

I've lived in the Gramercy Park area and the Upper East Side, and coke is all over. I'm living with someone now, and I'm in a therapy program, and I hope I've licked the problem. But most of the tenants in my building, all they talk about is drugs. They say my floor has got the best drugs in the building. Now that I'm off drugs, I've probably got dealers living right next to me.

"CENTER OF EVERYTHING"

A 32-year-old buyer in the garment center. She attended private schools while growing up in Brooklyn and in Mercer County, N.J., and graduated from the University of Miami. Trying to relieve the anxieties of cocaine use, she suffered an overdose of sedatives and entered a rehabilitation program.

In 1981, everybody started doing coke—in homes, in limousines on the way to theater. The first time I tried it was on July 4, 1981, while watching the fireworks on the West Side. It's strange to say it now, but at first I didn't like it.

Six months later I was in Florida, and all my dates were using it. I tried it again, and what I did like about it was that it gave me the energy to dance until 4 in the morning.

The next time I danced with cocaine was in June 1982, when I met my future husband. We used it once a month, on the anniversaries of our first meeting. My husband had been a cocaine dealer for many years. He started selling coke when he needed money to complete his doctorate, but once he saw how easy it was to make money selling coke, he dropped out of the doctoral program.

When we decided to get married, he got a legitimate job. But as I starting using it more and more, I enjoyed the high. I'm a very up person, and it sped me up. It gave me more security—an 'I don't give a damn' attitude.

By March 1983, I was using it every day. When we got married in September, I stopped. My husband said, 'I'm not in the business; I don't want you involved in it.' As a substitute; I started drinking, but I missed coke. I had been used to living alone, total independence, never having to answer to anybody. Now here somebody was invading my space.

Last November, I made connections with people in the garment center. I couldn't resist the high coke gave me. When I did coke, I was the center of everything. I put everything on the back burner. I forgot about everybody and everything. In one month, I did $4,600 worth, two to four grams a week. I'd phone a dealer, and the coke was delivered to my door. Because I paid out of my savings, my husband had no idea what I was up to.

But my life was becoming totally uncontrollable. It was an effort to get up in the morning to do a food shop. I always had dinner on the table when my husband came home. But those last few hours before he came home, when I stopped using coke, were the most horrible of my life. That crash was the worst thing I've ever been through.

"DEAD TIRED"

A 42-year-old who was paroled last October after serving six years in prison for shooting a man during a quarrel in a bar. He is living in the Yorkville section of Manhattan.

When I was 19, I was a doorman on Park Avenue and doing fairly well. A friend bought a $5 bag of heroin, and four of us tried it. We all thought we could handle it. We all thought we were pretty clever. Once I started using it, it got heavier and heavier, and I didn't know I was hooked.

I lost my job and started stealing little things, first $5 from my mother or from someone else in the family. When I was 20, I got arrested for armed robbery and served four years.

Since then, I've also been arrested for breaking into cars and boosting out of supermarkets. I've never been able to hold a full-time job, because getting enough money for heroin is a full-time occupation. I'd occasionally spend 60 or 90 days in jail, and clean up my habit for a brief time.

When I got out of prison last October, three days after I got home I started using heroin again. I was bored. There was nothing to do and I couldn't resist it. I told my parole officer, and he said go into a methadone program or go back to prison for four years.

I've been on methadone since December, and that takes care of my heroin problem. But I still need something, so I'm using coke. I'm shooting it. Coke allows me to escape momentarily. It's not a habit. It's something to do, instead of sitting around, thinking of my miseries.

Coke cost me $100 sometimes as much as $300. I get $108 every two weeks from welfare.

I pay for it by breaking into cars. I don't want to do anything violent. I walk around town at night, looking for cars with open doors. I'll take a tape cassette, a radio or whatever is there.

I wouldn't be doing this if I could get a decent job and there was no coke around. I know my head is in garbage can, but I can't stop.

THE READINESS AND SUSTAINABILITY OF THE UNITED STATES ARMED FORCES

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, last week the Defense Subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee included, as a part of its report, the results of an Appropriations investigative staff study critical of the readiness and sustainability of the U.S. Armed Forces. The release and attendent coverage by the media given what is, I consider, a biased and outdated study, does a serious disservice to the efforts of this administration and is a slap in the face of the military services. In my view, and those of every military expert I know, by virtually every measure, the U.S. Armed Forces are substantially better off today than in 1980. The efforts of this administration to correct the longstanding and well-documented problems caused by the neglect of the previous administration have clearly started to pay off. We are not out of the woods yet, by a long shot, but I am absolutely convinced we have made great strides toward correcting those deficiencies and if we continue the programs now in being, we will see even greater improvements in the near future. Problems still exist and they are being addressed and the most important need right now is continued support from the Congress. There are entirely too many self-styled military experts here in the Congress who, for their own parochial reasons, just love to criticize the military in order to discredit the administration's program. They are wrong and those who prepared this study, the data of which is at least a year or more old, simply followed directions.

Mr. President, I would like to quote some of our commanders in chief, those who are directly responsible for fighting in a war we may become involved in and are vitally concerned with readiness and sustainability on a daily basis on this issue. These military leaders understand the problem far better than anyone in Washington and their remarks underscore the inaccuracy of this report.

General Rogers, Commander in Chief, U.S. European Command:

There is no question that USEUCOM, across the board, is more capable today than it was in 1980.

General Ryan, Commander in Chief, Military Airlift Command:

I appreciate your concern over allegations that the substantial investments in our defense establishment over the past three years have gone for naught and that somehow we are less capable militarily than we were in 1980. I want to assure you that is not the case in the Military Airlift Command.

We have made substantial progress along an ever-steepening, upward curve and are better off today than we were three years ago.

General Gorman, Commander in Chief, Southern Command:

The American people have indeed received proper return on defense investments since 1980. Among the improvements I have observed, the following are salient: better people, better training, better materiel, better strategic mobility, better joint command communication and control, better integration of the reserve components, and better sustainability.

I am convinced that readiness, a function of personnel, equipment, training, doctrine and commitment has never been higher.

Admiral McDonald, Commander in Chief, U.S. Atlantic Fleet:

A principal reason for this increased readiness status has been the retention and procurement of better qualified personnel.

I am firmly convinced that the U.S. military's war fighting capability has increased steadily during this period and personal observations of units within my command assure me of this conviction and reinforce my subjective judgment that our readiness has increased across the board in areas difficult to evaluate objectively.

General Nutting, Commander in Chief, U.S. Readiness Command:

In my view, we have a substantially greater war fighting capability today than we had in 1980. Our personnel are of higher quality; individual and units are better trained. Morale of our troops in the field is high and they have much better equipment. The M-1 tank, Bradley Fighting Vehicle, the Blackhawk helicopter, F-15 and F-16 fighter aircraft, to name a few, have made us a much more capable fighting force.

General Davis, Commander in Chief, Strategic Air Command:

Our real war fighting capability has improved substantially as a result of defense investment provided by Congress in the force structure modernization and sustainability accounts.

Mr. President, I can add to the testimony by these commanders by testifying of my personal visits around the world to different commands. I know a little bit about what I am talking about because I spent 37 years of my life in and out of the uniform. I have never known the forces of our country to be in better shape.

And, finally, Mr. President, I feel the real reason for the timing of this release smacks of nothing more than blatant, partisan politics. For the very committee in Congress that has cut defense spending the most in recent years to come out with a report of this nature is not only hypocritical but nearly criminal. I think that the comments of the commanders in chief that you have just heard obviously point this out.

ORDER EXTENDING MORNING BUSINESS UNTIL 12:45 P.M.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that morning business be extended until 12:45 p.m., under the same terms and conditions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, there are negotiations and deliberations going on now on the arrangement of the schedule for the balance of today, tomorrow, and perhaps the first part of next week. While we try to complete that, unless some other Senator is seeking recognition—and I see none—I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE NOMINATION OF JAMES HARVIE WILKINSON III

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, if there is an opportunity to work out a satisfactory time agreement on the consideration of the nomination of Mr. Wilkinson for the fourth circuit, I ask unanimous consent that my statement on that particular nomination be printed in the RECORD at that particular time as if given. I am prepared to take the time to go through the statement, but I am quite prepared, if the arrangements are worked out, to have this statement appear in the RECORD for reference of my colleagues stating my position in opposition. And then I will look forward to working out with the leader an appropriate opportunity for a limited but hopefully important debate on the issue.

So I ask unanimous consent that, if there is such an agreement that is worked out by the majority leader, subsequent to that agreement in the RECORD my full and complete statement in opposition to Mr. Wilkinson's nomination also be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Massachusetts wants me to go into executive session now, I can assure him I will not file a cloture motion until we resolve our negotiations if he wishes to speak at this point.

Mr. KENNEDY. I can speak on it if there is no other business before the Senate. I would be glad to have the opportunity under the agreement to do whatever the leader suggests.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I do not think I need to stir troubled waters, so I will just refrain from that.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR MORNING BUSINESS UNTIL 1 P.M.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, it is going to take a few more minutes than I had thought to locate Members who have to clear a proposed agreement.

I ask unanimous consent that time for morning business be extended until 1 p.m. under the same terms and conditions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT—WILKINSON NOMINATION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am advised by the minority leader that the request I am about to put has been cleared, I believe. It has been on this side. I will now state it. As in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that during the session of the Senate today it be in order for me to file a cloture motion on the nomination of James Harvie Wilkinson III, to be a U.S. circuit judge.

I further ask unanimous consent that the cloture vote pursuant to that motion occur on Tuesday, July 31, at 3 p.m., and that the mandatory quorum required by rule XXII be waived.

Finally, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume consideration of the Wilkinson nomination in executive session at 2 p.m., Tuesday, July 31, and that the control of the time between 2 p.m. and 3 p.m. be equally divided between the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] and the chairman of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. THURMOND] or their designees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I will not object. This agreement meets with the suggestions by Mr. KENNEDY earlier to me. Mr. KENNEDY and I subsequently discussed it with the distinguished majority leader, and being sure that Mr. KENNEDY has no objection, and having had our telephones in the cloakroom activated so as to contact other Senators, and hearing no objection on this side, I have no objection.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the minority leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, pursuant to the authority granted under the order just entered, I send to the desk a cloture motion and ask that it be stated by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The cloture motion having been presented under rule XXII, the Chair directs the clerk to read the motion.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provision of Rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close debate on the nomination of James Harvie Wilkinson III, of Virginia, to be United States Circuit Judge for the Fourth Circuit.

Senators Howard Baker, Ted Stevens, Strom Thurmond, Jeremiah Denton, Pete Wilson, Alphonse D'Amato, Jesse Helms, John Danforth, Roger W. Jepsen, Dave Durenberger, Chic Hecht, Paul Laxalt, William Armstrong, Bob Kasten, Thad Cochran, Bob Dole, Alan Simpson, John East, Paul Trible, Don Nickles, Dan Quayle, Orrin G. Hatch, Steve Symms, Slade Gorton, James Abdnor, Paula Hawkins, Jake Garn, Mark Hatfield, Nancy Landon Kassebaum, Frank H. Murkowski, James A. McClure, Malcolm Wallop, Pete Domenici, Rudy Boschwitz, Edward Zorinsky, Gordon Humphrey, Daniel J. Evans, and Chuck Grassley.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I remind Senators now that because this motion is filed today, the vote ordinarily would occur on Monday, but by unanimous consent it is set for 3 p.m. on Tuesday.

STATEMENT IN OPPOSITION TO NOMINATION OF JAMES HARVIE WILKINSON III TO BE U.S. CIRCUIT JUDGE

(The following statement is printed at this point in the RECORD pursuant to unanimous consent order entered earlier today:)

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I strongly oppose Senate action on the nomination of J. Harvie Wilkinson to the fourth circuit.

More than 4 months have passed since I joined other Senators from both sides of the aisle in requesting a further hearing on this nomination in the Judiciary Committee.

More than 2 months have passed since my colleagues and I raised significant questions on the Senate floor about the qualifications of Mr. Wilkinson to be a Federal judge. And during all that time, no hearing has been held. The Senate has a right to know why Mr. Wilkinson has not been invited back to the Judiciary Committee to set the record straight on the numerous questions that have been raised. These questions are no less troubling today than they were 2 months ago or 4 months ago.

It is true that two hearings were held on this nomination—one in November 1983, and another in February 1984. But these two hearings were entirely pro forma—until major allegations against Wilkinson's qualifications and ethics were suddenly made at the second hearing.

There are numerous allegations against Wilkinson; they are serious allegations; and they deserve serious answers.

In my view, the stonewalling attitude of the Judiciary Committee with respect to these allegations is indefensible. The persistent refusal of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee to hold another hearing on this nomination strongly suggests that the nominee has no satisfactory answers.

The Senate should not vote to confirm a judicial nominee who has been under a dark cloud of allegations of impropriety for months, and has done absolutely nothing to dispel the serious doubts about his fitness to serve on the Federal bench.

Mr. Wilkinson presents a formidable combination of inadequacies.

He is the least qualified nominee ever submitted for an appellate court vacancy. Many academics have been appointed to the Federal appellate bench in the past, but all have had at least limited—and often substantial—practical legal experience. Wilkinson has zero experience—no clients, no trial court experience, no appellate court experience, no clinical legal courses in his teaching.

Mr. Wilkinson's lack of qualifications stand in sharp contrast to other Virginians who are on the fourth circuit. If confirmed, Wilkinson would take the seat once held by John Butzner, who has taken senior status. At the time of his appointment, Judge Butzner had 5 years experience as a U.S. district court judge, 4 years experience as a State circuit judge, 17 years of legal experience in private practice, and had been a member of the bar for 26 years.

Senior Judge Albert Bryan died recently after 23 years of service on the fourth circuit. At the time of his nomination, Judge Bryan had served 14 years as a U.S. district judge, and 19 years as a Commonwealth's attorney. He had been a member of the bar for 41 years.

The only Virginian currently on the fourth circuit is H. Emory Widener. When he was appointed to the appellate bench, Judge Widener had been a judge on the U.S. district court for 3 years, had spent 16 years in the private practice of law, and had been a member of the bar for 21 years.

Mr. Wilkinson, who was admitted to the bar in 1972, in fact has fewer years as a member of the bar than any circuit court nominee from the creation of the circuit courts of appeal in 1891 through the end of 1980. And 3 of those years were actually spent outside the field of law, as an editorial writer for the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot newspaper. And in an editorial of July 29, 1983, the Virginian-Pilot, his own newspaper, opposed the nomination.

In addition to his lack of experience, Mr. Wilkinson's one brief foray into public service at the Department of Justice during this administration was a source of serious embarrassment and concern. For example, as reported in the June 1984 issue of Commonwealth magazine of Virginia, while serving as Deputy Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights, Wilkinson's ignorance of court procedures resulted in the Department of Justice having to pay court fines because Wilkinson caused the Department to miss a court deadline for responding to interrogatories. The article quotes a former Justice Department attorney's observation that "It's sort of unheard of for Department attorneys to be fined for not answering interrogatories."

In another case reported by Commonwealth, involving treatment of inmates and prison conditions, the Justice Department objected to a county's plans for housing only 30 percent of the jail population in single cells. Suspecting that more than 30 percent of the inmates were high risk and should be in single cells, Justice Department attorneys wanted to request that the county conduct a professional study to determine what percentage of the inmates were high risk. Instead, Wilkinson arbitrarily ordered the Department attorneys to use 55 percent as the recommendation for the inmate population that should be in single cells. There was no evidence to support the 55-percent figure. Wilkinson persistently refused requests by staff attorneys to drop the unsupportable 55-percent recommendation. He finally abandoned the phony number—but only after his special assistant intervened.

In yet another matter, Wilkinson defended Assistant Attorney General Bradford Reynolds' refusal to cite a key Supreme Court precedent that was directly on point in a Department of Justice brief on rights for the handicapped. Wilkinson explained to an attorney on the case that the precedent was ignored because "Brad doesn't like that case." And then Wilkinson added: "Besides, you're lucky you got what you did. Some people appointed by this administration don't think section 504—of the Civil Rights Act—requires any affirmative obligations at all."

It is true that a number of law professors with limited trial experience have been appointed to the Federal appellate courts in recent years. But each of them clearly met at least the minimum standards of the ABA on trial experience. There is no comparison between Wilkinson's zero experience and the obvious qualifications of other academics who had at least limited—and often substantial—trial experience and who have been approved by the ABA for appellate judgeships.

The ABA guidelines recommend at least 12 years in law. Wilkinson had 8 at the time he was nominated. The ABA guidelines also recommend "substantial trial experience" or "similar experience" for both trial and appellate judges. Wilkinson has gone.

Other nominees have had less than 12 years at the bar, and other academics have had limited trial experience. But no nominee has had Wilkinson's unique combination of less than 12 years at the bar and zero practical experience.

In the case of Professor Stephen Breyer, for example, who was nominated by President Carter to the First Circuit Court of Appeals in 1980, the nominee so clearly met the experience standard that the issue for the ABA evaluation committee was whether to give Breyer the minimum rating of "Qualified" or to give him the higher rating of "Well Qualified." He received a rating of "Qualified," but in its letter of approval, the ABA committee informed the Senate:

> As a result of our investigation, a majority of our committee is of the opinion that Stephen G. Breyer is qualified for this appointment. A substantial minority found him well qualified.

By contrast, in the case of Wilkinson, the initial ABA evaluation found him "Unqualified." A "Qualified" rating was achieved only after the confidential results of the negative evaluation were leaked to Wilkinson, who then orchestrated an intensive and unprecedented lobbying campaign against the members of the ABA committee before they cast their votes. Subsequently, the committee informed the Senate:

> A substantial majority of our committee is of the opinion that Mr. Wilkinson is qualified for this appointment. The minority found him to be not qualified.

At the time he was nominated, Breyer had written numerous appellate court briefs; he had presented the oral argument personally in at least one case in a court of appeals; he had interviewed witnesses, questioned potential defendants, and prepared criminal grand jury and trial materials as Assistant Special Prosecutor in the Watergate Special Prosecution Force; he had participated, including testifying as an expert witness, in administrative hearings; he had served as chief counsel of the Senate Judiciary Committee and conducted major sets of Senate hearings; he had represented numerous private clients, including a major steel company seeking to merge with a failing steel firm, a chain of supermarkets trying to cut their prices, tenants organizations challenging rent control regulations, and a grocery chain seeking to sell milk; he had prepared briefs and trial materials for the law firms of Wilmer, Cutler & Pickering in Washington; Brown, Rudnick, Freed & Gesmer in Boston; and Cahill, Gordon in New York City; and he had taught courses in the law of evidence and in administrative law at Harvard Law School.

Wilkinson has nothing comparable in his background—no trial court experience, no appellate court experience, no administrative law experience, no associations with law firms, no trial-related courses in his teaching. His experience is zero—and as the article in Commonwealth makes clear, his lack of experience was a continuing series of embarrassments in the year he spent in the Department of Justice attempting to supervise practicing attorneys.

Extraordinary allegations have also been raised that Wilkinson conducted an unethical and excessive lobbying campaign aimed at the American Bar Association Committee on the Federal Judiciary, in order to secure a "qualified" rating from the committee.

Officials of the Justice Department obtained and improperly divulged the results of the confidential preliminary ABA investigation to the nominee, informing him that the ABA Investigation Committee members were in disagreement, that a vote was about to be taken, and that his approval by the committee was in jeopardy.

Wilkinson used the information improperly obtained from Justice Department officials to organize an intensive and unprecedented lobbying campaign to persuade the ABA Committee to rate him "qualified."

Officials of the Justice Department who were supporters of Mr. Wilkinson conducted their own high pressure lobbying campaign to secure enough votes for a rating of "qualified" by the ABA Committee.

Even Supreme Court Justice Lewis F. Powell, Jr., was part of the lobbying campaign. And from legal experts I have talked to, it seems likely that Justice Powell violated judicial ethics by his direct lobbying for Wilkinson. He has been a family friend of Wilkinson's father for many years, and Wilkinson served as a law clerk to Justice Powell in the 1970's. But the incident does illustrate the extreme lengths to which Wilkinson was prepared to go in abusing Justice Powell and the ABA Investigating Committee.

Powell had initially been contacted by the two ABA Committee investigators. The second investigator told Powell that the first investigator was compiling a negative report on Wilkinson. Powell then initiated a contact with a third member of the committee whom Powell knew, and lobbied him for Wilkinson.

His relationship with Justice Powell was not the only relationship that Wilkinson misused in approaching the ABA.

Wilkinson also unfairly and unethically pressured his own students at the University of Virginia Law School. Some of the students refused. But Wilkinson succeeded in persuading a black student to lobby the black member of the ABA Committee on Wilkinson's behalf. At the time, the student had taken a course from Wilkinson, and Wilkinson had written recommendations for him for his future career.

The ABA Committee was concerned enough about the lobbying campaign for Wilkinson, that it summoned Justice Department officials to the ABA midwinter meeting in Las Vegas to reprimand them. The chairman of the committee admitted that "it was the timing of these calls which was objectionable."

Notwithstanding the ABA Committee's written guidelines which recommend substantial trial experience and specify at least some trial experience as a minimum requirement for approval, the committee found Wilkinson to be qualified. The committee has never before given a qualified rating to such a nominee.

Finally, in addition to his improper activities during his confirmation process, Mr. Wilkinson, while at the Justice Department, participated in interviewing at least one candidate for the fourth circuit vacancy he has been nominated to fill, after he himself expressed interest in being nominated to fill that vacancy.

These allegations raise serious questions which the Senate needs answered before it votes on Wilkinson's nomination. Many of us raised these questions in the Senate Judiciary Committee months ago. Yet we have received absolutely no response on these serious issues, including the following:

Why was Wilkinson's nomination in trouble with the ABA Committee before the intensive lobbying campaign was launched by Wilkinson and others?

Why did Justice Department officials violate the trust of their special position as liaison between the Federal Government and the ABA Committee to provide Wilkinson with confidential inside information about the deliberations of the ABA Committee?

What else did Mr. Wilkinson do with the information that his nomination was in trouble, which he obtained improperly from Justice Department officials?

Whom else did Mr. Wilkinson ask to contact ABA Committee members?

What effect did the boiler room operation conducted by Mr. Wilkinson and Justice Department officials have on the ABA decision to find Mr. Wilkinson qualified?

What do Wilkinson's actions in furtherance of his nomination reveal about his suitability and temperament to be a Federal appellate judge?

What effect did lobbying by Justice Powell have on the decision of the ABA to find Mr. Wilkinson qualified?

Why did the ABA discard its guidelines concerning trial experience to find Mr. Wilkinson qualified?

How would the ABA have rated Mr. Wilkinson absent the lobbying campaign?

Can it be fairly said that Mr. Wilkinson is qualified to be a Federal judge?

Why is the Senate Judiciary Committee unwilling to conduct a complete investigation of this matter?

Why is the chairman of the Judicary Committee stonewalling this nomination?

Why hasn't Mr. Wilkinson, in the months since these issues came to light, been willing to appear before the Judiciary Committee and tell us his side of the story?

Why does the nominee need to be protected from questioning under oath by committee members about these allegations?

What is Wilkinson trying to hide?

The integrity of the judicial selection process is fundamental to the integrity of our judicial system. We must not abdicate our responsibility to assure that the Senate confirmation proceedings are full, fair and unbiased. I urge the Senate to delay action on this nomination until the Senate Judiciary Committee does its job, and conducts an adequate hearing to address these questions. In its present posture, the Wilkinson nomination is an embarrassment to the State of Virginia, to the fourth circuit, to the Supreme Court, and to the U.S. Senate, and Wilkinson should not be confirmed.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following materials relating to this nomination be printed in the RECORD:

First, qualifications of other circuit court nominees who have been described as lacking trial experience.

Second, letter dated May 23, 1984, from the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights to each Senator urging that the nomination be recommitted to the Judiciary Committee for further hearings.

Third, letter dated June 1, 1984, from Senators KENNEDY and METZENBAUM to Senator THURMOND renewing their request for additional hearings on the nomination, with the following attachments:

Washington Post article dated May 27, 1984, "Judge Candidate Enlisted Student To Lobby for Him";

"J. Harvie Wilkinson's Judgment Day," by Lisa M. Antonelli, Commonwealth Magazine of Virginia, June 1984.

Fourth, "Dear Colleague" letter dated May 17, 1984 urging that the nomination be recommitted to the Judiciary Committee for further hearings with the following attachments:

Allegations of questionable activities relating to the Wilkinson nomination and unanswered questions on the Wilkinson nomination;

Editorials: Asheville (North Carolina) Citizen, Norfolk (Virginia) Virginian-Pilot;

ABA letter rating Wilkinson;

Excerpts from ABA "Guidelines for Judicial Nominees."

Fifth, letter dated March 5, 1984, from Senators KENNEDY, METZENBAUM, and BIDEN to Frederick G. Buesser, Chairman, Standing Committee on Federal Judiciary, ABA, expressing concern about the procedures used by the ABA to rate Wilkinson, and response from Mr. Buesser, dated March 12, 1984.

Sixth, letter dated March 9, 1984, from Senators KENNEDY, METZENBAUM, and BIDEN to Hon. Lewis F. Powell, Jr., requsting information about his contacts with ABA committee members regarding this nomination, and response from Justice Powell dated March 12, 1984.

Seventh, the following news articles:

Eighth, letter dated September 9, 1983, from Kathy Wilson, national chair, National Women's Political Caucus, to Senator JOHN WARNER.

Ninth, testimony at a hearing of the Senate Judiciary Committee on the Nomination of James Harvie Wilkinson III, February 22, 1984:

Edythe C. Harrison of the National Women's Political Caucus;

Elaine R. Jones of the NAACP Legal Defense Fund;

Bobby B. Stafford, President of the Old Dominion Bar Association;

Helen C. Gonzales, Associate Counsel, Mexican-American Legal Defense and Educational Fund;

Joseph Michael Trevino, Director of Legislation, League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC);

Armand Derfner.

Tenth, news article from Washington Post, July 17, 1980, on Republican Senate opposition to further proceedings on nominations by President Carter.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE ON CIVIL RIGHTS,
Washington, DC, May 23, 1984.

DEAR SENATOR: We strongly urge you to vote to recommit the Wilkinson nomination to the Senate Judiciary Committee for further hearings. Important questions, questions that have been raised since the last day of hearings, which bear directly on the nomination must be addressed and answered before the full Senate exercises its advise and consent responsibilities.

With warm regards,

Sincerely,

BENJAMIN L. HOOKS.
Chairperson.
RALPH G. NEAS,
Executive Director.

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, DC, June 1, 1984.

Hon. STROM THURMOND,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: We are writing to renew our request for an additional day of Judiciary Committee hearings on the Wilkinson nomination in light of two recent articles which raise serious new questions about the nomination and the qualifications of Mr. Wilkinson to be a federal appellate judge.

The first article, from the Washington Post of May 27, 1984, adds another disturbing and highly questionable incident to the accumulating story of the improper lobbying campaign directed by Wilkinson at the ABA. According to this report, Wilkinson pressured a third year black law student at the University of Virginia Law School to make an urgent call to the black member of the ABA screening committee just before the critical ABA committee vote last fall. If the facts as set out in this article are correct, it seems clear that Mr. Wilkinson's action violated the proper boundaries of the faculty-student relationship, and he does not deserve to be confirmed. At the very least, the Committee should investigate this incident to determine the full circumstances involved.

The second article, from the June, 1984 issue of Commonwealth Magazine, raises serious questions about Wilkinson's impartiality and judicial temperament, based on repeated examples of arbitrary conduct during his year as Deputy Attorney General in the Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice. These allegations require further investigation by the Committee if we are to fulfill our responsibility to the Senate on this nomination. Among the most disturbing of these allegations are the following:

(1) Wilkinson's inexperience in legal procedure caused the Department of Justice to miss deadlines in litigation and to be fined by the courts for unwarranted delays in answering pleadings. According to one allegation relating to litigation over the rights of handicapped persons at Baylor Medical Center, Wilkinson did not understand basic pleadings and complained that Justice lawyers were harassing defendants by filing interrogatories in the case, when in fact the Department attorneys were merely—but necessarily—responding to interrogatories served by the defendants. An attorney in the Department is quoted in the article as saying "It's sort of unheard of for Department attorneys to be fined for not answering interrogatories. The other part of that is that he didn't understand what was going on."

(2) Wilkinson's anti-civil rights bias prevented him from objectively dealing with important legal issues before the Civil Rights Division. The article cites two cases from Ohio and Texas involving prisoners' rights in which Wilkinson arbitarily attempted to force Department attorneys to draw unsubstantiated conclusions in order to deny such rights, regardless of the evidence in the case.

(3) The article refers to "thirty to forty instances" where Wilkinson participated in refusals to enforce civil rights laws in cases involving allegations of discrimination because of race, sex, or handicap. In one egregious case on rights of the handicapped, a Department lawyer was ordered to delete a citation to a controlling Supreme Court precedent in a friend of the court brief the lawyer was drafting.

In light of these new allegations and information, the full Senate should not be asked to vote on Wilkinson until the many questions surrounding this nomination are asked and answered by the Committee.

Sincerely,

EDWARD M. KENNEDY.
HOWARD M. METZENBAUM.

JUDGE CANDIDATE ENLISTED STUDENT TO LOBBY FOR HIM

(By Philip Smith)

University of Virginia law professor J. Harvie Wilkinson III enlisted a black student to lobby the only black member of an American Bar Association committee last fall on the eve of a confidential ABA vote on Wilkinson's qualifications to become a federal appeals judge.

Melvin (Butch) Hollowell, head of the law school's black student association before his recent graduation, said last week that Wilkinson, a conservative Republican, summoned him to his office and asked him to help by calling the black ABA member, a Michigan attorney.

"Jay told me time was of the essence," Hollowell said in an interview. "He knew the vote was the next day, or maybe that I had a day [to make the call]." Hollowell, who contacted the lawyer, said "Jay told me three days later that it had helped."

Wilkinson last week declined comment. The lawyer, Stuart J. Dunnings, Jr., said yesterday that he "did receive such a call from a black student" but could not recall the student's name. Asked if he was influenced by the call, Dunnings said, "My mind was already made up. And nothing changed it." Dunnings declined to elaborate, citing ABA rules on confidentiality.

Allegations of improper lobbying on behalf of Wilkinson's nomination for a seat on the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond are now the focus of a bitter fight on the floor of the Senate, where the nomination was debated for several hours last week. The Senate defeated 54 to 36 a move to send the nomination back to committee and is generally thought likely to approve it when it comes back up for a vote June 4.

Supreme Court Justice Lewis F. Powell Jr. has acknowledged that he contacted an ABA member in New Orleans to support Wilkinson, a family friend and one of Powell's former law clerks. A former deputy attorney general also said that he and a second senior Justice Department official had contact with ABA panel members on behalf of Wilkinson, who had worked under both men at Justice.

Wilkinson, who was found unqualified by one ABA investigator, but qualified by a second, ultimately was rated qualified by the 14-member ABA panel. The rating is considered crucial for candidates for the federal bench.

Several members of the Republican-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee, including Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.), maintained last week that the Wilkinson episode illustrates that the ABA process, on which the Senate normally relies heavily in confirming judgeship candidates, is neither impartial nor confidential.

Kennedy and others, including three Republican senators, argued in floor speeches that the incident raises questions about whether Wilkinson, who is 39 and has no trial exerience, might have been rejected by the ABA without extensive private lobbying.

Republican defenders of the Reagan nominee, notably Sens. Paul S. Trible of Virginia and Judiciary chairman Strom Thurmond, scoffed last week at charges the contacts were improper. Trible said such conversations with ABA screening committee members is "routine."

Senate foes of the nomination also have charged that Wilkinson benefited from inside information, allegedly furnished by the senior officials at Justice, that his candidacy might be in trouble in the ABA committee and that he was improperly kept abreast of the timing of the confidential ABA vote.

Hollowell, who started a new job as an associate of a Detroit law firm last week, said he was asked by Wilkinson last fall whether he "had any familiarity" with the ABA committee member from Michigan. Wilkinson also solicited Hollowell's opinion about how Wilkinson dealt with minority students in his classes.

Hollowell, who said he had "participated pretty vigorously" in Wilkinson's class on constitutional law a year earlier, said he told Wilkinson he regarded him as "fair" to minorities. "Jay said would I mind calling [Dunnings] and telling him that."

Hollowell, who said he saw a piece of paper on Wilkinson's desk with what appeared to be the names of the ABA committee members, said that Wilkinson was eager for him to make the call—"no doubt about it." Asked whether he believed that Wilkinson had targeted some ABA members for lobbying, Hollowell said: "I would say yes."

Hollowell said his conversation with Dunnings lasted about 15 minutes, less than 10 of it on the subject of Wilkinson. "The first thing he said was, 'What's he going to do for black people?' " Hollowell said last week. "He said that regarding blacks and women, [Wilkinson] was not very favorable at Justice, and I said I knew that was a problem."

Wilkinson was a deputy assistant attorney general in the civil rights division of Justice from 1982 to 1983.

Hollowell said that Dunnings seemed eager to talk to him about Wilkinson, in part because the time to vote was so close. The former student said he told Dunnings that he had found Wilkinson, whom he described last week as "a personable guy, very likable," to be "fair" in his dealings with black students.

"Jay had a very good knowledge of what the [nomination] situation was," Hollowell said. "He knew [the ABA vote] was going to be close, that every vote would count." He said Wilkinson told him that making the call "would mean a great deal to me."

Although he made the call as a favor to a friend, Hollowell said, he also had "strong disagreements with things Wilkinson did as a deputy assistant attorney general" in the Reagan Justice Department. "I had deep philosophical differences of opinion regarding his judicial politics," he said.

Last fall, after Reagan sent Wilkinson's name to the Hill, Hollowell said Wilkinson approached him again and asked him to testify on his behalf at his Senate confirmation hearings—"to be ready to go." Hollowell said he declined.

When Wilkinson asked him a few days later to reconsider, Hollowell said he refused. "I didn't think it would be in his interest or in my interest," he said. "I could say he was fair in class, but I would also have to say that I disagreed with things he'd done at Justice" regarding minorities.

Hollowell said he saw no conflict of interest in being asked by a faculty member to support his judgeship. Hollowell was not enrolled in Wilkinson's courses at the time, he said. "Pretty much everything was cemented for me, job-wise, by then," he added.

He said that a year earlier, Wilkinson had written a three-paragraph recommendation for him in connection with a possible summer job as an intern in the office of Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young. The job was offered to him, Hollowell said, but he went elsewhere.

Former assistant attorney general Jonathan Rose, one of the two senior Justice officials who, foes charge, helped in the lobbying for Wilkinson, last week said he did not recall doing so. "Although I wouldn't have been embarrassed" to support Wilkinson, he said.

"This idea that the ABA is some judicial body with whom ex parte contacts are inappropriate is a novel concept invented by opponents of Wilkinson," Rose said.

While at Justice, Rose was involved in handling dozens of Reagan administration candidates for the federal bench, all of whom required ABA screening.

"If we thought there were facts favorable to an administration candidate, we tried to get it to [the ABA committee]," Rose said. "Or if they were not favorable. We didn't view the ABA as a separate tribunal."

"We tried to be as protective as we could," he added, "at keeping the committee from getting a lot of super pressure."

J. HARVIE WILKINSON'S JUDGMENT DAY

(By Lisa M. Antonelli)

He breezes into the University of Virginia Law School at 9:10 a.m., nearly an hour before his first class. An umbrella might make him look more his age, the shy side of 40. Instead, he opts for a baseball cap and a royal blue Windbreaker with yellow and red racing stripes. He shuns professorial tweeds and corduroy in favor of a sleeveless blue and pink cardigan with a ski design over a white shirt and striped tie, and gray pants that hit just above the ankle, U.Va.-style.

Zipping noiselessly down the carpeted corridor, heels first, he turns into his office and swings shut the door, but not in time to muffle a "goddawgit." He might have just missed a phone call from the White House. Or his current favorite baseball team might have just lost a game. Either would be cause for despair, close friends say.

When a person has run as hard and fast as J. Harvie Wilkinson III, one might expect to see some signs of road wear. He has run for Congress, published three books, been a Supreme Court clerk, a newspaper editor, a Justice Department official and three-time professor. But not only does he still look like one of the Hardy Boys, he also shows no signs of slacking the pace.

Since November, he has been embroiled in more than the normal share of headaches that accompany landing a Federal judgeship. He has been accused of using family connections and lobbying to gain the American Bar Association's lowest rating—"qualified"—necessary for appointment to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fourth District in Richmond. He has been attacked publicly by three prominent members of the United States Senate who declare that his nomination to the Federal bench is evidence of a double standard in judicial appointments.

And while his quest for the judgeship was still mired in confirmation battles in mid-May, friends were quick to note that the Federal bench is likely just another supporting role in Wilkinson's quest for real stardom. In the next script, many believe Wilkinson plans to be playing the role of the United States Supreme Court Justice.

Says one confidant: "Jay's a person who has a very clear sense of his long-range goals and a single-mindedness in pursuit of those goals. He's an ambitious and somewhat restless person who gets tired of doing the same thing, so he is regularly motivated to try something else. At the same time, he has a very clear timetable, a very clear sense of what he wants and what he needs to do to get it."

Robert Smith, a former editorial writer under Wilkinson at The Virginian-Pilot, is more succinct: "Jay has tried to position himself for the Supreme Court. He felt that if he were in the right place at the right time, along with his connections to Justice [Lewis F.] Powell, he'd have a good shot at an appointment. By getting on the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, he'll have that shot."

At just a hairbreadth over 5-foot-8 and not an ounce over 140 pounds, J. Harvie Wilkinson appears a man who would be easy to dismiss. On the stage where he teaches Federal Courts class, the short and wispy professor seems dwarfed by his larger students. A true Virginia blue blood, he is deferential, self-deprecating about accomplishments and goals. He has the kind of face that new acquaintances are likely to forget in 30 seconds. That fact has served him well.

Notes one close friend: "He's neither charismatic nor intimidating. Part of the reason that Jay is so successful is that people repeatedly underestimate him."

To underestimate the real Jay Wilkinson is to commit serious error. Behind the gosh-golly, aw-shucks facade is a man close observers call "calculating." Genuine graciousness is certainly his most striking feature, the kind of gentlemanly charm on which Rhett Butler built a gunrunning business. And onlookers say that the similarities don't end there, that Wilkinson, like the ambitious Captain Butler, is willing to mash a few toes if they tend to be standing in the way.

"Jay does tend to evaluate people, not only in terms of common interests, but in terms of his own orientation," says one friend. "He's quite subtle about it. He's not a sycophant in any sense of the word, but he's almost instinctively aware of who can help him and who can't."

Those who can't had better mind their toes. Consider the track record:

In 1970, at the age of 25 and while still enrolled in law school, Wilkinson ran for Congress against David E. Satterfield III (D-3rd), a man he had worked to elect just six years earlier. Wilkinson had been persuaded into the Republican camp by former Republican Gov. Linwood Holton, only to be mercilessly crushed by Satterfield in the election.

Following graduation from law school, Wilkinson accepted the invitation of a family friend, Supreme Court Justice Lewis F. Powell Jr., to a spot as a Supreme Court clerk, a position normally reserved for law graduates who have clerked in the lower courts.

In 1978, Wilkinson allegedly parlayed another friendship into the position of editorial page editor for The Virginian-Pilot in Norfolk, a powerful seat that allowed him to remold the paper's moderately liberal editorial philosophy to his own conservative bent. He not only lacked a professional newspaper background, he couldn't even type.

In 1982, while a deputy assistant attorney general in the U.S. Department of Justice, Wilkinson's critics charged that he engineered cases to bolster his conservative world view.

Now that Wilkinson is up for a Federal judgeship, his critics are quick to point out that he's never even practiced law.

Jay Wilkinson does indeed have a penchant for sticking his nose where others think it doesn't belong, of winding up in places where he has no prior experience and where experience is a must 99 time out of 100.

But where experience fails, Wilkinson has the brilliance, the Southern charm and the savvy to pull him through. "I set a great deal of store by intelligence and education," says Robert Mason, his predecessor at The Virginian-Pilot. "Certainly, Jay abounds in both."

Men like Jay Wilkinson, those who are both brilliant and brilliantly successful, gather detractors almost as quickly as they gather new challenges. What irks Wilkinson's critics even more is the fact that he generally performs well under fire. But a Federal court judgeship is not a deanship of a law school. The U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals is just one step removed from the Supreme Court, and it is a place where constitution law is molded and life-and-death decisions are made. Wilkinson's judicial quest has brought him under a scrutiny that court clerks and newspaper editors rarely feel, and as a potential launching pad for the Supreme Court, the hot seat grows even warmer.

"At this point, only a select number of people [within the Fourth Circuit] are concerned" about his nomination, says Chan Kendrick, executive director of the Virginia chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union. "If he were to be considered for the Supreme Court, [his record] would be of concern across the board, across the country."

Longtime friends like Linwood Holton flatly dispute any contentions that Wilkinson is plotting a path to the Nation's highest court. "Apointment to the Federal bench is a lifetime appointment," Holton says. "Anybody who goes on the Court of Appeals at his age has a chance to be placed on the Supreme Court, but that is a very remote possibility with anybody. There are only nine every generation. In the sense of being a candidate, I can't imagine anybody would go on the Court of Appeals with 'aspirations' for candidacy for the Supreme Court. You're just not candidates for the Supreme Court. That's not the way it's done."

But Jay Wilkinson never backsteps, does not play bit parts and is rarely satisfied with one achievement for very long. If he wins the seat on the Court of Appeals, it probably will not be his final curtain call. Suddenly, it dawns why Professor Wilkinson looks so out of place in his University of Virginia classroom. The state is too small. Yes, much too small.

The U.S. Department of Justice is a staggering bureaucracy of 4,416 attorneys that both tantalizes with its promise of power and terrifies with the threat of instant anonymity for those haplessly buried by its power maze. Jay Wilkinson was just one more forgettable face when he first appeared at the Justice Department two summers ago. He was on leave from the U.Va. law school, having been named a deputy assistant attorney general in the civil rights division under Assistant Attorney General William Bradford Reynolds. David Vanderhoof, a senior trial attorney in Justice at the time, has trouble recalling his first meeting with Wilkinson: "He made such a small impression on me that when I encountered him again later that same day I didn't know who the hell he was," Vanderhoof says. "He was blah."

He was also Vanderhool's new boss. The senior attorney and others at Justice would soon come to realize that of the many things they might call Jay Wilkinson, blah would not be one of them.

Though Wilkinson's stay in Justice was relatively brief (he left in August 1983), it was memorable. In fact, several cases that came under Wilkinson's jurisdiction are now legend in the department. They also are the source of complaints that the law became a tool to suit Wilkinson's philosophical preferences and political ambitions.

Says Timothy Cook, an attorney whose liberal views often clashed with Wilkinson's when the two worked at Justice, "He writes decisions based on how he thinks a case should turn out politically, not on the basis of the law."

One afternnon, Cook was in his office busily researching a case that grew out of a dispute over services provided to handicapped patients at Baylor University Medical Center when he received an urgent call to report to Wilkinson's office for a group discussion on the case.

In his hand, Wilkinson waved a fistful of paper, "Why are we doing this?" Cook says Wilkinson demanded of his attorneys. "Why are we serving interrogatories on them? Why are we harassing defendants like this?"

Cook exchanged a disbelieving glance with the other attorneys gathered in Wilkinson's office. Wilkinson had failed to note that he was reviewing his own department's answers to interrogatories filed by the other side.

"He didn't understand that the other side had filed the interrogatories on us, and that we had to answer them," says Cook. "On his qualifications to be a judge? He doesn't understand basic pleadings."

According to Cook, Wilkinson's naivete resulted in court fines to the department for the delay in answering the interrogatories. "It's sort of unheard of for department attorneys to be fined for not answering interrogatories," says Cook. "The other part of that is that he didn't understand what was going on."

"There were a number of situations where there would be a court deadline imposed and, in effect, it was of no concern to Wilkinson," says Vanderhoof. "I'm not sure what the reasons were. A portion of it may have been inability to manage time.

"It did not carry well with court officials, and the respect that we may have attained in the past by our pleadings or by our motions was somewhat lost as a result."

If Wilkinson's seeming naiveté about court proceedings frustrated some of his Justice colleagues, they were even more nonplused by his particular style of reasoning. More than an attorney, more than a professor, Wilkinson is a philosopher, a theoretician. Theory is his governing inner voice. When life demands an answer, it is the theoretician in Wilkinson that responds. the trouble, his critics say, is that he reasons from the bottom up. He doesn't decide what the questions should be until he already has decided the answers.

Wilkinson and Reynolds took the Reagan Administration's anti-Federalist policies into their Justice posts, angering other attorneys, many of whom had been in Justice through less conservative administrations, with a blatant reluctance to involve the government in civil rights cases. "These were the same types cases, raised similar issues, in which the Jusitce Department historically participated in the past," noted Vanderhoof. "Not only did Reynolds and Wilkinson avoid venturing into new areas, they ran backwards, reusing to participate in cases that the Administration normally would've taken."

Stephen A. Whinston, former senior trial attorney now in private practice in Philadelphia, says: "The bottom line would always be the most restrictive interpretation possible, one that would afford people that we were supposed to be representing the least rights possible. It was their very philosophical view that the government shouldn't be involved in civil rights enforcement," when in fact, civil rights enforcement was their department's raison d'detre, Whinston says.

"It's hard to know who was really the source," Whinston continues. "They took a very specific philosophical viewpoint on various civil rights issues and tailored arguments and briefs to be consistent with that."

Perhaps one of the most notable examples involved the San Antonio, Texas, jail case, revolving around the treatment of inmates and jail conditions, including the number of single cells provided.

The county's plans called for housing 30 percent of the jail population in single cells, the minimum requirement under Texas jail standards. Suspecting that a much higher percentage of the San Antonio inmates were high risk and should be in single cells, Justice Department attorneys wanted to request that county officials conduct a professional study to determine a valid percentage. Wilkinson ignored their suggestion, instructing the attorneys to use 55 percent—an arbitrary number—as the department's recommendation. The trial attorneys didn't want to be responsible for defending Wilkinson's figure in court, since it basically had been plucked out of thin air. When such a number is chosen, explains one former Justice Department attorney now employed in the private sector, it usually is based on a piece of solid information—a prior case, an expert opinion, a state statute or a consent decree, which, in this case, stated that only low-risk inmates could be placed in multi-inmate housing. "But Jay pulled that number [55] off the top of his head," the attorney aruged, "and the trial attorneys were expected to back it up."

Said another, "It would've been difficult for the Administration to support Wilkinson's fifty-five percent figure."

According to a number of sources employed in the civil rights division at the time, the trial attorneys asked Wilkinson to omit the 55 percent recommendation as being unfounded. Wilkinson refused to bend. Only when the attorneys persuaded Wilkinson's youthful legal assistant, Frank Atkinson, to intervene did Wilkinson back down. No numerical recommendation was offered.

Wilkinson refused to be interviewed, as he has refused all interviews since the confirmation proceeding began for the Federal judgeship. (He had also earlier refused to defend himself against criticism at Senate confirmation hearings.)

Atkinson does not deny the incident, but his recollection of it, he says, "is clouded."

In still another case, Stewart v. Rhodes, an Ohio case regarding prison overcrowding, the initial memo prepared by the Justice Department declared the double-celling of prisoners in less than 50 square feet unconstitutional.

"The cells in this prison happened to be 48 square feet," recalls Whinston, "so under that initial memo, the prison would have been unconstitutional. But Jay crossed out 'fifty' and penciled in 'forty-five.' By changing it, it was obvious to me that he simply didn't want to argue that the prison was unconstitutional."

It should be noted that the ruling precedent in this case was Rhodes v. Chapman, a Supreme Court decision handed down in 1981, which rejects setting a specific floor-space requirement per inmate. It does, however, require that overall prison conditions be considered when determining if prisoners' rights are being violated. But in Stewart v. Rhodes, Ohio officials wanted to know what the Justice Department would consider permissible in terms of space.

Whinston was rankled. "Both numbers—forty-five and fifty—were arbitrary," he explains. When viewed in the context of the case, a different picture of the department's stance on prisoners' rights emerges. "The first arbitrary designation, 'fifty,' would say that double-celling in that prison was unconstitutional. The second arbitrary designation, 'forty-five' would say that the double-celling was unconstitutional. Therefore, it is logical to draw the conclusion that his arbitrary figure of 'forty-five' was not based on a study of the law. Rather it was what is known as 'result-oriented.' Wilkinson wanted to make a certain argument, and he shaped his reasoning based on the conclusion that he wanted to come to rather than logically reasoning the case and finding out where that reasoning would lead. In other words, he worked from the bottom up."

Although attorneys were unsure in other cases whether the source of restriction was Wilkinson or Reynolds, Wilkinson is severely chastised by colleagues for going to bat for his boss at times when Reynolds clearly appeared to be throwing sticks into the spokes of the wheels of justice.

In one case involving rights for the handicapped, Nelson V. Thornburgh, the department was expected to file a "friend of the court" brief. Reynolds argued that the case could not be reviewed in time to file within the court deadline. Anxious for some statement of views from the department, the court allowed for a late filing. Cook drafted the brief and submitted it to Reynolds.

"It was edited beyond recognition," charges Cook. The most obvious and disturbing deletion was a ruling decision of the Supreme Court.

"It appeared to me that he was once again attempting to throw a case," Cook later stated in a lengthy resignation letter. Dismayed, Cook confronted Wilkinson. "That was Reynold's order," Cook says Wilkinson responded. "Brad doesn't like that case."

"You mean to tell me that we've left out a decision of the U.S. Supreme Court, never overruled, directly on point, merely because Mr. Reynolds doesn't agree with it?" Cook exploded.

Wilkinson defended his superior. "Brad thinks it's too broad," he replied, according to Cook. "Besides, you're lucky you got what you did. Some people appointed by this Administration don't think Section 504 [of the Civil Rights Act] requires any affirmative obligations at all."

Cook became so disgruntled he resigned from the department, but not before he submitted a letter to Attorney General William French Smith citing what he considered extreme laxness in enforcement—"thirty to forty instances where Reynolds and Wilkinson refused to enforce civil rights laws, mostly relating to the rights of the handicapped, because that was my area," says Cook, now director of the Western Law Center for the Handicapped, located at Loyola University. "But I also spoke to a good number of lawyers in the department and learned that it went on in other areas such as in suits involving sex and race discrimination as well."

Still, Vanderhoof does not believe what he considers "improprieties," such as the changes in the San Antonio jail case, will affect Wilkinson's chances for a Federal judgeship. "In this Administration, if you do well and don't cause much of a problem, you may be considered for judicial appointment," says Vanderhoof.

No one is exactly sure how the name of J. Harvie Wilkinson III made its way to the sanctity of the White House, but it was on the tip of the President's tongue when time came for a Presidental recommendation for the seat on the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, Fourth District, which encompasses Virginia, West Virginia, North and South Carolina and Maryland. "He was pleased," notes one observer, "but obviously not surprised."

As much as his meteoric rise surprised some observers, it never surprised Wilkinson or those who watched him grow up. In Richmond, there is a West End, that ever-growing expanse extending toward Goochland and populated by the upwardly mobile, and then there is the West End, a much smaller, exclusive, confined, refined area that lies just north of the James River and includes Windsor Farms and Westmoreland Place. Wilton and the E. Claiborne Robins estate. The elder of two sons of a bank president, Jay Wilkinson grew up on Richmond's most sacred breeding ground, that West End recognized by multigeneration Richmonders.

(Eventually, he married from within the area. Lossie Noell spent her early years in the West End, attending St. Catherine's School before going off to the all-female Mary Baldwin College.)

When Jay and his brother, Lewis, were ready for school, St. Christopher's was the logical choice. Both grew up with a cultivated interest in sports for which Lewis credits his mother. Country clubbers often caught glimpses of Letitia Wilkinson batting balls to her boys on the tennis courts on summer mornings. While Lewis diversified his sports skills, taking up baseball and other sports, Jay bore down and developed a mean game of tennis, playing on school teams through college and serious social games thereafter.

By his sophomore year, Wilkinson had done just about all there was to do at St. Christopher's. As a freshman, his extracurricular activities included Student Council, Honor Council, Missionary Society and president of the Lee Literary Society. Clearly, it was time to move on, so Jay went to board at Lawrenceville School in New Jersey.

In the early 60's, when seeds of revolution were sprouting in Ivy League colleges and large universities alike, the prep school counterparts were as yet untouched. Lawrenceville boys wore coats and ties to class, went to sports in the afternoons and looked forward to the three or four tea dances spaced through the school year.

In Boarding school, only the strong survive. When you're small for your age and smarter than most of your classmates, like Wilkinson, it can be a harrowing experience—unless you're extremely charming and an all-around good guy, that is.

At Lawrenceville, Wilkinson emerged as a quiet leader, excelling in tennis and academics, eventually becoming editor of the school newspaper.

"Jay was a great success at school," says Richard Quintal, a New York banker who shared a six-bed suite with Wilkinson for three years in Lawrenceville's Griswold House.

"He was bright, but not a jerk," adds former classmate John H.W. Crinell of Washington. "He was one of the few people I knew who wasn't that way. He was quiet in an outgoing way. Not boisterous and crazy, but bright, easy to get along with."

Wilkinson picked up speed at Yale. Although he claims that his undergraduate grades showed room for improvment, he managed to be elected to Phi Beta Kappa and to graduate magna cum laude.

His senior year, Wilkinson was named one of 14 Scholars of the House, a distinction which carries with it the latitude to refuse all classes in the fourth year to pursue one avenue of study. Wilkinson's choice was to write a paper on the Byrds and Virginia politics. What was initially completed as a 50-page manuscript entitled "Harry Byrd and the Changing Face of Virginia Politics" was soon published into a 12-chapter documentary and analytical history of state politics spanning the 22 years of the Byrd reign between the mid-40's and mid-60's. By the age of 23, Jay Wilkinson had published his first book. It caught the eye of Linwood Holton, then soon-to-be Governor Holton.

"I looked him up specifically because he sounded like a bright young man who was ready to break out of the Democratic establishment, which I knew he was bound to be with his family background, and into something new, the Republican competitive system of two parties, that I was working on," Holton says. "He sounded from his book like he would be open to new ideas."

When Holton first contacted him, Wilkinson was serving a year in the Army reserves. "As soon as he was out of the service and back in law school, I went up to Charlottesville and had dinner with him," Holton says. That was the start of a long-term friendship.

It was through that friendship that Holton met Jay's father, United Virginia Bank president J. Harvie Wilkinson Jr. As governor, it was Holton's job to appoint the University of Virginia Board of Visitors of which the elder Wilkinson was a member. "I had gotten to know Harvie Junior pretty well," recounts Holton. "I suggested to him that if he did not want to be reappointed to the board that I was going to consider appointing Jay in his place." It was unprecedented to appoint a law student to the Board of Visitors, but Holton did not hesitate: He appointed J. Harvie Wilkinson III.

The governor nurtured the mentor-protégé relationship. Wilkinson was a major draftsman of Holton's 1970 inaugural address, and later that same year, Holton convinced the 25-year-old student to run against Satterfield for the third Congressional seat. Just six years earlier, in 1964, Wilkinson had worked to elect Satterfield, a longtime family friend, and the following summer, Wilkinson was an intern in Satterfield's office.

Now, the Congressman discovered that his intern was opening up a campaign office and digging in to do battle against him. "Clearly, this one is one we're going to write up as a win," a confident Holton was quoted as saying.

"He was a personable young man," Holton said recently. "He obviously had potential in politics. That was certainly evidenced in his book, in his participation in my campaign as an advisor and speechwriter. I felt that with his background in Richmond, he probably could win."

Satterfield claims he was somewhat surprised. "I didn't think he'd be running against me, but you don't think about those things. I did feel like he was being pushed rather rapidly."

Wilkinson was crushed under Satterfield's landslide victory. One political analyst called it "the biggest misstep of Jay's career." Concurs Satterfield, "I thought he had a future in politics. I'm afraid he got pushed faster than he should have been. Who was pushing him? The Governor of Virginia, Linwood Holton."

Perhaps it was the congressional defeat that led Wilkinson to replace his fervor for politics with a fascination and obsession with the Supreme Court. In his final year of law school, he applied for clerk positions with Justices Byron White and Potter Stewart and was invited along with a handful of other applicants to come to Washington for interviews. He was not chosen by either.

Shortly thereafter, President Richard M. Nixon announced on national television that Lewis Powell had been chosen to fill the vacancy left by the death of Justice Hugo Black.

Jay was jubilant. "Lewis Powell!" he wrote in Serving Justice, his 1974 book reflecting on his year at the Supreme Court. "The Supreme Court had, I felt, been saved and along with it, I could not help thinking, my chances for clerkship." Justice Powell was confirmed in December 1971.

"'Dear Jay,' his letter to me began," wrote Wilkinson. "'I have ascertained that one of Mr. Justice Black's three clerks will not remain at the Court after the first of the year. Accordingly. . . .' Already, I had begun writing my acceptance."

It appeared that family connections had once again paved the way. Unlike most Supreme Court law clerks, Wilkinson had never clerked at any court. "It's ordinarily a two-step process," notes Larry Hammond, another of Justice Powell's clerks at the time. "Jay came straight to the Supreme Court. He may have been the only person to do that, or maybe there was one other. Basically, he had no experience base of his own to rely upon from having been a law clerk."

But once in position, Wilkinson responded true to form. Says Justice Powell, "Of my forty-five law clerks, Jay was certainly among the best." Notes Hammond: "Even with that very modest handicap [no experience], he did quite a splendid job. Of course, he knew Lewis Powell, and Powell knew him and his family, so he had no difficulty getting to know the Justice or developing a rapport. But one of the things that I most admired Justice Powell for was that he never drew any lines of demarcation among his clerks. he treated all of us as if we were part of his family," even, Hammond recalls, when it came to gently chiding Wilkinson to take home the basketball shoes and running shorts that had stayed a bit too long under his desk.

Hammond says Wilkinson took no liberties or advantages of his personal ties to Powell." Indeed, there were some cases where I felt the temptation to have Jay involved in looking at a particular question, or trying to decide how it ought to come out, just because I had the mistaken notion that if Jay were persuaded that it was right, then maybe the Justice would be. It never turned out to be true or to make any difference one way or the other."

Wilkinson returned to Charlottesville after the clerkship to begin the first of three professional stints at U.Va.'s law school. He stayed the first time for five years, until 1978 when he took a leave of absence to join the staff of The Virginian-Pilot. If it seemed an odd detour for someone with judicial aspirations, it was a perfect grandstand and one that allowed Wilkinson to hone his conservative philosophies and share them with thousands of daily readers, including periodic railings against forced busing to achieve racial desegregation.

It was yet another foray into the unknown, and it was immediately obvious to those around him that the Pilot was just one more stopover. "He couldn't even type," remarks Smith. worse yet, he refused to learn.

"It became a cynical joke in the newsroom," says one former editor. "He had no understanding of how a newspaper works. He'd write his piece and go home."

Wilkinson had another habit that sometimes irked co-workers. He would take off in the middle of the day for a jog. "It didn't matter what was happening in the world," recalls former editorial writer Smith.

Perhaps he was using the time to think. In the evenings of that first year at the Pilot, Wilkinson turned his attention back to the court, completing his third book, From Brown to Bakke, focusing on the Supreme Court and school integration from 1954–78.

Not untypically, his entree to the Pilot reportedly was a friend. Attorney John O. Wynne, then on the corporate staff of Landmark Communications, is thought to be responsible for Wilkinson's emergence as an editorial page editor.

"I do not think Jay would have come to the Pilot as editor if not for Wynne," said one former Pilot news executive. "Wynne became his champion. He backed him to [then-publisher] Perry Morgan and [Landmark chairman] Frank Batten."

It was a grand match. Before long, Wilkinson was beating Morgan and Batten in tennis at Princess Anne Country Club. He apparently was also very persuasive off the court. Under Wilkinson's flourish, many of the paper's long-held editorial stands were overthrown. In one such change, its long-standing opposition to the death penalty was reversed. The overall position of the editorial page policy went from moderately liberal to conservative. But such changes, radical as they may seem, are within the domain of the editorial page editor, which Wilkinson was.

Not everyone, Smith included, agreed with the stands suggested by Wilkinson. "All of us editorial writers were expected to express our opinions in a rational, persuasive way," Smith comments. "Having been reporters at some time in our careers, we were trained to analyze things objectively and then to draw conclusions based on where the facts led us. I felt that Jay came at it from a different discipline: partisan politics. I felt that he always couched his opinions in such a way that would protect his political future."

"He showed a lack of compassion in his editorial positions," said his predecessor Robert Mason. "I thought Jay lacked sensitivity about the poor and downtrodden."

But it is Wilkinson's editorials on political influence and experience that add a touch of irony to his quest for the Fourth Circuit judgeship. During Wilkinson's Pilot tenure, an editorial entitled "Choosing Judges on Merit" was published, which criticized the politics involved in the selection of Virginia judges. A later editorial, which Wilkinson either wrote or at least approved, began: "Judges ought to be selected on the basis of merit, not on the basis of political ties."

His most assertive maneuvering came when William Rehnquist was named to the Supreme Court leaving Rehnquist's job as the Justice Department counsel vacant. "When they were filling all the slots in the Justice Department, Jay picked out the job he wanted," says Smith. "It was the one Rehnquist had held. His theory was that it was a good launching pad for the Supreme Court."

According to Smith, Wilkinson was told that the spot as Assistant Attorney General had been filled. "He came back and told me that they'd offered him two other jobs. He said he'd turned them both down because he wasn't sure that either would be advantageous down the road."

The following summer, 1982, Wilkinson took the deputy's job in Justice. Less than a year later, he was jockeying for the Fourth Circuit seat. He made his desires known "to several people," including Rep. G. William Whitehurst (R-2nd), as early as last summer. In a conversation with the Congressman, he indicated that "he wanted it," says David Bushnell, a Whitehurst aide. "The Congressman informed him that he respected that, but that he was supporting someone else."

Whitehurst's was not the last opposition Wilkinson would face in his court bid. Civil rights groups launched salvos against his candidacy based on Wilkinson's lack of legal experience, saying he was no more qualified to be a judge than some of their own counterparts who had been overlooked. In February, a handful of witnesses argued before the Senate Judiciary Committee that his approval would be unfair when blacks, women and other minorities have been denied Federal court appointments for lack of legal experience.

Their hue and cry was later taken up by three United States senators who tried to block Wilkinson's confirmation. In March, when the committee ended three months of speculation over the confirmation by voting to recommend him, Senator Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., protested. "By ramming this through, you're sending a message to millions of women in our society, women with better recommendations and experience than Mr. Wilkinson has. It's a dual standard, my friends," he shouted.

What Senators Kennedy, Joseph R. Biden Jr. (D-Del.) and Howard M. Metzenbaum (D-Ohio) most stridently objected to was the American Bar Association's rating of "qualified." Although the rating is normally awarded to those who have been admitted to the bar for 12 years or more, exceptions have been made. Wilkinson hit the 12-year mark on Feb. 1, three months after his nomination. ABA president Frederick G. Buesser Jr. responded to their protests in a letter pointing out that several candidates have been found qualified with fewer years at the bar than Wilkinson, including two women and one Hispanic male.

More dust was raised when it was revealed that Justice Powell, in what has been described as an unusual move for a sitting justice, had personally contacted an ABA committee member and friend and put in a good word for Wilkinson. Justice Powell denied any wrongdoing. At the ABA's request, he also had written a letter of evaluation to Democratic members of the Senate Judiciary Committee in which he called Wilkinson "an exceptionally gifted legal scholar and a compassionate and thoughtful human being."

There are some who believe that politics has had a role in delaying confirmation, that if Democrats can stall a vote until after the election, there might be a new President, with a different preference. For, while liberals rail against Wilkinson's lack of experience, what really frightens them are his philosophies.

Chan Kendrick, of the American Civil Liberties Union, says his group hasn't taken an official stand. However, notes Kendrick, "If I were among the people opposing his nomination who believe he is bright enough and articulate enough to be appointed to the Supreme Court, I would oppose it now and every step of the way. The record [of opposition] should be built now; the controversy should be created now."

For now, it is still Federal Courts class, not the Federal court, that is occupying Wilkinson's attention.

To watch Wilkinson here is to see him at home base, the stage he has returned to three times since he first took up teaching in 1973. To watch him here also is to see a bit of the relentless quality, the dogged pursuit that has driven Wilkinson these nearly 40 years.

"He's lively and aggressive," says one third-year student who's glad to be getting out of Wilkinson's class. "He goes after students for their ideas. And if they're unprepared, he lets them know, in front of the class, that they'd better be prepared next time. Other professors don't do that in third year classes."

Federal court class has let out for the summer. The auditorium is empty, his students having gone on to permanent jobs. Permanence: It's a value lacking in Jay Wilkinson's life. Perhaps a lifetime appointment to the Federal bench would harness him. Perhaps not. It's a new stage, a bigger stage. Another opening, another show.

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, DC, May 17, 1984.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: We are writing to express our concern over the nomination of J. Harvie Wilkinson III of Virginia to be a judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit. Mr. Wilkinson is currently Associate Professor of Law at the University of Virginia Law School, and briefly served as a deputy attorney general in the Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice during this administration.

The nomination was reported favorably to the Senate by the Judiciary Committee by a vote of 11-5 on March 15 and is now on the Senate calendar. The Majority Leader has announced his intention to proceed to the consideration of the nomination shortly.

This nomination is not ready for action by the Senate.

The nomination was submitted to the Senate on November 10, 1983. A Judiciary Committee hearing was held on November 16, at which Wilkinson was the only witness. The nomination lapsed at the end of the First Session of the 98th Congress, and was resubmitted to the Second Session on January 30, 1984. A further hearing was held on February 22, 1984, at which Wilkinson also appeared and at which numerous public witnesses testified in opposition to his nomination.

At the second hearing and in subsequent published reports, substantial and disturbing questions were raised for the first time about the nomination, including the procedures used by the American Bar Association's Standing Committee on Federal Judiciary to evaluate Mr. Wilkinson, and the role of the Justice Department, the nominee himself and others in the evaluation process.

The initial confidential in-depth investigation of Wilkinson by the ABA Committee member for Virginia assigned to carry out the investigation raised serious concerns about his qualifications. Under the Committee procedures, a second member was then named to assist in the investigation. A single formal report was prepared for the 14-member Committee, with the first investigator concluding that Wilkinson was "Unqualified" and the second investigator finding him "Qualified."

Wilkinson has zero trial experience. If confirmed, he would become the first judge to take a seat on a Circuit Court of Appeals with no trail experience.

A double standard is being applied by the ABA Committee for the benefit of Wilkinson. During the previous Administration, the Committee guidelines on trial experience were enforced inflexibly to disqualify women and minority candidates who actually had substantial trial experience. Two cases illustrate the point:

(1) Carin A. Clauss was the Department of Labor Solicitor responsible for supervising the litigation of the Department's three hundred attorneys. In a preliminary finding, she was rated "Unqualified" by the ABA to be a federal district judge and her nomination was not submitted.

(2) Joan Krauskopf, a member of the bar for 20 years, had been in private practice in Colorado, had supervised a legal aid clinic in Missouri, and had handled cases as a court-appointed attorney and in a pro bono capacity. After an initial investigation, she was rated "Unqualified" by the ABA to be a federal appellate judge for the Eighth Circuit, and her nomination was not submitted.

Wilkinson, who was admitted to the bar in 1972, in fact has fewer years as a member of the bar than any Circuit Court nominee from the creation of the Circuit Courts of Appeal in 1891 through the end of 1980. And three of those years were actually spent outside the field of law, as an editorial writer for the Virginian-Pilot newspaper. In an editorial of July 29, 1983, the Virginian-Pilot opposed the nomination.

Numerous requests by several Senators for an additional Judiciary Committee hearing on the nomination to clear up these allegations have been unsuccessful. A proposed hearing on ABA procedures, tentatively scheduled for May 17, 1984, by the Judiciary Subcommittee on Courts, was indefinitely postponed on May 10 to avoid addressing the Wilkinson nomination prior to consideration of the nomination by the full Senate.

The Senate has a responsibility to have the full record on this nomination before it, in advance of the vote on whether Wilkinson should be confirmed as a judge with life tenure on the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals. Also, the nominee has the right to refute the allegations and answer the questions—set out fully in the attachment hereto—which have been raised about his qualifications and fitness since the Committee hearing. It would be extremely embarrassing if negative answers to the questions surrounding this nomination were revealed after the nominee is sitting on the federal appellate bench. We believe that the record can be completed by a one day hearing at which Wilkinson, ABA Committee members, and Justice Department officials would be invited to testify.

There is no doubt that J. Harvie Wilkinson III, who is 39 years old, is a bright young lawyer and a popular professor at the University of Virginia Law School. But the unanswered questions that have been raised about his nomination cast grave doubts on his fitness, maturity, and temperament to serve as a judge of the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals.

The Senate's duty to advise and consent means more than rubber-stamping a nominee. The Senate should not be bound by the investigation or the recommendation of the ABA. Until the many questions surrounding the Wilkinson nomination are responsibly addressed, the Senate should withhold action on the nomination.

For these reasons, when and if the Senate turns to the consideration of the Wilkinson nomination, we intend to offer a motion to recommit the nomination to the Judiciary Committee for the purpose of holding another hearing.

The integity of the judicial selection process is fundamental to the integrity of our judicial system. We must not abdicate our responsibility to assure that the Senate confirmation proceedings are full, fair and unbiased. We urge you to join us in supporting the motion to recommit the Wilkinson nomination to the Judiciary Committee.

Sincerely,

EDWARD M. KENNEDY.

ALLEGATIONS OF QUESTIONABLE ACTIVITIES RELATING TO THE WILKINSON NOMINATION

Officials of the Justice Department obtained and improperly devulged the results of the confidential investigation to the nominee, informing him that the ABA investigating committee members were in disagreement, that a vote was about to be taken by the Committee, and that his approval by the Committee was in jeopardy.

The nominee used the information improperly obtained from Justice Department officials to organize an intensive lobbying campaign on his behalf to persuade the ABA Committee to rate him "Qualified."

Officials of the Justice Department who were supporters of Wilkinson conducted their own lobbying campaign to secure enough votes for a rating of "Qualified" by the ABA Committee.

Supreme Court Justice Lewis F. Powell, Jr. was also part of the lobbying campaign. Wilkinson served in the 1970's as a law clerk to Powell, who had known the Wilkinson family well for many years. Powell has initially been contacted by the two ABA Committee investigators. The second investigator told Powell that the first investigator was compiling a negative report on Wilkinson. Powell then contacted a third member of the Committee whom Powell knew, and lobbied for Wilkinson.

Key votes on the ABA Committee were changed because of the lobbying campaign and telephone calls directed by the nominee and others. The Chairman of the Committee stated that "it was the timing of these calls which was objectionable."

The ABA Committee was concerned enough about the lobbying campaign on Wilkinson, that it summoned Justice Department officials to the ABA midwinter meeting in Las Vegas in February, 1984 to reprimand them.

Notwithstanding the ABA Committee's written guidelines which recommend substantial trial experience and specify at least some trial experience as a minimum requirement for approval, the ABA Committee found Wilkinson to be "Qualified." The Committee has never before given a "Qualified" rating to such a nominee.

Other academics nominated for federal appellate judgeships and found "Qualified" by the ABA Committee in fact had far more distinguished credentials than Wilkinson, far more years at the bar, and at least limited trial experience.

In addition to his improper activities during his confirmation process, Wilkinson participated in interviewing at least one candidate for the Fourth Circuit vacancy he has been nominated to fill, after he expressed interest in being nominated to fill that vacancy.

UNANSWERED QUESTIONS OF THE WILKINSON NOMINATION

The questions which the Senate needs answered before it votes on the Wilkinson nomination include the following:

What did Wilkinson do with the information that his nomination was in trouble, which he obtained improperly from Justice Department officials?

Whom did Wilkinson ask to contact ABA Committee members?

What effect did Wilkinson's lobbying have on the ABA Committee decision to find him qualified?

What do Wilkinson's actions in furtherance of his nomination reveal about his suitability to be a federal appellate judge?

Why was Wilkinson's nomination in trouble with the ABA Committee before the intensive lobbying campaign was launched by Wilkinson and others?

What effect did lobbying by Justice Department officials and Justice Powell have on the decision of the ABA to find Wilkinson qualified?

Why did the ABA discard its guidelines concerning time at the bar and trial experience to find Wilkinson qualified?

How would ABA have rated Wilkinson absent the lobbying campaign?

Can it be fairly said that Wilkinson is qualified to be a federal judge?

[From the Asheville (N.C.) Citizen, Apr. 3 1984]

REAGAN COURT CHOICE LACKS QUALIFICATIONS

One of the enduring measurements of a president is the quality of his judicial appointments. So if President Reagan's choice of J. Harvie Wilkinson III to fill a vacancy on the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals is indicative of this chief executive's record, then he and the public are in deep trouble. The court hears cases from the Carolinas, the Virginias and Maryland.

Wilkinson, a University of Virginia law professor, should not have been appointed. He lacks the basic credentials of an appeals court judge.

His lack of qualifications is staggering. He has no judicial experience. He has never had a private client. He has yet to argue a case in court. He has never drafted a legal brief by himself. He has been in the law for only eight years. He is not even entitled to practice before either the appeals court or any of the trial courts it supervises.

What happened to the American Bar Association standards that appointees to the appellate courts have at least 12 years of legal experience and "substantial" trial experience?

Some powerful people are asking that question. They should ask it.

Fact is, there is just enough evidence available to believe the ABA, self-appointed guardian of the nation's courts and law, caved in to political pressure on the Wilkinson nomination. ABA screening committee members now admit to being contacted by two of Wilkinson's friends prior to the panel's vote on the nomination. The committee decided to waive the requirements cited above regarding legal and trial experience.

What do you think would have happened if a woman or black with Wilkinson's lack of legal credentials had come before the august ABA? The ABA would have found the woman or black unqualified. The Senate Judiciary Committee would have balked. The President would have been forced to withdraw the nomination.

A double standard is at work in this case. There is one standard imposed for women, blacks, and most white nominees to appellate courts. There is another standard for nominees in the Reagan ideological mold. A Washington lawyer did not exaggerate much when he said: "This nomination is symbolic of a con game. The administration talks of merit selection, but Mr. Wilkinson is probably the least experienced appellate nominee ever seen."

Wilkinson's nomination brings to mind the story involving House Speaker Sam Rayburn's visit to the Kennedy White House and his introduction to "the best and brightest."

Mr. Sam returned to his protege, Lyndon Johnson, and offered, "Lyndon, I'd feel a lot better if one of those fellas had run for sheriff."

If Wilkinson becomes a member of the 4th Circuit bench, some lawyers and clients appearing before him may harbor thoughts similar to Mr. Sam's: "If only this guy had tried a case . . ."

A scholarly temperament indeed is a necessary requirement for an appellate judge. Wilkinson, because he teaches law, may possess that ability. But his lack of judicial experience disqualifies him for this position. President Reagan should withdraw the nomination, or the Senate Judiciary Committee should reject it. This man has no business on a court that is one heartbeat away from the Supreme Court, and one heartbeat away from a trial court to which he is a stranger.

[From the (Norfolk) Virginian Pilot, July 29, 1983]

WILKINSON AS JUDGE?

News reports indicate that the Reagan administration is going to nominate J. Harvie Wilkinson III, a former editor of The Virginian-Pilot, for the vacant judgeship on the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals. If so, it is further evidence that the administration, in selecting federal judges, does not place judicial experience high on its list of criteria.

What should those criteria be? Certainly an administration would want to consider a potential judge's (1) judicial philosophy, (2) age, (3) intellect and (4) experience.

As far as the Reagan administration is concerned, Mr. Wilkinson fits categories (1), (2) and (3) perfectly. He is a conservative. He is young enough, 38, to serve on the bench for many years and thus inject his philosophy into the federal judiciary. And he has shown a powerful intellect in his years as author, law-school professor and editorial writer.

On experience, however, Mr. Wilkinson comes up short. As a law clerk at the U.S. Supreme Court and as a professor of law, he has learned the legal process. But that is not the same as actually participating in trials.

This is the same drawback that faced the administration's first choice for the judgeship, Kenneth W. Starr, who was opposed by Virginian Sen. John W. Warner and now has been nominated for a seat on U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

In March, writing about the possibility of the Starr nomination, we noted his limited experience and added: "Obviously, he is a bright young man in a hurry, and no doubt his time will come—but what's the rush?

The same question applies to Mr. Wilkinson. His credentials are substantial. Without a doubt, the Reagan administration could make a far worse choice. The question that should be considered, however, is whether the administration can find a judge with all Mr. Wilkinson's attributes—plus experience in the courtroom.

EXCERPTS FROM EVALUATION CRITERIA OF THE AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION ON APPOINTMENTS TO THE DISTRICT COURTS, THE COURTS OF APPEALS AND THE OTHER LOWER FEDERAL COURTS

As to experience, the Committee believes that ordinarily a prospective appointee to the federal bench should have been admitted to the bar for at least twelve years. Substantial trial experience (as a lawyer or a trial judge) is important for prospective nominees to both the appellate courts and the trial courts. Additional experience which is similar to court trial work—such as appearing before or serving on administrative agencies or arbitration boards, teaching trial advocacy or other clinical law school courses, etc.—is considered in evaluating a prospective nominee's trial experience qualifications. In exceptional cases, when there is significant evidence of distinguished accomplishment in the field of law, an individual with limited trial experience may be found qualified.

In evaluating experience, the Committee recognizes that women and members of certain minority groups have entered the profession in large numbers only in recent years and that their opportunities for advancement in the profession may have been limited.

The Committee believes that political activity and public service are valuable experience, but that such activity and service are not a substitute for significant experience in the practice of law.

* * * * *

Recognizing that an appellate judge deals primarily with records, briefs, appellate advocates and colleagues (in contrast to witnesses, parties, jurors, live testimony and the theater of the courtroom), the Committee may place somewhat less emphasis on the importance of extensive trial experience as a qualification for the appellate courts. This same contrast in day-to-day experience may also cause the Committee to evaluate temperament for the appellate courts in slightly different terms.

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington. DC, March 5, 1984.

Mr. FREDERICK G. BUESSER,
Chairman, Standing Committee on Federal Judiciary, American Bar Association, 1800 M Street, NW., Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. BUESSER: We are writing as members of the Senate Judiciary Committee to inquire about the method by which the Standing Committee on Federal Judiciary has interpreted the American Bar Association's guidelines in assessing the qualifications of Mr. J. Harvie Wilkinson III, who has been nominated to be a member of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit.

As we understand it, the ABA guidelines suggest that nominees for federal appellate courts should have been admitted to the bar for at least 12 years and should have substantial trial experience. We are concerned about two issues relating to the application of these guidelines in the Wilkinson case.

First, there is the appearance that the Standing Committee's action in this case is unprecedented, and that the committee has applied a double standard in rating Mr. Wilkinson "qualified." We are particularly concerned about testimony that, on numerous occasions in recent years, the committee has applied the guidelines inflexibly, and has advised Administrations that women and minority nominees who do not meet the twelve year/trial experience tests would not be found "qualified" by the ABA, with the result that such candidates were not even considered for nomination to the federal judiciary.

Second, we are concerned about published reports of lobbying activities designed to influence members of the Standing Committee in their application of the ABA guidelines and in their assessment of Mr. Wilkinson's qualifications.

We would appreciate your detailed response to these concerns, so that as we consider Mr. Wilkinson's nomination, we may have a complete understanding of the procedures followed by the Standing Committee.

Sincerely,

EDWARD M. KENNEDY.
JOSEPH R. BIDEN, JR.
HOWARD M. METZENBAUM.

AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION, STANDING COMMITTEE ON FEDERAL JUDICIARY, 33 WEST MONROE STREET, 7TH FLOOR, Chicago, IL, March 12, 1984.

Hon. STROM THURMOND,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR THURMOND: I respond to the March 5 letter from Senators Kennedy, Biden and Metzenbaum with reference to the pending nomination of Mr. James Harvie Wilkinson, III. In doing so, it may be helpful to review the Committee's standard operating procedures.

The process begins when the Justice Department asks the Chairman that a candidate be investigated for a particular vacancy. Ordinarily the matter is referred to the Committee member for the circuit in which the vacancy exists, assuming that such member is readily available and nor already overburdened. At the same time the Justice Department sends the Personal Data Questionnaire to the candidate with instructions to complete it and furnish a copy to the Chairman, the circuit member and the Justice Department.

The circuit member conducts an in-depth investigation. If in the course of that investigation concerns develop, he advises the Chairman and suggests that a seconds Committee member become involved to assist in the investigation. This is not an uncommon occurrence.

Such was the case in the Wilkinson matter and a second Committee member was designated to assist in the investigation. The two members worked together and interviewed the candidate. A single report on his qualifications was prepared. It was accompanied by separate statements of the two investigators in which each cited the conclusions he had reached. One member found the candidate qualified. The other found him not qualified. The report was circulated to all members together with the differing opinions of the two circuit members. A substantial majority of the Committee found Mr. Wilkinson qualified; a minority found him not qualified. When Mr. Wilkinson was nominated both the Senate Judiciary Committee and the candidate were advised of the ratings. The Committee does not reveal how its members voted but the term "subsantial majority" has been adopted to indicate that the candidate has strong, but not unanimous, endorsement.

It must be understood that when a Formal Report has been prepared by one or more circuit members and circulated to the entire Committee, each circuit member considers the matter privately and makes his own decision as to the rating he believes appropriate. Such ratings are promptly conveyed to the Chairman and tabulated. Decisions are a matter of individual judgment and it is impossible to know the precise rationale which prompted each one.

Our guidelines provided "that ordinarily a prospective appointee to the federal bench should have been admitted to the bar for at least twelve years" (emphasis added). Our records indicate that Mr. Wilkinson was admitted to the Bar of the State of Virginia on February 1, 1972. When his name was sent to us for investigation at the end of July of 1983, he then had virtually, and certainly by now, satisfied the 12 year requirements.

Your letter states that "We are particularly concerned about testimony that, on numerous occasions in recent years, the Committee has applied the guidelines inflexibly, and has advised The Administration that women and minority nominees who do not meet the twelve year/trial experience tests would not be found 'qualified' by the ABA. . . ." Several years ago the Committee, in recognition of the relatively recent influx of substantial numbers of women and minorities into the legal profession, amended its standards to provide:

"In evaluating experience, the Committee recognizes that women and members of certain minority groups have entered the profession in large numbers only in recent years and that their opportunities for advancement in the profession may have been limited."

The suggestion that in recent years the Committee "has applied the guidelines inflexibly" to the detriment of women and minority nominees is not borne out by the facts. Of the eleven candidates with less than twelve years at the bar who were rated qualified or better by our Committee during the Carter Administration, time at the bar ranged from five years in one instance to eleven years in six instances. Two candidates had been admitted eight years, one nine years and another ten years. These included four women, one of whom was a member of a minority; five men who were members of minorities and two Caucasian men.

During the Reagan Administration there have been five candidates admitted to the bar less than twelve years who the Committee found qualified. Two of these were women, one was an Hispanic male and two were Caucasian males.

Our evaluation criteria further provide:

"Substantial trial experience (as lawyer or a trial judge) is important for a prospective nominee to both the appellate courts and the trials courts. Additional experience which is similar to court trial work. . . ., teaching trial advocacy or other clinical law school courses, etc.—is considered in evaluating a prospective nominee's trial experience qualifications. In exceptional cases, when there is significant evidence of distinguished accomplishment in the field of law, an individual with limited trial experience may be found qualified." (emphasis added).

Our records, indicate that Mr. Wilkinson taught at the University of Virginia Law School from 1973 to 1978 and again in 1981/82 and that he regularly taught the following courses:

Federal Courts—Subjects covered include case or controversy, federal question jurisdiction, implied remedies and rights of action, federal common law, pendent jurisdiction, abstention, adequate and independent state grounds, section 1983, and federal habeas corpus.

Criminal Procedure—Topics covered are Fourth, Fifth and Sixth Amendment rights at different stages of the criminal process—search, arrest interrogation and line-up, bail and preliminary hearings, grand jury proceedings, and trial.

Constitutional Law—Subjects included the reach of congressional authority under Article I, Section 8, substantive and procedural due process, the equal protection clause, state action, and the speech and religion clauses of the First Amendment.

In addition thereto the experience of clerking for a Justice of the United States Supreme Court has to be given much weight, and in the opinion of prominent appellate justices, makes up for a lack of practice experience. A clerk to an appellate judge sees the best and the worst briefs and listens to some of the finest and some of the poorest arguments. In this process he should learn quickly to distinguish those things that are important and critical to the decisional process.

The guidelines further state—

"Without demeaning the scholarly qualities necessary for the trial courts, the Committee nonetheless looks for an especially high degree of scholarship and academic talent in prospective nominees for the appellate courts. The abilities to write lucidly and persuasively, to harmonize a body of law and to give guidance to the trial courts in future cases are matters of great concern for the evaluation of prospective nominees for the appellate courts.

Recognizing that an appellate judge deals primarily with records, briefs, appellate advocates and colleagues (in contrast to witnesses, parties, jurors, live testimony and the theater of the courtroom) the Committee may place somewhat less emphasis on the importance of extensive trial experience as a qualification for the appellate courts." (emphasis added).

Mr. Wilkinson's extensive writings were furnished to the Committee and show him to be an unusually able writer and legal scholar with the apparent capacity to become an outstanding appellate judge. A number of law professors were among those whose views were solicited with respect to this nomination, and they were uniformly of the view that his legal scholarship was of a very high order.

It is apparent that all of the criteria set forth in the Standing Committee's brochure were taken into account by a substantial majority of the Committee in reaching the decision that Mr. Wilkinson was qualified. I want to assure you that I do not personally believe the Committee applied a double standard in rating Mr. Wilkinson nor that its action was unprecedented. In support thereof we have reviewed recent nominees to the various courts of appeal whom we have found qualified or better who had very limited trial experience. At least four of these had teaching backgrounds and had demonstrated intellectual accomplishment and writing ability. I believe that the action of a substantial majority of the Committee in finding Mr. Wilkinson qualified was entirely consistent with our action in the cases of the academics referred to above.

You have also expressed concern about reports of lobbying activities on behalf of Mr. Wilkinson. It is important to know that in this case there was only one vote taken. At about the time the Former Report was circulated to the Committee, several Committee members called me in accordance with our practice to advise that they had received telephone calls on behalf of the candidate. I was personally concerned that it had apparently become known that the investigating Committee members were not in agreement and that vote was being taken. I took up that concern with the Justice Department. I'm convinced that such calls made on behalf of the candidate did not influence any vote in his favor. It is not unusual for individuals with special information about a candidate under investigation to voluntarily supply this to the investigating Committee members. The members of the Committee are experienced in the handling of this kind of information and indeed welcome it. In this particular case, it was the timing of these calls which was objectionable.

It should be made clear that the investigating Committee members sought the views of several members of the Supreme Court, including Justice Powell for whom Mr. Wilkinson had clerked. These gentlemen had a unique opportunity to judge his performance and his abilities. The Justices contacted were uniformly enthusiastic.

In closing, let me say on behalf of the Committee that for more than thirty years it has sought to bring the independent good judgment of knowledgeable lawyers to the judicial selection process. We never have candidates. Our sole responsibility is to evaluate those names sent to us. The integrity of the process depends upon the integrity of each Committee member, and I am proud to be associated with thirteen people of great character.

Respectfully,

FREDERICK G. BUESSER, Jr.,
Chairman.

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, DC, March 9, 1984.

Hon. LEWIS F. POWELL, Jr.,
Associate Justice, U.S. Supreme Court, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. JUSTICE POWELL: We are writing as members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, which is currently considering the nomination of one of your former law clerks, Mr. J. Harvie Wilkinson III, to be a judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit.

According to published reports, you were contacted by two members of the ABA Standing Committee on Federal Judiciary in the course of its review of Mr. Wilkinson's qualifications, and you in turn contacted a third member of the ABA committee.

In light of the issues raised about Mr. Wilkinson's nomination and the procedures followed by the ABA committee in applying its guidelines to this case, we would appreciate your assistance in informing us of the specific contacts in circumstances of those contacts.

We are enclosing for your information a copy of the letter we sent earlier this week in the ABA committee.

Respectfully,

EDWARD M. KENNEDY.
JOSEPH R. BIDEN, Jr.
HOWARD M. METZENBAUM.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES, CHAMBERS OF JUSTICE LEWIS F. POWELL, Jr.,
Washington, DC, March 12, 1984.

Senators KENNEDY, BIDEN, and METZENBAUM,
Committee on the Judiciary, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

GENTLEMEN: This is in response to your letter of March 9, received by me at about 4:30 p.m.

The press reports I have seen are substantially accurate as to my conversations with three members of the ABA Judiciary Committee. It also is true that Mrs. Powell and I have known the Wilkinson family well for many years.

Mr. James Howard, a Committee member from my State of Virginia, called me last summer and asked my opinion as to the qualifications of J. Harvie Wilkinson, III, who clerked for me here. I responded favorably, noting the difference in the qualifications appropriate for a District Court judge and those for a Circuit Court Judge.

Mr. Lane, the Committee member for DC, called me later (in November, I believe). As I recall, he stated he was calling me as a Virginian, and because of the negative report from Mr. Howard, I repeated the substance of what I had said to Mr. Howard. Also, responding to Mr. Lane's inquiry, I agreed that my name could be used. I wrote Mr. Howard informing him of Mr. Lane's call.

I was concerned by what Mr. Lane had said about the report from my State. This prompted me to call Gene W. Lafitte, of New Orleans, on my own initiative. Mr. Lafitte is a Committee member and friend with whom I have been associated in the America College of Trial Lawyers. In a brief conversation with him, I told him of Mr. Lane's call, and repeated my view as to the qualifications of Mr. Wilkinson. I did not inquire where he stood; nor do I know how he voted.

I have had no other occasion to speak to members of the Committee. It is, of course, not unusual for federal judges to be asked their opinion as to the qualifications of persons under consideration for appointment to the federal bench.

In view of your inquiry and your proper interest in Mr. Wilkinson's qualifications. I can say with confidence that of the some 45 fine clerks I have had in my 12 years on the Court, J. Harvie Wilkinson, III, ranks among the best. he is an exceptionally gifted legal scholar, and a compassionate and thoughtful human being. In my opinion, he is fully qualified to serve on a Court of Appeals.

Sincerely,

LEWIS F. POWELL, Jr.

WILKINSON, RACING FOR TOP, REACHES KEY HURDLE TODAY

(By Philip Smith)

When J. Harvie Wilkinson III was editorial page editor of The Virginian-Pilot in Norfolk, his colleagues noted that Wilkinson wrote his articles longhand on legal pads and had a secretary type them into the newspaper's computer system.

That practice led some to conclude that a man who did not type also did not intend to stay long in the newspaper business. "He had no experience as a newspaper editor and seemed disinclined to learn it," says former Virginian-Pilot editorial writer A. Robert Smith.

Indeed, Smith says, Wilkinson once confided to him a desire to succeed his old Richmond family friend, Justice Lewis F. Powell, Jr., on the Supreme Court—"in no uncertain terms."

The impression that the 39-year-old Wilkinson is a young lawyer in a hurry is likely to be reinforced today when the Senate Judiciary Committee is expected to approve President Reagan's nomination to make Wilkinson one of the youngest federal appeals court judges in the nation.

Driven by social ties, wealth, educational distinction and old family connections that reach with ease into the Supreme Court itself, Wilkinson's campaign for a seat on the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond is likely to clear the GOP-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee.

It appears unlikely that a host of bitter complaints by spokesmen for minorities and women—that Wilkinson's premier qualities are that he is bright, rich, Republican, white and male—will do more than dent Wilkinson's prospects.

"He's a wonderful teacher," says fellow University of Virginia law professor Steven Salzberg, "and a fine, traditional constitutional scholar." Wilkinson's boss, law school dean Richard A. Merrill, said, "Students berate us when we move him into a smaller classroom. His leaving would be a major loss for us."

Wilkinson's critics concede his intellect—he graduated magna cum laude from Yale—but they have protested that he falls short of the American Bar Association's guideline that federal appeals court judges should have at least 12 years' experience in law-related activities. Wilkinson, who won the ABA's backing anyway, has nine.

"It is a formidable combination of inadequacies," testified Elaine Jones, an NAACP Legal Defense Fund lawyer and former law school classmate of Wilkinson, at Senate hearings last week. "If a minority or a woman, with the amount of experience Mr. Wilkinson has, had been interested in an appellate judgeship, she/he would not have gotten to first base."

Since graduating in 1972 from law school in Charlottesville, he has clerked for Powell in Washington; served three years at The Virginian-Pilot; taught law at Virginia for six years and served a year in the Reagan Justice Department as deputy assistant attorney general in the Civil Rights Division. In 1970 he ran for Congress as the GOP's nominee in the conservative Richmond-area district, but was overwhelmed by incumbent Rep. David Satterfield, a Democrat.

He wrote speeches for Republican Linwood Holton's successful 1969 campaign for governor, and as recently as 1982 he worked with a Virginia group promoting former Fairfax County legislator Wyatt B. Durrette, another Republican, for governor in the state's 1985 elections.

Still, his bid for the appeals court lacks the strong endorsement of Sen. John W. Warner, Virginia's senior Republican, who initially supported older and more judicially experienced candidates for the position.

Warner said last week that if the Judiciary Committee backs Wilkinson, he will vote for his confirmation. The senator has said the White House wanted Wilkinson because it has wanted to name young lawyers to appeals court seats.

In a 1979 Virginian-Pilot editorial being circulated by his critics, who say it demonstrates hypocrisy, Wilkinson wrote that "the [Virginia] Bar Association took the correct position when it insisted . . . that merit should rule judicial selections . . . It is never too soon to begin stressing merit over connections. . . ."

When it came time for Wilkinson's bid for the bench, his opponents note, connections, including Powell, were not entirely absent. Powell—a wealthy ex-Richmond lawyer and longstanding friend of Wilkinson's father, a former chairman of United Virginia Bank—acknowledges that he told two members of the ABA rating committee who called him that he "strongly favored Jay." When asked by one of the callers to contact a third committee member, Powell did so.

Wilkinson ultimately won a luke-warm rating of "qualified."

BAR ASSOCIATION'S STANDARDS DISPUTED

(By Philip Smith)

Three Senate Democrats, accusing the American Bar Association of a double standard in rating judicial nominees, have asked the ABA to explain why it found a University of Virginia law professor qualified for a federal appeals court judgeship.

Sens. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts, Howard M. Metzenbaum of Ohio and Joseph R. Biden, Jr. of Delaware said in a letter to the ABA they were concerned that J. Harvie Wilkinson III was rated qualified even though he does not have 12 years' legal experience, the standard that the organization recommends for appellate judges.

"We are particularly concerned about testimony that, on numerous occasions in recent years, the [ABA] committee has applied the guidelines inflexibly and has advised . . . that women and minority nominees who did not meet the [standard] would not be found 'qualified,'" the legislators said.

The three senators also said that they were "concerned about published reports of lobbying activities designed to influence members" of the ABA's Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary, which investigates and rates White House nominees for the bench.

Supreme Court Justice Lewis F. Powell Jr. told The Washington Post recently that he had been approached about Wilkinson by two ABA committee members and assured them that he "strongly favored Jay." Powell said that he was asked by one of the callers to contact a third committee member and did so.

"I have no apologies whatsoever for supporting [Wilkinson]," Powell told The Post.

Powell is a longtime family friend of Wilkinson, 39, a wealthy Republican attorney and teacher whose father is a former chairman of United Virginia Bank in Richmond.

It was unclear whether the Democrats' request for more details on Wilkinson's ABA endorsement would delay a Senate vote on his nomination by President Reagan to a vacancy on the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

The GOP-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee, of which Kennedy, Metzenbaum and Biden are members, is to take up the Wilkinson nomination today. Detroit attorney Frederick G. Buesser Jr., chairman of the ABA committee, said yesterday that it will take at least a week to reply to the letter.

SENATORS WANT ABA WORD ON JUDGE CHOICE

The Senate Judiciary Committee won't vote on the nomination of University of Virginia law professor J. Harvie Wilkinson III to a judgeship on the 4th U.S. Circuit of Appeals until the American Bar Association explains why it found Wilkinson qualified for the post, congressional aides say.

Three Democrats on the panel—Sens. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts, Joseph Biden of Delaware and Howard M. Metzenbaum of Ohio—have asked why Wilkinson apparently was not held to the ABA's standard that nominees for federal appeals courts have substantiated trial experience.

Wilkinson has no trial experience.

The Virginia State Bar Association pronounced Wilkinson "qualified" for the nomination, despite the fact that he does not meet the ABA's minimum standard for federal judicial nominees of 12 years of legal experience.

POWELL SAYS HE LOBBIED MEMBER OF ABA PANEL FOR WILKINSON

(By Philip Smith)

Supreme Court Justice Lewis F. Powell, Jr., acknowledge yesterday that he telephoned a member of an American Bar Association investigating committee last fall to voice support for the controversial nomination of his former law clerk, J. Harvie Wilkinson III, to a federal appeals court judgeship.

The action is considered unusual for a sitting judge and is likely to become an issue Thursday when the Senate Judiciary Committee is scheduled to vote on the nomination of Wilkinson, a University of Virginia law professor, to the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Separately, a Capitol Hill source said yesterday that Reagan administration lobbying on Wilkinson was so intense that it angered some members of the ABA committee and later drew an apology from a former senior Justice Department official.

The source said Jonathan C. Rose, former assistant attorney general in the Reagan administration, delivered a "semi-mea culpa" at the ABA's midwinter convention in Las Vegas last month to irritated members of the organization Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary.

Rose could not be reached yesterday for comment. Wilkinson declined to comment.

Sources also said that a surge of last-minute lobbying by Wilkinson backers in the Justice Department, where Wilkinson once worked, may have cost the 39-year-old former newspaper editor some votes among ABA committee members who were annoyed by the administration's telephone campaign.

Spokesmen for women's and minority groups have charged that Wilkinson lacks sufficient legal experience to meet the ABA's guidlines for appellate Judges and have accused the ABA of employing a double standard for white male nominees.

Powell's statement yesterday came in response to a request for details about his role from three Democratic members of the GOP-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee. It is common for ABA investigators to contact judges who know a nominee, but it is considered questionable practice for a sitting judge to initiate such contacts, according to several lawyers.

In a letter to Sens. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.), Howard M. Metzenbaum (D-Ohio,) and Joseph R. Biden Jr. (D-Del.), Powell called press reports that he had initiated such a call "substantially accurate."

Powell said he became concerned about the prospects for Wilkinson, a family friend from Richmond, after he learned that an ABA investigator, lawyer James Howard of Norfolk, was compiling a "negative report."

"This prompted me to call Gene W. Lafitte of New Orleans [another ABA committee member] on my own initiative," Powell said, "in a brief conversation with him, I . . . repeated my view as to the qualifications of Mr. Wilkinson. I did not inquire where he stood, nor do I know how he voted."

Powell said he had been queried last year by Howard and another ABA investigator, District Lawyer John D. Lane, about Wilkinson's qualifications before he contacted Lafitte.

The 14-member ABA committee, which investigates and rates judicial nominees, subsequently found Wilkinson "qualified" to fill the 4th Circuit vacancy. The vote tally that led to that rating has not been disclosed.

The ABA committee chairman, Frederick G. Buesser Jr. of Michigan, confirmed yesterday that Rose attended last month's convention at the committee's invitation.

ABA Panel Complained Justice Aides Lobbied for Wilkinson

(By Philip Smith)

An American Bar Association screening committee complained to the Justice Department last fall after two senior Justice officials pressured committee members to rate a former colleague "qualified" for a federal appeals court judgeship.

The ABA said this week the complaint came after the two officials—former deputy attorney general Edward C. Schmults and former assistant attorney general Jonathan C. Rose—divulged details of a confidential ABA investigation of J. Harvie Wilkinson III during their contacts with committee members.

Some committee members found the timing of the officials' lobbying—on the eve of balloting on Wilkinson—objectionable, the ABA said. The committee subsequently rated Wilkinson qualified.

Supreme Court Justice Lewis F. Powell Jr. said earlier this week that, in an unusual action for a sitting judge, he also contacted a member of the ABA committee to encourage a favorable vote on Wilkinson, his former law clerk.

Details of the lobbying efforts are likely to fuel attempts by Democrats on the GOP-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee to scuttle the White House's nomination of Wilkinson, 39, a conservative University of Virginia law professor, for a vacancy on the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond. The committee has the nomination on its agenda today.

Sens. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.), Howard M. Metzenbaum (D-Ohio) and Joseph R. Biden Jr. (D-Del.) have held up Wilkinson's nomination pending explanations of the lobbying from Powell and Frederick G. Buesser Jr. of Michigan, chairman of the ABA's Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary.

Wilkinson was investigated last year by two members of the ABA committee. One, James Howard of Norfolk, submitted a negative recommendation. The other, John D. Lane of the District, rated him qualified.

Those confidential findings were circulated in a 75-page report to the 14 ABA committee members nationwide prior to balloting.

In a letter this week to the three Democrats, Buesser said he became "personally concerned that it had apparently become known that the investigating committee members were not in agreement and that a vote was being taken. I took up the concern with the Justice Department."

Buesser said he also complained to Justice that several committee members had received telephone calls, timed to coincide with the secret ballot, urging approval of Wilkinson. "In this particular case, it was the timing of these calls which was objectionable," Buesser said.

Former deputy attorney general Schmults said yesterday that he was the Justice official to whom Buesser complained. Schmults also acknowledged that he and Rose had made calls to several committee members, mentioning the fact that Howard and Lane were split on Wilkinson's qualifications for the bench.

"I regretted that and I wrote that to Buesser," Schmults said. "How they [the two investigators] were leaning should be confidential."

Schmults said he and Rose made the telephone calls because they had not been consulted by the ABA investigators on Wilkinson's qualifications. Wilkinson served from 1982 to 1983 as deputy assistant attorney general under the two men.

"We were surprised," Schmults said. "We had worked with Jay a long time and had a good idea of his qualifications. . . . We did no more than give [the committee] additional information so they could make a better decision."

One former Justice official, who asked not to be identified, said yesterday that there was "a rather inbred Virginia view" that the judgeship should be filled by a member of the Virginia bar. That would have excluded Wilkinson, whose nomination has been attacked because he lacks courtroom experience.

Schmults yesterday praised Wilkinson as someone who would make "a fine federal judge." The ABA's Buesser also said that several judges, including members of the Supreme Court, were "uniformly enthusiastic" about Wilkinson.

In a letter to the Democratic members of the Judiciary Committee, Justice Powell said he had found Wilkinson, an old family friend from Richmond, "an exceptionally gifted legal scholar and a compassionate and thoughtful human being."

Senate Panel Approves Wilkinson for U.S. Judgeship

(By Philip Smith)

The Senate Judiciary Committee approved the embattled nomination of J. Harvie Wilkinson III to a federal appeals court judgeship yesterday amid renewed complaints by Democrats that the 30-year-old Virginia law professor is unqualified for the post.

The 12-to-4 vote followed unsuccessful attempts by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.) to persuade the committee's Republican majority to reopen hearings on Wilkinson, who has been attacked by minority and women's groups in Virginia as much less experienced than some female and black lawyers.

"What's very clear is that there's a dual standard," Kennedy said angrily. "[Wilkinson] has never had one client, never. By ramming this through, you're sending a message to women in this society, as well as countless minorities. It's a dual standard, my friends."

If the chairman, Sen. Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.), "wants to hammer this through," Kennedy added, "he has the ability to do it."

Thurmond rejected Kennedy's request for further delay, noting that Wilkinson has been waiting for Senate confirmation since November. The nomination, for a vacancy on the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond, now goes to the Senate floor. Once approved by the Judiciary Committee, such nominations are rarely rejected by the Senate.

Wilkinson, on the faculty at the University of Virginia law school, is a former newspaper editorial writer and served from 1982 to 1983 as deputy assistant attorney general in the Justice Department's civil rights division. He declined to comment yesterday.

One of Wilkinson's harshest critics, Edythe Harrison of Norfolk, an official of the National Women's Political Caucus, blamed Sen. John W. Warner (R-Va.) for yesterday's pro-Wilkinson vote. Harrison is a Democratic candidate for the seat held by Warner, who is up for reelection this fall.

"I don't admire Senator Warner's lack of courage," Harrison said. "His silence was consent. As long as he gave tacit approval [of Wilkinson], the die was cast."

Warner, the state's senior Republican, has had no comment on the Wilkinson controversy and has said he would vote for Wilkinson if the nomination reached the Senate floor.

The fight over Wilkinson has centered on charges he was found qualified by an American Bar Association screening committee even though, his critics say, he does not meet ABA standards for appeals judges. The ABA recommends a minimum of 12 years' experience. Wilkinson joined the bar in 1972, but spent three years as editorial page editor of The Virginian-Pilot in Norfolk.

"The bar obviously changed the rules for Mr. Wilkinson," Harrison said yesterday. "If we [women's groups] had put forward such a candidate, you can imagine the outcry."

Kennedy yesterday cited the cases of two female attorneys who he said were more qualified than Wilkinson but who were rated as unqualified by the ABA for other court seats. "It would appear there is one set of standards in this case," Kennedy said, "and a different set with regard to women."

In his request for more hearings, Kennedy also recalled recent statements by Supreme Court Justice Lewis F. Powell Jr. and former deputy attorney general Edward C. Schmults that they contacted ABA committee members on Wilkinson's behalf before the voting.

Sen. Arlen Specter (R-Pa.), saying he was concerned about those actions, called on Thurmond yesterday to hold hearings on the ABA's procedures in investigating and rating federal judicial candidates. Thurmond promised to do so.

Sen. Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah) joined in the criticism of the ABA, accusing the organization of waging a "vendetta" against the late Sherman E. Unger. The ABA rated Unger unqualified in his bid last year for a seat on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit, touching off a bitter fight in the Judiciary Committee.

"Senator Kennedy's point was well taken against the ABA," Hatch said yesterday. "It was not well taken against this nominee," referring to Wilkinson.

The 4th Circuit has jurisdiction over Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland and North and South Carolina.

CRITICS QUESTION EXPERIENCE OF REAGAN'S CHOICE FOR JUDGESHIP

(By David Margolick)

WASHINGTON, March 31.—J. Harvie Wilkinson 3d, President Reagan's choice to fill a Federal appellate court vacancy in Virginia, is in many ways an unorthodox candidate for the bench.

Mr. Wilkinson, a 39-year-old law professor at the University of Virginia, has worked in jobs related to his profession for only eight years. He has never had a private client, argued a case in court or written a legal brief by himself. He has no judicial experience and is not entitled to practice before either the court he hopes to join or any of the trial courts it supervises.

An American Bar Association screening committee, despite sharp internal disagreements, found Mr. Wilkinson, a onetime law clerk for Justice Lewis F. Powell, Jr., of the Supreme Court, "qualified" for the seat.

Earlier this month the Senate Judiciary Committee voted 11 to 5 in favor of the appointment of Mr. Wilkinson to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit, which hears cases from Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland and the Carolinas.

CRITICISM OF THE NOMINATION

Normally, the Senate would ratify the Judiciary Committee's choice. But in the past few weeks, criticism of the nomination has both intensified and broadened beyond groups representing women and minorities who are critical of what they perceive as his limited legal experience, insensitivity and parochialism.

In a brief appearance before the Judiciary Committee last November, Mr. Wilkinson cited a yearlong stint in the Justice Department under Mr. Reagan, scholarly activities and three years as editorial page editor of a Norfolk newspaper as experiences that qualified him for the appellate bench. Other law professors, he observed, had been named to the bench and made "marvelous" contributions despite their limited legal practice.

At least two Senators, Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts and Howard M. Metzenbaum of Ohio, both Democrats, have temporarily blocked a vote by the full Senate on the nomination. In addition, Mr. Kennedy, joined by Senators Charles McC. Mathias Jr., Republican of Maryland, and Patrick J. Leahy, Democrat of Vermont, have called on Senator Strom Thurmond, a South Carolina Republican who is chairman of the Judiciary Committee, to hold additional hearings on the nomination bench.

The senators critical of the Wilkinson nomination hope to scrutinize his performance as a Deputy Assistant Attorney General as well as the role played by the Justice Department and Mr. Wilkinson's former mentor, Justice Powell, in lobbying for his nomination.

At the same time, they want to examine the role of the bar group's standing committee on the Federal judiciary, which screens candidates for Federal judgeships. Critics of the nomination have charged that the criteria normally used, notably that candidates be lawyers for at least 12 years and have "substantial" trial experience, were unjustifiably waived for Mr. Wilkinson. The critics say the same criteria sometimes disqualify women and members of minority groups.

"This nomination is symbolic of a con game," said Armand Derfner, a Washington lawyer who testified against the nomination. "The Administration talks of merit selection, but Mr. Wilkinson is probably the least experienced appellate nominee ever seen."

While the Republican-controlled Senate still seems likely to confirm Mr. Wilkinson, some people are hedging their bets.

It's too early to say what the final outcome of the Wilkinson nomination will be," said Peter Loomis, press secretary to Senator John W. Warner, Republican of Virginia. "It could dangle for a month or two and die on the vine."

Mr. Warner, whose own choices for the vacancy were rejected by the White House in favor of Mr. Wilkinson, has offered him only token support.

But a Reagan Administration spokesman, who requested anonymity, said, "We're confident that he'll be confirmed after this thing plays out."

BORN TO AFFLUENT SURROUNDINGS

The term most frequently used to describe Mr. Wilkinson is "to the manner born." His father, J. Harvie Wilkinson, Jr., was president of one of Virginia's largest banks, and he grew up in Richmond's affluent West End, long a seat of power in the state.

A graduate of Lawrenceville School and Yale University, Mr. Wilkinson harbored political ambitions, and while a student at the University of Virginia Law School in 1970 he ran unsuccessfully for Congress.

Two years later, however, he won a clerkship with Justice Powell, also from Richmond and a longtime friend of the Wilkinson family. Mr. Wilkinson spent the next five years teaching law at the University of Virginia in Charlottesville, when he left to become the editorial page editor of The Norfolk Virginian-Pilot. He served as Deputy Assistant Attorney General in the civil rights division of the Justice Department from 1982 to 1983, when he returned to teaching.

At hearings in February, witnesses from the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, the National Women's Political Caucus and several other groups said Mr. Wilkinson was insensitive to minority concerns and had less experience than some women and minority candidates that the bar screening committee had found unqualified.

"If a minority or a woman with the amount of experience Mr. Wilkinson has had been interested in an appellate judgeship she/he would not have gotten to first base," Elaine R. Jones of the legal defense fund testified.

Senator Kennedy and others have suggested that in finding Mr. Wilkinson "qualified" the bar screening committee may have bowed to political pressure. The other designations are "exceptionally well qualified," "well qualified" and "not qualified."

Two former high-ranking Justice Department officials, Edward C. Schmults and Jonathan C. Rose, made telephone calls to committee members before the vote on Mr. Wilkinson. The two admit, moreover, that they divulged details of a confidential negative, preliminary report on Mr. Wilkinson to others. They said they had hoped that, by demonstrating the nomination might be in jeopardy, they could enlist supporters of Mr. Wilkinson to petition the committee on his behalf.

Frederick G. Buesser Jr. of Bloomfield Hills, Mich., chairman of the bar screening panel, said Mr. Schmults and Mr. Rose "used poor judgment on behalf of a friend." He asserted, however, that "not one vote" had been altered by their action.

Moreover, earlier, this month, Justice Powell acknowledged that he had grown concerned over Mr. Wilkinson's prospects and called one committee member on his own initiative. He has described his former clerk as "an exceptionally gifted legal scholar and a compassionate and throughtful human being" who is "fully qualified" for the court seat.

Mr. Wilkinson's critics have based their judgments largely on the editorials he wrote for The Virginian-Pilot. Last July the newspaper, which had been one of the state's more liberal organs before Mr. Wilkinson's tenure, came out against his appointment. Mr. Wilkinson, it said, "came up short" on experience.

"Obviously, he is a bright young man in a hurry, but what's the rush?" it said in an editorial titled "Wilkinson as Judge?"

SENATE GETS HUNG UP ON A WOULD-BE JUDGE'S AMBITION

(By Ernest B. Furgurson)

Someday soon the Senate may vote on a nomination that involves several serious issues, but turns on point unaddressed by the Founding Fathers: Should overweening ambition disqualify a citizen from service as a high federal judge?

The nominee is 39-year-old J. Harvie Wilkinson III—bight, brash law professor, son of a prominent Virginia banker, family friend and former clerk of Justice Lewis F. Powell, Jr., briefly deputy assistant for civil rights in Ronald Reagan's Justice Department.

Although he has never practiced law a day in his life, the administration put him up for a seat on the Fourth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which covers Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and the Carolinas.

The circuit court, of course, is the next thing to the Supreme Court itself. Last year the circuits decided nearly 29,000 cases, and fewer than 1 percent of those will ever be reviewed by the Supreme Court. The Fourth Circuit decided nearly 2,300, and during that year only 21 of its decisions were granted review by the Supreme Court.

Thus this nomination is of weighty importance to people in this part of the nation.

But long ago, before his name was ever mentioned for the Fourth Circuit, young Jay Wilkinson already was looking beyond it, telling friends with characteristic immodesty that he was aiming at the highest court in the land.

This and much more has seeped out since last fall when Mr. Wilkinson appeared unexpectedly before a Judiciary Committee hearing chaired by Maryland's Charles McC. Mathias, Jr., sitting in for chairman Strom Thurmond.

That day went smoothly, but rather superficially. After interested parties had time to learn about the nomination, another committee session in February heard a series of opponents, mostly objecting to the Virginian's inexperience. Despite them, the committee reported out the nomination.

Only after that did allegations arise that Mr. Wilkinson himself had inspired a lobbying campaign that brought him a barely favorable recommendation from the American Bar Association after the first lawyer assigned to check his background found him unqualified.

Also since the hearings, further concerns have been voiced about his strongly conservative political record. As Justice Department aide and newspaper editorialist, he created fears that he would come to the bench with his mind already made up in civil rights and other cases.

Citing all this, a group of senators from both parties has pressed for another hearing, to focus on the "possible undue influence" brought to bear when Mr. Wilkinson learned his nomination was in danger. But Mr. Thurmond, while willing for his committee to look into the overall ABA judiciary recommendation process separately, is against linking it to the Wilkinson case. He insists on a vote first by the full Senate, before the July 2 recess.

What happened is that when officials in the Justice Department learned that the bar association committee was undecided on the nomination, they improperly told Mr. Wilkinson about it.

Former Deputy Attorney General Edward Schmults and former Assistant Attorney General Jonathan Rose both made calls to ABA committee members boosting Mr. Wilkinson. So did Justice Powell, whose old Richmond law firm represented Mr. Wilkinson's father's bank.

How many others joined this effort is uncertain, but it was conspicuous enough for the ABA committee chairman to reprimand the Justice Department officials about it. Mr. Powell acknowledged that he not only had responded to inquiries from the ABA but had initiated contact with another member of that committee.

Senators Mathias and Arlen Specter (Pa.) both want to know more about this. Senator Warren Rudman (N.H.) and Majority Whip Ted Stevens (Alaska) spoke against confirmation. All these are Republicans. But predictably, it is a Democrat, former Judiciary chairman Ted Kennedy (Mass.), who has used the strongest language.

He called the Wilkinson lobbying a "boiler room" operation, as if it were in an election campaign. "Did the Justice Department officials violate the trust of their special position as liaison between the judiciary and the ABA?" he asked. "Why is not the Senate of the United States permitted to know whether this nominee was found 'qualified' on the basis of a lobbying effort or on the basis of his own merits?"

Conservatives like Mr. Thurmond (R, S.C.), John P. East (R, N.C.) and Jeremiah Denton (R, Ala.) have carried most of Mr. Wilkinson's Senate defense. Virginia's freshman Republican Paul Trible has spoken for him but John W. Warner, some of whose own candidates were passed over in favor of Mr. Wilkinson, has been quiet.

The nominee's friends note that despite the ABA committee chairman's displeasure at the lobbying, he wrote that "I'm convinced that such calls . . . did not influence any vote in his favor."

They also argue that although the ABA's judiciary guidelines call for extensive trial experience, it is less necessary in an appellate judge reviewing decisions of lower courts. Mr. Wilkinson's demonstrated scholarship and writing talent offset his lack of practical legal background, they say.

But some of the most interesting input into the debate has come from outside the Senate. The Norfolk Virginian-Pilot, where Mr. Wilkinson was editorial page editor briefly before joining the Reagan administration, has come out against his confirmation.

While there, Mr. Wilkinson wrote about how "Judges ought to be selected on the basis of merit, not on the basis of policital ties. . . ." He not only had a kind word for experience, he said "It is never too soon to begin stressing merit over connections."

One opponent said his style "has the forensic tone of a campaigning politician or an adversary lawyer before a jury, not the mediating tone of an impartial judge." She quoted his editorial asserting that compulsory school busing is "madness."

A former Justice Department lawyer documented how enthusiastically Mr. Wilkinson implemented the policy of Bradford Reynolds, head of the civil rights division, in cutting government's role in trying those cases.

What will happen when the Wilkinson nomination comes to a showdown roll call is unclear. When opponents tried to send it back to committee last month, they lost 54-36. But if Majority Leader Howard H. Baker, Jr. (Tenn.) seeks cloture to cut off debate, it will be close: he needs 60 votes.

Frequently, when a judicial confirmation becomes this uncertain, the name is withdrawn. But the White House may issue a party call on this one, because if Mr. Wilkinson's ambition is realized, an aggressively conservative new judge will be positioned to ascend to the Supreme Court and stay for generations—to become the next William H. Rehnquist.

Whatever the outcome, the closeness of the Senate situation grows out of the controversy over inexperience, lobbying and use of outside influence. And all those grew out of the brilliance, the impatience and the ego of J. Harvie Wilkinson III.

NATIONAL WOMEN'S POLITICAL CAUCUS,
Washington, DC, September 9, 1983.

Hon. JOHN W. WARNER,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR WARNER: I am writing to express the National Women's Political Caucus' serious concern over the probable nomination of J. Harvie Wilkinson III to the U.S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Mr. Wilkinson's lack of experience in the legal arena is well known. In the 11½ years since graduating from law school, he has never practiced law, and has been involved in legal matters for only about eight years. This background falls short of the minimum 12 years experience recommended by the American Bar Association. Surely you will agree that this country, and the State of Virginia, deserves better than that.

In November, 1982, the National Women's Political Caucus forwarded to the Justice Department the names and résumés of four highly qualified women for this position. Each of our recommended nominees has broad experience in the court system, and any one would be an admirable choice for the position under consideration.

It is unfortunate that not one of these women, nor any other of the many equally qualified women attorneys in your state, was included in your list of recommended nominees sent to the president. Your failure to choose a single woman is all the more disturbing in light of the fact that, of 21 Circuit Court nominations made by President Reagan as of September 1, 1983, not one has gone to a woman.

I strongly urge you to bring your influence to bear to see to it that Mr. Wilkinson is not nominated and that a qualified woman is named for this very important post.

Sincerely,

KATHY WILSON,
National Chair,
National Women's Political Caucus.

TESTIMONY AT A HEARING OF THE SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE ON THE NOMINATION OF JAMES HARVIE WILKINSON III, FEBRUARY 22, 1984

STATEMENT OF EDYTHE C. HARRISON

Mr. Chairman, I am Edythe C. Harrison, a resident of Norfolk, Virginia, speaking for the National Women's Political Caucus. I am a past member of the Virginia General Assembly, and have been a community activist in a variety of projects in the arts, education, and community development for many years.

I came to know Mr. Wilkinson personally when he resided in Norfolk as the Editorial Page Editor of the Virginia-Pilot. I am well acquainted with his beliefs and modes of expression through his writings and personal conversations. I am here to comment on Mr. Wilkinson's judicial temperament as believed in his own writings while at the newspaper and in his books.

It is with some uneasiness that I testify due to what I consider a good personal relationship with Mr. Wilkinson. However, as the Chair of the 2nd District Women's Political Caucus and as a concerned citizen, I feel obligated to share with this committee my knowledge on this appointment.

Mr. Wilkinson lacks experience representing clients whether in or out of court. He lacks experience either as a lawyer sweating out a case with a client whose life, liberty, or fortune are at risk, or as a judge called upon day after day to render discriminating opinions about often difficult matters. In view of these facts, it is more than relevant to consider his performance as an editorial writer to glean insight into this man as a journalist, lawyer and as a person. This is essentially so, in view of the fact that Mr. Wilkinson cites his three years as an editorial writer in support of his experience for this appellate judgeship. I must ask if he was temperate in his judgments? Did his editorials reveal the writer as a person of depth, learning, and mature insight, or someone deficient in these qualities? Was he arrogant? Was his language precise and thoughtful? Did he enlighten as well as provoke? Did he liken his responsibilities in the post of Editor to those of a judge, who must give due weight to all sides of a controversy, examine and state carefully the arguments on all sides of a controversy, and make his decision from the best evidence available to him?

Unfortunately, my conclusion is that Mr. Wilkinson falls short in all aspects. An editorial writer does what a judge does. Editorial writers, like judges, confront controversial issues and both should be fair minded, look at both sides of the question, and pose reasonable solutions. Since Mr. Wilkinson is relying heavily on his editorial experience as a basis for his appointment, it is appropriate that we look at his editorial writings for the qualities that would indicate judicial temperament. In evaluating his editorials we look for evidence of fair mindedness, compassion, and one who understands complexities and practical applications inherent in legal disputes.

A judge may be a political appointee but judges are not politicians. Mr. Wilkinson's style has the forensic tone of a campaigning politician or of an adversary lawyer in front of a jury, not the mediating tone of an impartial judge. His discourse suggests a prejudgment that would obstruct his ability to judge fairly. Mr. Wilkinson obviously is intelligent and aware of the problems of this society. In his editorials he asks all the provocative rhetorical questions—often inflammatory in style but he offers no solutions to these problems. This is acceptable for a teacher or writer who can deal in hypotheticals, but it is not appropriate for a judge—or even an editorial writer who must feel a responsibility to the community who looks to him for enlightenment—but it is certainly not appropriate for a judge who must take responsibility for his words knowing they will become law.

His editorials cover a number of highly controversial subjects. A look at his editorial language tells us something about his ability to be fair minded. The issues are arguable. Mr. Wilkinson does not argue the case if arguing means weighing the arguments for and against and coming to one's own conclusions. His adversarial style forces the argumentation to move exclusively between two absolute extremes. I give a couple of examples: Through emotionally laden lexical choices such as, and I offer as direct quotes from his editorials the following language: "nightmares of the Holocaust; malignant mobs; stalking presidents; sanctity of innocent live; heinous crimes," he forces the reader into these extremes and then concludes that there is no other choice. This crystallization into two irreducibly opposed viewpoints is more the discourse of a lawyer than that of a judge. In fact, his adversarial rhetoric repeatedly defies logic. Indeed he deals ruthlessly with the very principles of logical argumentation, all the while maintaining a facade of logical structure.

Mr. Wilkinson is given to extravagant, misinformed, intemperate, inflammatory, sterotypic statements. For example: Regarding one minority group, Mr. Wilkinson very unsympathetically writes, "their rhetoric was that of the maligned. The march urges an end to all social economic, judicial, and legal oppression of lesbian and gay people. Their demands," said Mr. Wilkinson, "should be resisted because the last thing we need is a fresh wave of lawsuits whenever some employee is allegedly dismissed or passed over because of 'sexual preference'" Does Mr. Wilkinson define justice in terms of a reduced caseload? Is justice a matter of convenience for the judges? Is this what we mean by judicial economy? All that most people ask of government is that they be accorded the same legal rights as other citizens, being held accountable for what they are as individuals, not because of their minority differences. This is a point that should not have to be explained to a man who may sit on the bench.

It should also not have to be explained that while it may be appropriate to support capital punishment, it is inappropriate to support capital punishment because, quoting Mr. Wilkinson, "I just don't trust parole agencies." That kind of injudicious statement casts aspersions of a whole class of hardworking public servants and is certainly a dubious reason for supporting this issue.

We all know what the problems are. As an editorial writer, he inflamed us with the problems but never enlightened us with solutions or even attempts at solutions. A judge does not have the luxury of avoiding solutions to important, complex legal problems. Professors and editorial writers, for all the useful work they do, have the luxury of approaching problems from an ivory tower perspective. I am not an attorney but I understand why the American Bar Assocation requires a particular number of years out of school—and legal practice for a number of years. I understand the reasons for this standard. Mr. Wilkinson's youth, lack of experience and immaturity are impediments to wise decision making.

On the most agonizing questions of race, education, and equal opportunity, Mr. Wilkinson offers not enlightenment, but empty rhetoric with a scholarly intellectual gloss which is useless as a guide to reasonable resolution of fundamental social problems.

"Compulsory busing is madness, compulsory busing between city and suburb is madness multiplied," writes Mr. Wilkinson. Is this the best thinking of a legal scholar who has explored the complex issues involved in dismantling separate but unequal racially identifiable schools? Is all busing "madness"? Is busing in conjunction with paired and magnet generally upgraded schools, teaching and educational programs "madness"? Is busing to remedy state caused inequitites in the financial support of schools invariably "madness"? Is judicious busing, not for the purpose of racial balance but for the purpose of good libraries, good order, and good learning programs in all of a city or regions schools "madness multiplied"?

In the controversial and highly emotional subjects of busing, capital punishment, bilingual education, and in vitro fertilization Mr. Wilkinson used the editorial page to confuse and inflame rather than explain. These are issues that beg for discourse and reason and not inflamatory rhetoric that never solves problems. Unfortunately these are not the only subjects that received the same type of treatment.

As if Mr. Wilkinson's lack of judicial temperament were not enough, there is some serious question as to how he achieved this nomination. Achieved is the right word because he engaged actively in the process of getting himself nominated. He lobbied for his own position. A Congressional aid was quoted, "he did everything except take out a billboard." This is especially distressing when in editorial after editorial, Mr. Wilkinson has been harshly critical of the role of politics in judicial appointments. But even all this lobbying does not explain the American Bar Association endorsement. By their own rules he is clearly not qualified but he received the endorsement anyway. It is generally understood that Justice Powell "permitted his name to be used" in support of Mr. Wilkinson's nomination and this may have turned the tables in so far as the ABA endorsement is concerned.

I am not saying there is anything improper, but the Committee should be aware there is a long standing connection between Justice Powell and Mr. Wilkinson. He was clerk for Justice Lewis Powell. The relationship of these two men is well know. Justice Powell's law firm represented the bank that Mr. Wilkinson's father headed. Mr. Wilkinson even worked at the Powell law firm in high school. After clerking, Mr. Wilkinson wrote about Mr. Powell in his book "Serving Justice" and said in that book that when Mr. Powell was appointed to the Supreme Court Mr. Wilkinson felt the Supreme court had been saved and "I could not help thinking my chances for clerkship."

This inside track to a judicial nomination runs counter to everything Mr. Wilkinson has written about merit appointments to the bench. Writing on the theme of merit versus raw political selection of judges was a recurrent theme during his editorship. Concerning the selection of judges by the Virginia General Assembly he writes, "judges ought to be selected on the basis of merit, not on the basis of political ties. At present, the choice of new judges rests, in practice, with the legislative delegations form jurisdictions involved. The temptations are great—at times irresistable to elevate to the bench the law partners, colleagues, and cronies of legislators." Mr. Wilkinson expressed hope that the proposed Bar Judicial Nomination Commission which would have been appointed by the Bar Association would provide a "high grade and less political review of the character, temperment, intelligence, mental and physical fitness, education, legal ability, experience, general interest and past conduct of each person considered." Mr. Wilkinson said, "It is never too soon to begin stressing merit over connections." We agree.

Testimony of Elaine R. Jones of the NAACP Legal Defense Fund

Mr. Chairman, my name is Elaine R. Jones and I am an associate counsel with the NAACP Legal Defense Fund. I am a native Virginian; I attended law school with Mr. Wilkinson, and I have practiced law in the federal courts, including the Fourth Circuit, for over thirteen years.

I have testifed before this Committee serveral times on subjects of mutual interests, subjects ranging from the voting rights act to procedures for evaluating judicial nominees.

Yet at no time have I been more reluctant to appear than today. But as a matter of fairness and principle I have little choice.

Since he has been President, Mr. Reagan has nominated more than 125 persons to the Federal bench, many of whose philosophy and views on fundamental social issues might differ from mine. However, prior to this appearance I have not appeared before this Committee to testify on a single one of Mr. Reagan's nominees. Mr. Wilkinson's is my first appearance on a judical nominee during this administration.

After having read Mr. Wilkinson's submissions, having interviewed and talked with people with whom he has worked and reviewing his overall record, I have concluded that it would be fundamentally unfair for this committee to confirm Mr. Wilkinson.

There is a fundamental question of fairness here that must be raised. And that is the issue of fairness with regard to the judicial selection process. It is a question that runs to the American Bar Association's Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary.

We have before us a nominee who, when viewed objectively, is facially unqualified for appointment to the appellate bench.

At the time of his nomination he had been in the field of law barely eight years, six of those as a law professor. Even adding the three years of his newspaper experience, at the time of nomination Mr. Wilkinson did not have twelve years at the bar which is the requirement of the American Bar Association (ABA). A very strong argument can be made that 12 years at the bar, which is the ABA standard, means for an appellate nominee 12 years of law-related work, in which case Mr. Wilkinson has only 8. For the six years that he has taught law school we understand that Mr. Wilkinson is highly regarded as a law professor, yet we do not think that that qualifies as "significant evidence of distinguished accomplishment in the field of law," which is the applicable language in the ABA standards when one has limited trial experience (p. 3). However, Mr. Wilkinson has no trial experience, nor any out of court experience representing the interest of a client. Nor, we understand, is he even a member of the Circuit court to which he has been nominated to serve. It is then quite confusing to see how, if one uses principles of merit selection, that Mr. Wilkinson merits this appointment. In his testimony before this Committee on Wednesday, November 16, 1983 Mr. Wilkinson refers to the nomination of Stephen Breyer (1st Circuit), Ralph Winter (2nd Circuit), Antonia Scalia (D.C. Circuit) and Richard Posner (7th Circuit) for the proposition that academics can serve ably on the appellate courts. That is true.

However, the issue is not whether academics can serve (they certainly can and should), the issue is the qualifications of Mr. Wilkinson to serve, with 8 years of law-related experience and only 6 years in academic life with no advocacy experience whatever.

At the time of his nomination, Stephen Breyer had 16 years of law-related experience, 12 of those as a law professor at Harvard; Ralph Winter had 22 years teaching experience and taught at Yale Law School; Antonio Scalia had been a member of the bar over 20 years, had taught law for nearly 12 years at the University of Chicago, Stanford and the University of Virgina, an additional 6 years in the actual practice of law and 6 more years in government service. Richard Posner had over eighteen years at the bar, 11 years in academic life and more than six years in government service. Mr. Wilkinson's comparisons simply do not hold up when one reads the record. Much has been made by Mr. Wilkinson himself of his similarity to other "academics" who were successfully appointed to the bench. A survey of those appointed in the last few years to the appellate bench shows that there is no other member of any Circuit Court of Appeals who has been out of law school such a short period of time, has so little law-related experience, and who has no courtroom or advocacy experience. It is a formidable combination of inadequacies.

Minorities and women have often been reminded that as a general proposition they do not hve the requisite experience to serve on the appellate bench because they have only graduated from law schools in significant numbers over the past 10-15 years. Every minority and woman appointed to the appellate bench in the last two administrations has objectively met and/or exceeded the applicable ABA standard.

If a minority or a woman, with the amount of experience Mr. Wilkinson has, had been interested in an appellate judgeship she/he would not have gotten to first base. First, they would have most certainly been found unqualified by the ABA; secondly, they would not have received the nomination; and thirdly, if they had received the nomination, I do not believe they would have ever passed the scrutiny of this Committee.

If no advocacy experience and limited teaching experience is enough to earn a qualified rating for the appellate bench, then the ABA standard is meaningless, as is the selection process.

The Committee now considers the nomination of a white male from a privileged background who has connections of power and who does not meet the qualification standards now met by every federal appellate jurist in the Country. We urge the Committee to act on principle. If Mr. Wilkinson is confirmed it will tell the world more clearly than anything else, that there is a double standard: one for minorities, women and all other appellate judges and another for Mr. Wilkinson.

We ask now only for fairness: that the standard that applies to all other federal appellate jurists in the Country be applied to Mr. Wilkinson. It that is done, this nominee will not be confirmed.

STATEMENT OF BOBBY B. STAFFORD, PRESIDENT OF THE OLD DOMINION BAR ASSOCIATION

Mr. Chairman, I am Bobby B. Stafford, President of the Old Dominion Bar Association ("ODBA"). The Old Dominion Bar Association (ODBA) is a statewide bar organization which has existed since 1941 in the Commonwealth of Virginia. I am pleased to have this opportunity to appear before the committee; however, it is with significant pain and reluctance that the ODBA expresses its opinion respecting the nomination of Mr. J. Harvie Wilkinson as a judge for the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit. However, as attorneys who practice before the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit, it is ODBA's obligation to come forward and speak up on this nomination. The ODBA firmly believes that the appointment of Mr. Wilkinson to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit would diminish the respect of the bench and bar for the quality of judicial experience on the court and for the appointment and selection process for judicial judges.

As practitioners before this court, we are keenly aware of the need for and the expectation that the judges who adjudicate our cases will possess exemplary judicial qualifications who have been carefully selected from the most experienced and able members of the bench or bar. We again wish to emphasize that there are tremendous risks for a bar association to oppose a lifetime judicial appointment. However, in the event the Senate confirms Mr. Wilkinson for appointment to the Fourth Circuit, the high quality of the judiciary could be seriously compromised.

The constitutional importance of an independent and able federal judiciary is unquestioned. And, the Senate's duty to confirm each nominee for the federal judiciary is clear evidence of the profound public interest in assuring that qualified persons are entrusted to the powerful position of a federal judgeship.

To facilitate the public interest, the American Bar Association Standing Committee which evaluates judicial nominees, long ago established minimum evaluation criteria a nominee for the federal bench should possess. The ABA criteria clearly require (1) admission to the bar at least a minimum of twelve years, (2) substantial trial experience as a lawyer or federal judge, and (3) in exceptional cases limited trial experience will suffice where the nominee has distinguished accomplishments in the field of law. Mr. Wilkinson is believed not to possess any of these qualifications. The ODBA has recently learned that Mr. Wilkinson is not even admitted to practice before the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit for which he seeks an appointment, nor any of the federal district courts in the Circuit. This is alarming.

Notwithstanding its evaluation criteria, the ABA has expediently and miraculously found Mr. Wilkinson qualified for appointment as a federal judge. In your consideration of the ABA's departure from its evaluation criteria, it should be noted that the ABA evaluation criteria and its recommendation are merely an aid to the Senate and not a supplement nor substitute for the judgment of this committee or the United States Senate. The ODBA considers the ABA's finding that Mr. Wilkinson is qualified to be a federal judge an affront to deserving and qualified practitioners and jurists of all races and both sexes in the Commonwealth of Virginia. Mr. Wilkinson has not had any practical legal experience to carry to the bench. Practical legal experience is not limited to trial experience, but may be derived from client contact, motion practice, administrative proceedings, or other advocacy experience.

Attorneys who argue cases before judges of the Fourth Circuit must have unquestioned confidence in the ability of the judges to understand quickly, soberly and intelligently the issues presented. Attorneys generally have only thirty (30) minutes to argue their cases, whether legal issues raised are procedural or substantive or whether such issues involve preservation of life, liberty or property. The judges must often resolve issues presented based on the law cited in a short brief as well as based on their prior experience as a jurist and/or practicing attorney. There is no time—and there should be no need—to explain to the judges the exigencies of a legal practice, whether plaintiff's or defendant's counsel or as a defense attorney or prosecutor in order to assure that the judges evaluate the issues in the proper framework. Accordingly, in view of Mr. Wilkinson's lack of practical experience at the bar or on the bench, he would be substantially disadvantaged as an appellate judge and this would inure to the profound detriment of the lawyers who will appear before him. It must not be forgotten that these lawyers will be representing clients who have important legal and factual disputes.

At the time of his nomination, Mr. Wilkinson has been a member of the bar not quite twelve years, he also has not had the benefit of having attorney-client relationships. An attorney derives significant growth through the wide breath of attorney-client relationships. The attorney-client relationship critically affects the decisions that counsel makes and directly influences and shapes the posture of counsel's case as it appears before the appellate court. Absent practical experience derived through attorney-client relationships, Mr. Wilkinson would be required to make his decisions by vicariously considering or hopelessly speculating about practical considerations that affect legal issues and inferences. These practical considerations which are so vital to the appellate bench in the fair resolution of important controversies would be "second nature" to an experienced lawyer or judge. Such a glaring deficiency in Mr. Wilkinson's qualifications can only lead him to apply mechanically principles of law to resolve legal issues, while failing to comprehend or perceive practical considerations that will impact on his opinions. The federal bench, the bar and the public deserve and expect a truly qualified appointment who has the requisite experience and depth to consider justly those disputes which will come before the bench.

In conclusion, having had no attorney-client relationships, no trial experience, no distinguished accomplishments in the field of law and/or no judicial experience, Mr. Wilkinson is clearly unsuited for the federal appellate bench. Given his record of achievement in various and sundry endeavors, with time Mr. Wilkinson may be able to obtain the requisite legal experience to qualify for appointment to federal bench.

Mr. Chairman, the ODBA respectfully requests this committee on behalf of its members and all the trusting citizens of the Fourth Circuit to give Mr. Wilkinson an opportunity to obtain the requisite legal experience before being thrust into the position of a federal appellate judge. It is our considered opinion as practitioners in the Circuit that this nomination should not be confirmed.

Thank you.

TESTIMONY OF HELEN C. GONZALES, ASSOCIATE COUNSEL, MEXICAN-AMERICAN LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUCATIONAL FUND

Good afternoon, I want to thank the Chairman and the distinguished members here today for allowing me to testify on behalf of the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund [MALDEF]. My name is Helen Gonzales and I am the Associate Counsel for the Washington, D.C. office. MALDEF is a national legal and educational organization devoted to protecting the civil rights of close to fifteen (15) million Mexican Americans and other Hispanic Americans. Currently, we have offices in San Francisco, Los Angeles, Sacramento, Denver, San Antonio, Chicago and here in Washington, D.C.

I appear before you today to express our opposition to the nomination of J. Harvie Wilkinson to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit. Our opposition, Mr. Chairman, is based on the fact that Mr. Wilkinson does not meet the threshold qualifications for appointment as a federal judge. Thus, it becomes clear that the nomination is premised solely on the conservative political philosophy which Mr. Wilkinson shares with this Administration. If this nomination is approved it will be but another slap in the face to minorities and women alike who are repeatedly told that they cannot be given judicial or other appointments because they lack the qualifications necessary for those positions.

Federal appellate judges serve a very important role in our society. Their decisions can have a tremendous impact on individuals and communities. It is, thus, critical that individuals appointed to these positions be of the highest professional caliber.

In order to promote this goal, the American Bar Association (A.B.A.) has developed minimal criteria for evaluating a nominee to the federal bench. An individual should be admitted to the Bar a minimum of twelve years, have substantial trial experience as a lawyer or federal judge, and, in exceptional cases, limited trial experience will suffice where the nominee has distinguished accomplishments in the field of law.

Since leaving law school J. Harvie Wilkinson served one year as a U.S. Supreme Court law clerk, six years as a law professor, and one year in the U.S. Department of Justice. He also spent three years as an editorial page editor for the Virginian-Pilot. Thus, Mr. Wilkinson has only a total of eight years of legal experience, none of which includes trial work. While the A.B.A.'s minimal criteria calls for "substantial trial experience," this standard has been broadened, in its application, to include advocacy work, generally. However, even under this broader view, Mr. Wilkinson fails to meet the A.B.A. standard. He is not even admitted to practice before the Court of Appeals to which he has been nominated nor to any of the federal district courts within that Fourth Circuit.

Mr. Wilkinson's positions at the University of Virginia Law School and at the Justice Department left him completely unexposed to either client representation or practical advocacy experience. Thus, the record clearly shows that he lacks the experience necessary for appointment to the appellate bench.

It is also interesting to note that during Mr. Wilkinson's tenure as an editor to the Virginian-Pilot, a number of editorials were published which criticized the judicial selection process for being unduly political.[1] One such editorial concluded that, "it is never too soon to begin stressing merit over connections."[2] In this case, however, since "merit" is lacking one must presume, as a recent editorial by the Virginian-Pilot did, that Mr. Wilkinson's greatest qualification to serve on the bench is his conservative philosophy.[3] Based on this lack of practical, legal experience even his former employer had to admit that his nomination should not be confirmed.

It is ironic, then, that Mr. Wilkinson would seek a position for which he lacks sufficient credentials to meet his own "merit" standard. In the selection of Judges he, understandably, supported review of such criteria as legal ability and experience.[4] As indicated above, however, he falls short on these two key prerequisites.

It is also ironic that despite Mr. Wilkinson's insistence that appointments be based on merit and not political considerations, he has apparently been lobbying extensively on his own behalf.

This point is reflected in the comment attributed to a Virginia congressional aide who described Mr. Wilkinson's political lobbying for the judgeship: "He's made phone calls, visited Congressmen's offices, and done everything except take out billboards and airplanes with streamers."[5]

Thus, one has to surmise that Mr. Wilkinson believes that he need not follow his own advice.

The Reagan Administration has consistently denounced the use of affirmative action on the ground that it leads to the appointment, or hiring, of unqualified individuals. Mr. Wilkinson, himself, wrote, or approved, editorials during his tenure as an editor strongly raising this same implication.[6] Yet, both he and the Administration now appear willing to subvert their own "merit selection" philosophies when it concerns the appointment of a white male.

Therefore, allowing Wilkinson to become a federal judge is fundamentally unfair to the many qualified Hispanics, Blacks, and women who have been repeatedly denied federal judgeships because they, allegedly, failed to meet the A.B.A.'s minimal standards. Appointment of Mr. Wilkinson, despite his current lack of more than eight years of legal experience, would create a double standard. Clearly there must be others including, women and minorities, who are, in fact, qualified under the A.B.A.'s standards for this appellate judgeship. The A.B.A.'s minimum standards, under which others are judged, should not be waived merely because a candidate is of the correct political philosophy.

TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH MICHAEL TREVINO, DIRECTOR OF LEGISLATION, LEAGUE OF UNITED LATIN AMERICAN CITIZENS [LULAC]

Good afternoon, Mr. Chairman, distinguished members of the Senate. First, I would like to thank you on behalf of the League of United Latin American Citizens [LULAC] for allowing me, Joseph Michael Trevino, LULAC Legislative Director, to present our views regarding the judiciary generally and Mr. J. Harvie Wilkinson's nomination to the 4th Circuit Court in particular. LULAC is the oldest and largest Hispanic organization with a membership of over 100,000 members in 43 states recently established councils in Mexico, Central America, West Germany, and Okinawa. Founded in Corpus Christi, Texas, LULAC's central concerns are for full social, political, economic, and educational rights for Hispanics in the United States.

Mr. Chairman, let me begin by stating that the League's interest in the certification process is longstanding and in keeping both the responsibilities of an informed citizenry and advocating for an independent judiciary which administers the law in a fair, evenhanded and effective manner. Speaking about the judiciary system in this, our country, brings to mind a conversation I had with Mr. Jim Range, formerly legislative director for Senator Howard Baker. Mr. Range recounted to me conversations he had had with persons whom he encountered while traveling abroad. Mr. Range was surprised to hear that the one aspect of American life which was most respected and was admired in fact the U.S. judicial system, which in their mind was and continues to be free, independent, and above all, just. We, at LULAC, actively support and advocate for a free, independent and just judiciary. Regarding Mr. J. Harvie Wilkinson's nomination to the bench for the 4th Circuit Court, LULAC urges this body to reject his nomination on the following grounds:

Mr. Wilkinson is guilty of "intellectual dishonesty." While the nominee was editor of the editorial page of the Virginian-Pilot during 1979 through 1981 a public debate ensued regarding the selection of judges for four newly created federal judgeships. It can be assumed that the editorials published during that time carried the approval of the nominee. Several editorials referring to the then present day procedure for selecting judgeships were published (attachments 1, 2, & 3).

Among the conclusions reached by these editorials was the fact that "the secrecy of the whole process darkens public distrust." (Attachment 1.) But of particular interest is the editorial entitled "Choosing Judges on Merit" (Attachment 2). This editorial supported the notion of a Judicial Nominations Commission in the hope "that the Commission will provide a high-grade and less political review of "the character, temperament, intelligence, mental and physical fitness, education, legal ability, experience, general interest, and past conduct of each person considered."

Were we to hold Mr. Wilkinson to the same standard the editorial suggested, we must conclude that the nominee does not meet those standards. For example, with respect to the criterion of experience Mr. Wilkinson does not nearly meet the level of experience which most nominees to the appellate level bench. Mr. Wilkinson does not have any significant or noteworthy advocacy experience which could compensate for not meeting the American Bar Association's minimum of 12 years post-law school experience for judgeship nominees. While Mr. Wilkinson is an author and editor for the editorial page, neither of these literary experiences could be construed to compensate for the absence of evidentiary, procedural, trial or advocacy experience. At best, his literary interest, as reflected in the editorials, is one of posing present day social problems and criticizing the government and courts for implementing alternatives and solutions where he has not supported one solution over another, much less pose an alternative himself.

With respect to his character, Mr. Wilkinson's activities in pursuit of his self-interest cast a shadow of doubt on this most important of judicial traits. For example, Mr. Wilkinson in a published comment attributed to a Virginia congressional aide has "done everthing except take out billboards and airplanes with streamers." (Attachment 3.) If accurate, this report raises serious questions about Mr. Wilkinson's perception of a federal appellate level judgeship. LULAC asks, does the nominee perceive the bench as a position to be lobbied for, or one which is deserved on the basis or merit?

Of all the editorial attributed to Mr. Wilkinson during his tenure at the Virginian-Pilot, which were researched, the one entitled "Capital Punishment Is Necessary," April 23, 1981 is particularly troubling. Mr. Wilkinson supports capital punishment on the basis that "I just don't trust parole agencies." (Attachment 4.) The nominee supports capital punishment and questions whether this irreversible penalty serves as a deterrent. His response, "Maybe it does. And maybe it doesn't. But let's at least give the innocent the benefit of this doubt." Mr. Wilkinson is prepared to sentence people to death despite studies which indicate that the murder rate per 100,000 population in non-death penalty states has been consistently lower by about 100% than in states which have the death penalty. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 9, 1984 at 2459 Attachment 5.) On the grounds that the nominee distrusts parole agencies, he supports capital punishment despite the "Bureau of Justice Statistics reports that for all of calendar year 1982, 'about half the 64 persons who left death row by means other than death had both their convictions and their sentences vacated.'" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 9, 1984 at 2462 Attachment 6.) Given this example of the danger of error and that almost six percent or 66 of the 1276 men and women on death row are Hispanics, it is troubling to seek support for a nominee that has exhibited a pre-disposition of opting for such dire and irreversible punishment on such grounds.

Finally, from LULAC's perspective and with respect to bi-lingual education, Mr. Wilkinson has displayed both ignorance and a callous disregard for the contribution of Hispanics both to this country's industrial development and military efforts, Mr. Wilkinson, in the editorial "Bilingual Madness," September 5, 1980, asks, "What feelings and loyalties will they [Spanish-Speaking Americans] develop toward a country whose dominant tongue many but dimly understand." (Attachment 7). It seems Mr. Wilkinson is unaware that Hispanics have the highest number of medal of honor winners of any ethnic group in our country. Is Mr. Wilkinson unaware that during each of the major world conflicts it is the Mexican of yesterday who is the Hispanic-American of today that has and does work where most Americans wouldn't. Further, it seems that Mr. Wilkinson is unaware that the 1980 census report found that well over 75% of the Hispanic-American families claim English as the language spoken at home, Clearly, Mr. Wilkinson's opposition to bilingual education does not reflect a well informed nor well reasoned opinion, both skills considered prerequisites to a judicial appointment.

In summary, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Wilkinson has, through his editorials, provided us a window into his mind. From our vantage point, Mr. Wilkinson is a bright man, but he lacks the advocacy experience which contributes to the overall requirements of an appeallable level judge. While he must be given and fairly deserves credit for his accomplishments, LULAC questions why someone with Mr. Wilkinson's credentials has been chosen above other white males, minorities, and women who are qualified and should be considered by this committee?

In closing, it is LULAC's position that confirmation of this nominee would be tantamount to implementing on-the-job training at the Federal appellate level branch.

Thank you.

TESTIMONY OF ARMAND DERFNER

For most cases in the federal courts, the circuit courts of appeal are effectively the law of the land. They decided 28,000 cases last year. In about 2,500 of these cases, the Supreme Court was asked to hear a further appeal, but it could so in only about 100.

The responsibility of the circuit courts is carried out by fewer than 150 judges in thirteen circuits. J. Harvie Wilkinson III, of Virginia, has been nominated to fill one of those seats. He would sit on the Fourth Circuit, which hears all the appeals from the States of Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, and North and South Carolina. Last year the Fourth Circuit decided 2,700 cases.

Mr. Wilkinson is 39 years old and has been out of law school for 11-plus years.

The American Bar Association's standards for federal judicial nominees call for a minimum of 12 years experience. No person in recent memory has been nominated for the appellate bench with less. The ABA has three levels of acceptable recommendation—exceptionally well qualified, well qualified, and qualified. Mr. Wilkinson received a rating of qualified, the lowest acceptable rating. It is reported that even the decision to give Mr. Wilkinson the rating of "qualified," rather than "not qualified," was a subject of considerable controversy on the ABA committee.

The problem with Mr. Wilkinson is not simply the short time he has been out of law school, but his dearth of experience since that time. His résumé may be that of a bright young man with promise for the future, but there is nothing to suggest that he is ready now for a judgeship, especially on the United States Court of Appeals. Such positions, as the ABA points out, should be reserved for those men and women who meet not only the stringent criteria required of any federal judges but in addition "have an unusual degree of overall excellence that would provide an inspiration and an example to trial judges."

Since leaving law school, Mr. Wilkinson's 8 years of legal experience consists of a year as a Supreme Court law clerk, 6 years as a law professor, and a year in the Justice Department. The other 3 years since law school graduation were spent as a newspaper editor in Norfolk.

During his 8 years of law-related work, it does not appear that he has ever represented a client, tried a case, written a brief, or argued an appeal, whether for a paying client or in a pro bono matter. Indeed, it appears that even today he is not admitted to practice in the very court on which he is to sit, nor in any district court in the circuit (or any other district court).

His sole experience came during his single year in the Justice Department. There he screened the work of lawyers engaged in cases, but could hardly do any real supervising, and took virtually no active role in any cases himself. The closest he got to a case appears to have been a simple motion he presented in the Baton Rouge school desegregation case.

Of course there have been first-rate judges who had little litigation experience before going on the bench, but these others at least had experience in other types of law practice, whether in advising clients, negotiating transactions, engaging in administrative proceedings, or any of a large number of other ways that lawyers can gain experience.

Likewise, some of our finest judges have had academic backgrounds, but they have been distinguished teachers of long-standing, and have generally leavened their academic experience with exposure to other aspects of the law. For example, the Fourth Circuit has another judge who came from a law school, U.S. Circuit Judge J. Dickson

Phillips. had been Dean of the School of Law of the University of North Carolina for 15 years at the time of his appointment in 1978. He had been admitted to the Bar for 30 years, and in addition to his eminence as a teacher, had also been in private practice a dozen years. At the first hearing on Mr. Wilkinson's nomination, a comparison was made to Justice Felix Frankfurter—but of course there is no real comparison. When Justice Frankfurter was nominated in 1938 he had been a law professor for a quarter of a century, and in addition to his nationwide preeminence in the academic world, his other experience was extraordinarily varied, beginning with his five years as an Assistant United States Attorney in the Southern District of New York, and never stopping after that. Finally, Mr. Wilkinson mentioned several other former law teachers—Judges Winter, Posner, Scalia, and Breyer—but again a short look at their careers shows just how far different their situations are from Mr. Wilkinson's.

The paucity of Mr. Wilkinson's experience is all the more curious in light of his own steadfast insistence on pure merit selection of judges—in the past. His newspaper editorials include at least a dozen repeatedly criticizing the selection of judges on any basis other than merit. His criticism extends not only to appointment for political reasons, but also to appointment of people without sufficient experience, particularly women and blacks. In light of these editorials, perhaps it is not surprising that his own newspaper, the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot, has criticized his nomination.

The lack of experience is not a technical issue. We appoint our judges not to be theoretical philosophers of the law, but to decide cases, great and small, that raise live issues between live litigants. We also insist that those cases be decided not on the basis of abstractions, but on factual records consisting of evidence produced at trials. Circuit judges, especially, need to be sensitive to that fact because they will not see the witnesses, but will be confronted with cold records and will have to try to put themselves in the shoes of the district judges who have been there. While litigation experience may not be absolutely essential for a judge, some awareness of the problems of proving and defending a case is essential. That awareness can be gained in many ways, none of which Mr. Wilkinson has ever gone through.

His Justice Department service—essentially reviewing drafts of briefs and memoranda to make certain they did not contradict the policy goals of the Attorney General—illustrates the problems created by his inexperience. Apart from displaying a great unfamiliarity with the problems of presenting cases, two good, specific examples of his failure to understand the realities of litigation involve the questions of remedies and intervention.

Remedies.—The Administration claims that it has sought more effective remedies for discrimination—for example, dealing with employment discrimination by emphasizing recruitment of qualified minority applicants rather than specific hiring goals. Yet Mr. Wilkinson has consistently bluepenciled efforts in specific cases that are necessary to make recruitment an effective remedy. Any litigator knows that recruitment will not work unless there are incentives such as recruitment goals (not to be confused with hiring goals), or reporting provisions. Such provisions were and remain a standard approach in cases in other sections of the Civil Rights Division, and they do not raise whatever philosophical problems some people have with hiring goals; yet Mr. Wilkinson refused to allow their use, even when a school district was willing to agree. The net result is to make it impossible for recruitment to do the job claimed for it, which means either going to a more stringent remedy or more likely (since Mr. Wilkinson is apparently unwilling to adopt any stronger remedy under any circumstances) just giving up on any remedy of any kind.

Intervention.—In many areas of the law, enforcement suits can be brought by both the Justice Department and by private citizens. Frequently, the Justice Department will intervene in an ongoing private suit, or vice versa. Until two years ago, it was virtually unheard-of for the Justice Department to oppose intervention by private citizens where those citizens had a direct interest in the controversy (for example, black parents intervening in a Justice Department suit to desegregate their school district). Yet, in recent cases supervised by Mr. Wilkinson, the Department has adopted the position that intervention by black parents should be denied on the ground that the Department adequately represented their interests—even while Department personnel said privately the reason they opposed intervention was because they regarded the intervenors as their adversaries. These cases have resulted in great embarrassment to the Department because, in addition to the transparency of the claim that the Department was adequately representing the intervenors' interests, there were several cases about the same time where the Justice Department supported the intervention of white petitioners for intervention. Moreover, in one of Mr. Wilkinson's cases (Charleston County, South Carolina) the Department stood alone in its anti-intervention position because even the school board defendants did not oppose intervention; in the other case (Choctaw County, Mississippi) Mr. Wilkinson redrafted a memorandum, turning it from one supporting intervention into one opposing it on the ground that the Department could do everything the intervenors were complaining about. The net result is that (1) the intervenors have been kept out of the case, (2) they have been prevented from filing their own case, under a fifth circuit rule—which Mr. Wilkinson was either unaware of or unconcerned about—providing that only one lawsuit may be filed in such circumstances, and (3) more than a year later, not one thing has been done in the case.

Mr. Wilkinson's editorials reflect the same attitude; a preoccupation with opposition to remedies for problems. He says he is opposed to certain remedies—school busing and hiring quotas. If that were all he was opposed to, he would obviously have some company. In fact, though, there is little sign that he has ever supported any remedy. Thus, he has written editorials saying hiring goals should be scrapped in favor of encouraging recruitment—only to oppose effective recruitment when the opportunity came his way in the Justice Department. Likewise, among his editorials and his Justice Department tenure, the list of his dislikes includes bi-lingual education and effective remedies for discrimination against handicapped people.

How he would propose to solve any of these problems he does not say. Yet these are precisely the problems that a federal judge, especially a circuit judge, must grapple with.

Mr. Wilkinson is probably the least experienced appellate nominee ever seen. For many years, efforts to appoint qualified minority people and women to the federal bench were stymied by claims that there were few potential nominees with enough experience. Only in the past few years have numbers of blacks and women had the experience necessary to meet the exacting standards of the ABA and the United States Senate. Ignoring the standards for Mr. Wilkinson, after all the talk over the years, is simply unfair.

If a black or a woman with his qualifications were nominated, Mr. Wilkinson would be the first to write an editorial insisting on merit selection rather than "affirmative action." Mr. Wilkinson does not meet the standards for confirmation as a United States Circuit Judge. If he is confirmed, that will send us all a clear message that the standards don't really mean anything after all.

Re: J. Harvie Wilkinson.

ELAINE R. JONES, Esq.,
NAACP Legal Defense Fund, Inc.,
Washington, DC.

DEAR ELAINE: Enclosed is a copy of a 33-page letter of resignation (with 36 documents attached), dated October 18, 1983, by a Justice Department lawyer named Timothy Cook. It is a long list of recent Justice Department actions to undermine civil rights enforcement. It goes into detail about the internal decision-making process, and refers at a number of places to J. Harvie Wilkinson.

It goes into most detail about matters involoving handicapped people (which is apparently the section that Cook was in), but there are numerous descriptions of situations in other areas. To get a real assessment of Wilkinson's role, each of the incidents would have to be looked at by someone who is familiar with the particular area of the law. Also, it is not always clear just what his role in a particular incident was, because there are a number of incidents where he may have been involved but in which he is not mentioned by name, and there are others where his name comes up but he may not have done anything other than receiving a memorandum or passing on a message. As a start, though, the following are the places in the resignation letter where Wilkinson is mentioned by name:

(1) Page 6—W explains Reynolds' decision not to intervene in St. Louis State Hospital case involving mistreatment of mentally retarded patients.

(2) Page 12—W hopes for a way to get out of the Baylor case ("I recall vividly the sadness I felt at seeing Deputy Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights J. Harvie Wilkinson rejoice at the news that the federal judge for the case had threatened to rule against the government for failing (due to intentional delay in the front office) to file pre-trial papers on time—it was a way out, and it could be blamed on the judge.")

(3) Page 14—W explains Reynolds' decision to delete a citation in a brief to a Supreme Court case which supports agency powers to adopt broad regulations.

(4) Pages 21-22—W opposes use of recruitment goals in employment discrimination cases.

In addition, Wilkinson's name comes up in a number of the appendices:

(1) Appendix A, an earlier memo from Cook to Attorney General Smith, refers to W several times in discussing enforcement of laws protecting handicapped people. See especially pp. 4-5n.3, suggesting that Reynolds and W were jointly responsible for certain policy proposals.

(2) Appendix D, a memo from a department lawyer to W, asks whether it is true that a settlement conference was held in a case without the knowledge of the line lawyers on the case. (The significance of this memo depends on whether W participated in or was responsible for the secret settlement conference, or whether he just happened to be the Deputy to whom this inquiry went.)

(3) Appendix E, a memo from W to Reynolds, recommends certain provisions in a proposed settlement.

(4) Appendix K-1, a memo from a Department lawyer to W, objects to a draft brief in which a twisted legal argument is advanced in order to undercut agency enforcement regulations. (Was W responsible for the twisted legal argument?)

(5) Appendix Q, a set of documents drafted by W to oppose intervention by black parents in a school desegregation case which had been brought by the government some years earlier, may be very significant. It argues against intervention on the grounds that the parents cannot show their interests are not being adequately represented by the Justice Department, even if the Department and the parents differ as to relief. Essentially, this is a slick pleading designed to keep black school children and their parents from interfering with the Justice Department's efforts to make sure that the relief afforded them is sharply limited in keeping with the ideology of current Justice Department officials. Wilkinson is certainly entitled to hold those views, as he does, but pretending that that position adequately represents the interests of the school children and parents is not very honest.

(Appendix Q, should be read together with Appendix P, a similar document filed a short time earlier in the Charleston, S.C., school case, and also arguing against intervention on the grounds that the Justice Department adequately represents the interests of the school children and parents. The Charleston case is the one where Reynolds is reported to have instructed the line lawyers to make "those bastards . . . jump through every hoop" because he regarded the intervenors as adversaries; it is also a case where the Department has been guilty of the worst foot-dragging, which is what prompted the motion to intervene in the first place. Arguing in court that you adequately represent the interests of people whom you privately refer to as adversaries is a fraud on the court. Was Wilkinson involved in the Charleston case, or in the development of a general approach to intervention petitions?)

In addition to the specific references to Wilkinson cited above, the resignation letter and appendices refer to a number of legal and enforcement debates within the Department, including the debate over whether particular anti-discrimination statutes or regulations require proof of discriminatory purpose; whether agencies have the authority to adopt anti-discrimination regulations; whether the sanctions for violations should be program-specific or institution-wide; whether certain forms of financial assistance trigger coverage under anti-discrimination laws: whether particular laws authorize private rights of action; and finally, recurring disputes over the scope of remedies appropriate in particular cases. In most of these issues, it is not clear whether Wilkinson played a major role, but it is likely enough to make it worth looking into.

Overall, this material suggests some serious questions about J. Harvie Wilkinson's qualifications to sit on a court that plays a critical role in the interpretation and enforcement of this Nation's civil rights laws.

First, a serious question is raised about the way he treats legal authority in dealing with the interpretation of civil rights laws. It is not simply a question of his views; he is obviously entitled to believe what he wants. The question is what he will do to make those views seem like the law of the land. The attached material shows a willingness by someone to twist precedent, legislative history, and other source of statutory construction in order to cut the heart out of civil rights statutes. The people who have been involved in this process were essentially using tricks to smother the law, and seem to believe that they were perfectly free to ignore the law—a hypocritical view coming from people who claim to believe that legislation is the job of Congress. We do not know from these materials what role Wilkinson played in these matters but if he was involved to any significant degree, he is certainly not the kind of person we ought to trust to be a judge.

Second, a serious question is raised about his apparent opposition, in case after case, to virtually any remedy that is likely to be effective. He is of course entitled to oppose specific remedies (such as bussing or quota hiring), but if so he has an obligation to find other remedies that will work. He apparently recognizes this, because he has been quoted as saying he prefers other remedies. Yet the enclosed pages show him repeatedly opposing other remedies, such as numerical recruitment goals, reporting requirements, and basically any remedy other than a Biblically simple "thou shalt sin no more" injunction. I do not see any indication of his support for any remedy except in one case where he argues in favor of including a remedy because the State of Connecticut has agreed to. The question is whether his opposition is just to bussing and quotas or whether it is to all effective remedies.

This issue also relates to Wilkinson's lack of experience, because it appears that his complete lack of experience has left him with no sense of the frustration of trying to get an effective remedy. Instead, he simply rejects remedy after remedy, without ever saying what the remedy ought to be or what remedy will work.

As I noted at the beginning of this letter, the enclosed materials are too skimpy to form final judgments, but they raise some alarming questions and tell us where we ought to look deeper.

Because I borrowed someone's only copy, I would appreciate your copying whatever you need and returning the set.

Sincerely,

ARMAND DERFNER.

REAGAN MAY SEEK TO BAR NEW CARTER NOMINATIONS

DETROIT, July 16.—Sen. Strom Thurmond (R.-S.C.) said today that Ronald Reagan has agreed to ask Republican members of the Senate to block presidential appointments to federal posts until after the Nov. 4 election.

Thurmond said he told Reagan that he should contact Minority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr. (R.-Tenn.) and all other Republican members of the Senate in an attempt to withhold Senate confirmation of appointments.

"He said he would be glad to do that," Thurmond said.

Thurmond noted that the terms of various officials nominated by President Carter would extend far beyond Carter's presidential term.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time for the transaction of routine morning business be extended until not past 1:45 p.m., under the same terms and conditions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SENATE SCHEDULE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, it is the hope of the leadership on this side that we can reach a message from the House on certain hydroelectric powerplants. I will not attempt to do that at this time because certain Senators on both sides of the aisle who are interested in this matter are not presently available. But I do anticipate that such a request will be made sometime after the time for morning business has expired or until morning business has otherwise been closed.

The leadership hopes that that matter can be disposed of today and that we can proceed sometime later this afternoon to the so-called "Baby Jane Doe" bill and dispose of that as well.

While the leadership on this side does not anticipate that we will be in session much past the regular adjournment or recess hour, Members should be aware that if it is necessary to stay somewhat past that time in order to accomplish these two measures, the leadership is prepared to ask the Senate to do that.

Once again, Mr. President, we will be in session tomorrow, as I presently see it. I hope to have a further announcement to make on the agenda and schedule of the Senate later in the day.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. ARMSTRONG]. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time for morning business has expired, and morning business is closed.

HYDROELECTRIC POWERPLANTS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, as I indicated earlier, it is the hope of the leadership on this side that we can proceed now to the matter which is at the desk. I refer to a message from the House on S. 268, relating to certain hydroelectric powerplants. I ask the Chair to lay that message before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the bill from the Senate (S. 268) entitled "An Act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct, operate, and maintain hydroelectric powerplants at various existing water projects", do pass with the following amendments:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Hoover Power Plant Act of 1984".

TITLE I

SEC. 101. (a) The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to increase the capacity of existing generating equipment and appurtenances at Hoover Powerplant (hereinafter in the Act referred to as "uprating program"); and to improve parking, visitor facilities, and roadways and to provide additional elevators, and other facilities that will contribute to the safety and sufficiency of visitor access to Hoover Dam and Powerplant (hereinafter in this Act referred to as "visitor facilities program").

(b) The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to construct a Colorado River bridge crossing, including suitable approach spans, immediately downstream from Hoover Dam for the purpose of alleviating traffic congestion and reducing safety hazards. This bridge shall not be a part of the Boulder Canyon project and shall neither be funded nor repaid from the Colorado River Dam Fund or the Lower Colorado River Basin Development Fund.

SEC. 102. (a) Section 403(b) of the Colorado River Basin Project Act of 1968 (82 Stat. 894, as amended, 43 U.S.C. 1543) is amended by inserting "(1)" after "(b)" and adding the following new paragraph at the end thereof:

"(2) Except as provided in subsection 309(b), as amended, sums advanced by non-Federal entities for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of title III of this Act shall be credited to the development fund and shall be available without further appropriation for such purpose.".

(b) Paragraph (1) of section 403(c) of the Colorado River Basin Project Act of 1968 (82 Stat. 894, as amended, 43 U.S.C. 1543(c)) is revised to read as follows:

"(1) all revenues collected in connection with the operation of facilities authorized in title III in furtherance of the purposes of this Act (except entrance, admission, and other recreation fees or charges and proceeds received from recreation concessionaires), until completion of repayment requirements of the Central Arizona project;".

(c) Paragraph (2) of section 403(c) is revised by inserting immediately preceding the existing proviso: "Provided, however, That for the Boulder Canyon project commencing June 1, 1987, and for the Parker-Davis project commencing June 1, 2005, and until the end of the repayment period for the Central Arizona project described in section 301(a) of this Act, the Secretary of Energy shall provide for surplus revenues by including the equivalent of 4½ mills per kilowatthour in the rates charged to purchasers in Arizona for application to the purposes specified in subsection (f) of this section and by including the equivalent 2½ mills per kilowatthour in the rates charged to purchasers in California and Nevada for application to the purposes of subsection (g) of this section as amended and supplemented: Provided further, That after the repayment period for said Central Arizona project, the equivalent of 2½ mills per kilowatthour shall be included by the Secretary of Energy in the rates charged to purchasers in Arizona, California, and Nevada to provide revenues for application to the purposes of said subsection (g) of this section:".

SEC. 103. (a) The Boulder Canyon Project Act of 1928 (45 Stat. 1057, as amended, 43 U.S.C. 617 et seq.), as amended and supplemented, is further amended:

(1) In the first sentence of section 2(b), by striking out "except that the aggregate amount of such advances shall not exceed the sum of $165,000,000", and by replacing the comma after the word "Act" with a period.

(2) In section 3, deleting "$165,000,000." and inserting in lieu thereof "$242,000,000, of which $77,000,000 (October 1983 price levels) shall be adjusted plus or minus such amounts as may be justified by reason of ordinary fluctuations of construction costs as indicated by engineering cost indices applicable to the type of construction involved herein. Said $77,000,000 represents the additional amount required for the uprating program and the visitor facilities program.".

(b) Except as amended by this Act, the Boulder Canyon Project Act of 1928 (45 Stat. 1057, as amended, 43 U.S.C. 617 et seq.), as amended and supplemented, shall remain in full force and effect.

SEC. 104. (a) The Boulder Canyon Project Adjustment Act of 1940 (54 Stat. 774, as amended, 43 U.S.C. 618), as amended and supplemented, is further amended:

(1) In section 1 by deleting the phrase "during the period beginning June 1, 1937, and ending May 31, 1987" appearing in the introductory paragraph of section 1 and in section 1(a) and inserting in lieu thereof "beginning June 1, 1937".

(2) In section 1(b) by deleting the phrase "and such portion of such advances made on and after June 1, 1937, as (on the basis of repayment thereof within such fifty-year period or periods as the Secretary may determine) will be repayable prior to June 1, 1987" and inserting in lieu thereof "and such advances made on and after June 1, 1937, over fifty-year periods".

(3) In section 1 by deleting the word "and" at the end of subsection (c); deleting the period at the end of subsection (d) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and", and by adding after subsection (d) the following new subsection (e):

"(e) To provide, by application of the increments to rates specified in section 403(c)(2) of the Colorado River Basin Project Act of 1968, as amended and supplemented, revenues, from and after June 1, 1987, for application to the purposes there specified.".

(4) In section 2:

(i) by deleting the first sentence and subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof: "All receipts from the project shall be paid into the Colorado River Dam Fund and shall be available, without further appropriation, for:

"(a) Defraying the costs of operation (including purchase of supplemental energy to meet temporary deficiencies in firm energy which the Secretary of Energy is obligated by contract to supply), maintenance and replacements of, and emergency expenditures for, all facilities of the project, within such separate limitations as may be included in annual appropriations Acts;" and

(ii) by amending subsection (e) to read as follows:

"(e) Transfer to the Lower Colorado River Basin Development Fund established by title IV of the Colorado River Basin Project Act of 1968, as amended and supplemented, of the revenues referred to in section 1(e) of this Act.".

(5) By deleting the final period at the end of section 6 and inserting in lieu thereof the following: ": Provided, That the respective rates of interest on appropriated funds advanced for the visitor facilities program, as described in section 101(a) of the Hoover Power Plant Act of 1984, shall be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration average market yields on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States with remaining periods to maturity comparable to the reimbursement period of the program during the month preceding the fiscal year in which the costs of the program are incurred. To the extent that more than one interest rate is determined pursuant to the preceding sentence, the Secretary of the Treasury shall establish for repayment purposes an interest rate at a weighted average of the rates so determined.".

(6) In section 12, in the paragraph beginning with "Replacements", by deleting "during the period from June 1, 1937, to May 31, 1987, inclusive" and inserting in lieu thereof "beginning June 1, 1937".

(b) Except as amended by this Act, the Boulder Canyon Project Adjustment Act of 1940 (54 Stat. 774, as amended, 43 U.S.C. 618), as amended and supplemented, shall remain in full force and effect.

SEC. 105. (a)(1) The Secretary of Energy shall offer:

(A) To each contractor for power generated at Hoover Dam a renewal contract for delivery commencing June 1, 1987, of the amount of capacity and firm energy specified for that contractor in the following table:

SCHEDULE A

Long Term Contingent Capacity and Associated Firm Energy Reserved for Renewal Contract Offers to Current Boulder Canyon Project Contractors

SCHEDULE A—Continued

Long Term Contingent Capacity and Associated Firm Energy Reserved for Renewal Contract Offers to Current Boulder Canyon Project Contractors

Contractor	Contingent capacity (kW)	Firm energy (thousands of kWh)		Total
		Summer	Winter
United States, for Boulder City	20,000	56,000	24,000	80,000
Totals	1,448,000	2,631,651	1,128,136	3,759,787

(B) to purchasers in the State of Arizona, Nevada and California eligible to enter into such contracts under section 5 of the Boulder Canyon Project Act, contracts for delivery commencing June 1, 1987, or as it thereafter becomes available, of capacity resulting from the uprating program and for delivery commencing June 1, 1987, of associated firm energy as specified in the following table:

SCHEDULE B

Contingent Capacity Resulting From the Uprating Program and Associated Firm Energy

State	Contingent capacity (kW)	Firm energy (thousands of kWh)
		Summer	Winter	Total
Arizona	188,000	148,000	64,000	212,000
California	127,000	99,850	43,364	143,214
Nevada	188,000	288,000	124,000	412,000
Totals	503,000	535,850	231,364	767,214

Provided, however, That in the case of Arizona and Nevada, such contracts shall be offered to the Arizona Power Authority and the Colorado River Commission of Nevada, respectively, as the agency specified by State law as the agent of such State for purchasing power from the Boulder Canyon project: Provided further, That in the case of California, no such contract under this subparagraph (B) shall be offered to any purchaser who is offered a contract for capacity exceeding 20,000 kilowatts under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph.

(C) To the Arizona Power Authority and the Colorado River Commission of Nevada and to purchasers in the State of California eligible to enter into such contracts under section 5 of the Boulder Canyon Project Act, contracts for delivery commencing June 1, 1987, of such energy generated at Hoover Dam as is available respectively to the States of Arizona, Nevada, and California in excess of 4,501,001 million kilowatthours in any year of operation [hereinafter called excess energy] in accordance with the following table:

SCHEDULE C

Excess Energy

Priority of entitlement to excess energy	State
First: Meeting Arizona's first priority right to delivery of excess energy which is equal in each year of operation to 200 million kilowatthours: Provided, however, That in the event excess energy in the amount of 200 million kilowatthours is not generated during any year of operation, Arizona shall accumulate a first right to delivery of excess energy subsequently generated in an amount not to exceed 600 million kilowatthours, inclusive of the current year's 200 million kilowatthours. Said first right of delivery shall accrue at a rate of 200 million kilowatthours per year for each year excess energy in the amount of 200 million kilowatthours is not generated, less amounts of excess energy delivered.	Arizona.

Priority of entitlement to excess energy	State
Second: Meeting Hoover Dam contractual obligations under schedule A of section 105(a)(1) and under schedule B of section 105(a)(1)(B) not exceeding 26 million kilowatthours in each year of operation.
Third: Meeting the energy requirements of the three States, such available excess energy to be divided equally among the States.	Arizona, Nevada, California

(2) The total obligation of the Secretary of Energy to deliver firm energy pursuant to schedule A of section 105(a)(1)(A) and schedule B of section 105(a)(1)(B) is 4,527,001 million kilowatthours in each year of operation. To the extent that the actual generation at Hoover Powerplant in any year of operation [less deliveries thereof to Arizona required by its first priority under schedule C of section 105(a)(1)(C) whenever actual generation in any year of operation is in excess of 4,501,001 million kilowatthours] is less than 4,527,001 million kilowatthours, such deficiency shall be borne by the holders of contracts under said schedules A and B in the ratio that the sum of the quantities of firm energy to which each contractor is entitled pursuant to said schedules bears to 4,527,001 million kilowatthours. At the request of any such contractor, the Secretary of Energy will purchase energy to meet the contractor's deficiency at such contractor's expense.

(3) Subdivision E of the "General Consolidated Power Marketing Criteria or Regulations for Boulder City Area Projects" published in the Federal Register May 9, 1983 [48 Federal Register commencing at 20881], hereinafter referred to as the "Criteria" or as the "Regulations" shall be deemed to have been modified to conform to this section. The Secretary of Energy shall cause to be included in the Federal Register a notice conforming the text of said Regulations to such modifications.

(4) Each contract offered under subsection (a)(1) of this section shall:

(A) expire September 30, 2017;

(B) not restrict use to which the capacity and energy contracted for by the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California may be placed within the State of California: Provided, That to the extent practicable and consistent with sound water management and conservation practice, the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California shall use such capacity and energy to pump available Colorado River water prior to using such capacity and energy to pump California State water project water; and

(C) conform to the applicable provisions of subdivision E of the Criteria, commencing at 48 Federal Register 20881, modified as provided in this section. To the extent that said provisions of the Criteria, as so modified, are applicable to contracts entered into under this section, those provisions are hereby ratified.

(b) Nothing in the Criteria shall be construed to prejudice any rights conferred by the Boulder Canyon Project Act, as amended and supplemented, on the holder of a contract described in subsection (a) of this section not in default thereunder on September 30, 2017.

(c)(1) The Secretary of Energy shall not execute a contract described in subsection (a)(1)(A) of this section with any entity which is a party to the action entitled the "State of Nevada, et al. against the United States of America, et al." in the United States District Court for the District of Nevada, case numbered CV LV '82 441 RDF, unless that entity agrees to file in that action a stipulation for voluntary dismissal with prejudice of its claims, or counterclaims, or crossclaims, as the case may be, and also agrees to file with the Secretary a document releasing the United States, its officers and agents, and all other parties to that action who join in that stipulation from any claims arising out of the disposition under this section of capacity and energy from the Boulder Canyon project. The Attorney General shall join on behalf of the United States, its officers and agents, in any such voluntary dismissal and shall have the authority to approve on behalf of the United States the form of each release.

(2) If after a reasonable period of time as determined by the Secretary, the Secretary is precluded from executing a contract with an entity by reason of paragraph (1) of this subsection, the Secretary shall offer the capacity and energy thus available to other entities in the same State eligible to enter into such contracts under section 5 of the Boulder Canyon Project Act.

(d) The uprating program authorized under section 101(a) of this Act shall be undertaken with funds advanced under contracts made with the Secretary of the Interior by non-Federal purchasers described in subsection (a)(1)(B) of this section. Funding provided by non-Federal purchasers shall be advanced to the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to the terms and conditions of such contracts.

(e) Notwithstanding any other provisions of the law, funds advanced by non-Federal purchasers for use in the uprating program shall be deposited in the Colorado River Dam Fund and shall be available for the uprating program.

(f) Those amounts advanced by non-Federal purchasers shall be financially integrated as capital costs with other project costs for rate-setting purposes, and shall be returned to those purchasers advancing funds throughout the contract period through credits which include interest costs incurred by such purchasers for funds contributed to the Secretary of the Interior for the uprating program.

(g) The provisions of this section constitute an exercise by the Congress of the right reserved by it in section 5(b) of the Boulder Canyon Project Act, as amended and supplemented, to prescribe terms and conditions for the renewal of contracts for electrical energy generated at Hoover Dam. This section constitutes the exclusive method for disposing of capacity and energy from Hoover Dam for the period beginning June 1, 1987, and ending September 30, 2017.

(h)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any claim that the provisions of subsection (a) of this section violates any rights to capacity or energy from the Boulder Canyon project is barred unless the complaint is filed within one year after the date of enactment of this Act in the United States Claims Court which shall have exclusive jurisdiction over this action. Any claim that actions taken by any administrative agency of the United States violates any right under this Title or the Boulder Canyon Project Act or the Boulder Canyon Project Adjustment Act is barred unless suit asserting such claim is filed in a Federal court of competent jurisdiction within one year after final refusal of such agency to correct the action complained of.

(2) Any contract entered into pursuant to section 105 or section 107 of this Act shall contain provisions by which any dispute or disagreement as to interpretation or performance of the provisions of this title or of applicable regulations or of the contract may be determined by arbitration or court proceedings. The Secretary of Energy or the Secretary of the Interior, as the case may be, if authorized to act for the United States in such arbitration or court proceedings and, except as provided in paragraph (1) of this subsection, jurisdiction is conferred upon any district court of the United States of proper venue to determine the dispute.

(i) It is the purpose of subsections (c), (g), and (h) of this section to ensure that the rights of contractors for capacity and energy from the Boulder Canyon project for the period beginning June 1, 1987, and ending September 30, 2017, will vest with certainty and finality.

SEC. 106. Reimbursement of funds advanced by non-Federal purchasers for the uprating program shall be a repayment requirement of the Boulder Canyon project beginning with the first day of the month following completion of each segment thereof. The cost of the visitor facilities program as defined in section 101(a) of this Act shall become a repayment requirement beginning June 1, 1987, or when substantially completed, as determined by the Secretary of the Interior, if later.

SEC. 107. (a) Subject to the provisions of any existing layoff contracts, electrical capacity and energy associated with the United States' interest in the Navajo generating station which is in excess of the pumping requirements of the Central Arizona project and any such needs for desalting and protective pumping facilities as may be required under section 101(b)(2)(B) of the Colorado River Basin Salinity Control Act of 1974, as amended (hereinafter in this Act referred to as "Navajo surplus") shall be marketed and exchanged by the Secretary of Energy pursuant to this section.

(b) Navajo surplus shall be marketed by the Secretary of Energy pursuant to the plan adopted under subsection (c) of this section, directly to, with or through the Arizona Power Authority and/or other entities having the status of preference entities under the reclamation law in accordance with the preference provisions of section 9(c) of the Reclamation Project Act of 1939 and as provided in part IV, section A of the Criteria.

(c) In the marketing and exchanging of Navajo surplus, the Secretary of the Interior shall adopt the plan deemed most acceptable, after consultation with the Secretary of Energy, the Governor of Arizona, and the Central Arizona Water Conservation District (or its successor in interest to the repayment obligation for the Central Arizona project), for the purposes of optimizing the availability of Navajo surplus and providing financial assistance in the timely construction and repayment of construction costs of authorized features of the Central Arizona project. The Secretary of the Interior, in concert with the Secretary of Energy, in accordance with section 14 of the Reclamation Project Act of 1939, shall grant electrical power and energy exchange rights with Arizona entities as necessary to implement the adopted plan: Provided, however, That if exchange rights with Arizona entities are not required to implement the adopted plan, exchange rights may be offered to other entities.

(d) For the purposes provided in subsection (c) of this section, the Secretary of Energy, or the marketing entity or entities under the adopted plan, are authorized to establish and collect or cause to be established and collected, rate components, in addition to those currently authorized, and to deposit the revenues received in the Lower Colorado River Basin Development Fund to be available for such purposes and if required under the adopted plan, to credit, utilize, pay over directly or assign revenues from such additional rate components to make repayment and establish reserves for repayment of funds, including interest incurred, to entities which have advanced funds for the purposes of subsection (c) of this section: Provided, however, That rates shall not exceed levels that allow for an appropriate saving for the contractor.

(e) To the extent that this section may be in conflict with any other provision of law relating to the marketing and exchange of Navajo surplus, or to the disposition of any revenues therefrom, this section shall control.

SEC. 108. Recognizing the expiration of Colorado River storage project (CRSP) contracts in 1989, prior to final reallocation of CRSP power pursuant to existing law, and within one year after enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Energy, acting through the Western Area Power Administration, shall report, to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate, on all Colorado River storage project (CRSP) power resources, including those presently allocated to the Lower Division States, which may be used to financially support the development of authorized projects in the States of the Upper Division (as that term is used in article II of the Colorado River Compact) of the Colorado River Basin.

SEC. 109. The Secretary of the Interior, acting pursuant to Federal reclamation law (Act of June 17, 1902, 32 Stat. 388, and Acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto) and in accordance with the Pacific Northwest Electric Power Planning and Conservation Act (94 Stat. 2697) is authorized to design, construct, operate, and maintain fish passage facilities within the Yakima River Basin, and to accept funds from any entity, public or private, to design, construct, operate, and maintain such facilities.

TITLE II

SEC. 201. (a) Each long-term firm power service contract entered into or amended subsequent to one year from the date of enactment of this Act by the Secretary of Energy acting by and through the Western Area Power Administration (hereinafter "Western"), shall contain an article requiring the development and implementation by the purchaser thereunder of an energy conservation program. A long-term firm power service contract is any contract for the sale by Western of firm capacity, with or without energy, which is to be delivered over a period of more than one year. The term "purchaser" includes parent-type entities and their distribution or user members. If more than one such contract exists with a purchaser, only one program will be required for that purchaser. Each such contract article shall—

(1) contain time schedules for meeting program goals and delineate actions to be taken in the event such schedules are not met, which may include a reduction of the allocation of capacity or energy to such purchaser as would otherwise be provided under such contract; and

(2) provide for review and modification of the energy conservation program at not to exceed five year intervals.

(b) For purposes of this life, an energy conservation program shall—

(1) apply to all uses of energy and capacity which are provided from any Federal project;

(2) contain definite goals;

(3) encourage customer consumption efficiency improvements and demand management practices which ensure that the available supply of hydroelectric power is used in an economically efficient and enviromentally sound manner.

SEC. 202. (a) Within one year after the date of enactment of this Act, Western shall amend its existing regulations (46 Fed. Reg. 56140) to reflect—

(1) the elements to be considered in the energy conservation programs required by this title, and

(2) Western's criteria for evaluating and approving such programs.

Such amended regulations shall be promulgated only after public notice and opportunity to comment in accordance with the Administrative Procedure Act (5 U.S.C. 551-706).

(b) The following elements shall be considered by Western in evaluating energy conservation programs:

(1) energy consumption efficiency improvements;

(2) use of renewable energy resources in addition to hydroelectric power;

(3) load management techniques;

(4) cogeneration;

(5) rate design improvements, including—

(i) cost of service pricing;

(ii) elimination of declining block rates;

(iii) time of day rates;

(iv) seasonal rates; and

(v) interruptible rates; and

(6) production efficiency improvements.

(c) Where a purchaser is implementing one or more of the foregoing elements under a program responding to Federal, State, or other initiatives that apply to conservation and renewable energy development, in evaluating that purchaser's energy conservation program submitted pursuant to this title, Western shall make due allowance for the incorporation of such elements within the energy conservation program required by this title.

Amend the title so as to read: "An Act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct, operate, and maintain certain facilities at Hoover Dam, and for other purposes.".

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

AMENDMENT NO. 3418

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, and the amendment is to the House amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM] proposes an amendment numbered 3418:

At the end of the House amendment, add: notwithstanding any other provision, no contract authorized in this bill shall prescribe terms and conditions for the renewal of contracts for electrical energy generated at Hoover Dam beyond the period ending December 31, 1988.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I think we ought to understand where we are on this legislation, and I want my colleagues who are obviously not on the floor but at the other end of the devices which are used to report back to the offices to recognize that what we have before us today is an extremely important measure, a measure that can very well set the policy of this country for years into the future—30 years in this bill, perhaps longer with respect to other measures.

Many of the public power facilities that have been built over the years were built with agreements that would extend for a period of 50 years. The Hoover Dam, which was originally the Boulder Dam, was in exactly that posture. Its contract actually does not expire—or, rather, the terms with respect to it do not expire—until May 31, 1987. Therefore, there is no sense of urgency whatsoever with respect to this measure. This issue actually is not one until May 31, 1987, and we are a long way from that.

However, my colleagues should understand that there have been no hearings, no hearings whatsoever, in connection with the issue that is before us today. There has been no markup. The Senate has not had an opportunity to consider this in due course, and yet it is a major policy issue.

I, for one, have great difficulty in understanding why, in this short session, it is so important that we bring up this measure, which, at very best, could not have an impact until May 31, 1987. It affects three States in the Union—California, Nevada, and Arizona. What we are talking about is whether or not 47 other States in the Union are going to subsidize the power source, the electricity, for the people of those three States.

The fact is that the original bill that left the Senate did not contain anything like this. It provided for only the matter of certain new projects, no pricing, and no allocation as to who would get the electricity, who would get the power. When it went to the House, they added these provisions, and the House had a vote on the question of whether or not the power that is produced at the Hoover Dam should be auctioned off to the highest bidder.

That is not the issue before the Senate. That is not the issue I am standing here today advocating. But that is the issue that was before the House; and on that issue the House voted, by a vote of 214 to 176, that it should be auctioned to the highest bidder.

Mr. President, I want to correct something I said previously. I was correct in saying there have been no hearings. There has been no markup with respect to the pricing provisions, but I am informed by my staff that the pricing provisions were added on the floor, without a record vote. It was accepted, as I understand it, by unanimous consent, and I would guess that most of us did not know that it was even being accepted.

For 50 years, Hoover customers have received incredibly cheap hydropower. Let me tell the Senate exactly how cheap it has been. Hoover power now costs less than a half-cent per kilowatt-hour—less than a half-cent per kilowatt-hour.

The average cost of energy elsewhere in the Southwest is 2 to 7 cents per kilowatt-hour. That means that they are getting it and the other people in the area who are not getting the benefit of this Hoover Dam power source are paying 400 to 1,400 percent higher than that which the Hoover power recipients are paying.

Cut it any way you want, call it anything you want, that is purely and simply a giveaway of the Federal resources. What logical reason can anyone give to ask this of the U.S. Government that was involved in the development of the Hoover power facility, a magnificent facility, I might say, and the Government helped to build it. It has been repaid, and there were low interest rates in connection with the repayment. Now we own it and now we are being asked to renew the contract for 30 years for nothing more than the cost of operating and maintenance.

Where are all those conservatives who talk about Government doing business as a business firm would do it? Where are all of those who make the speeches about the need to balance the budget when it comes to giving away the power developed at the Hoover Dam?

This is a giveaway. It is a throwaway. It is illogical. It is absurd. There have been no hearings as to why to do it, nothing having to do with the merits. Just let us do it.

The National Taxpayers Union opposes this proposal. They can understand it and so can every one of my colleagues within reach of my voice. And the American people can understand it. When you own something and you sell it for far less than it is worth, then it is giving away the taxpayers' money.

This bill would extend the Hoover power giveaway for another 30 years.

Now, it may be inappropriate to say that the Hoover power giveaway for the past 50 years is a giveaway because there was repayment of the cost of the construction of the dam.

But the fact is it is owned by the Federal Government and this bill binds the United States to sell Hoover power at these cheap rates for 30 more years.

Do not worry about the $200 billion deficit. Never mind that it encourages waste of a precious resource because when you make it that cheap no one is worried about conserving it. Never mind that everyone else pays much more for power. Take care of those who are now using it and let them buy it at these submarket rates.

I want to make it clear: My amendment that I am proposing is not an amendment to propose that it be sold at market rates. I do not know what the answer is. I do not know what is fair. I know that it is wrong to extend it for 30 years without Congress really deliberating upon the rights and the wrong. I know that it is not the right way for a governmental body to proceed.

The Environmental Defense Fund has estimated that the loss to the Treasury from selling Hoover power at cost against selling it at the marginal cost of energy is $3.5 billion over 10 years and the New York Times says it would be $6 billion.

Whatever, $3.5 billion or $6 billion, in neither case should that power be given away in this manner.

Why do we have to do it in 1984 when the contract does not expire until 1987?

Let me read you what the New York Times editorial said about this subject on March 21, 1984, "Greedy for Power." "Greedy for Power" is the title of the editorial.

If a giant oil reserve were discovered under the Pentagon, would the Government give it away to voters who live in nearby Maryland and Virginia? That, in effect, is what President Reagan and many Members of Congress want to do with the more than $400 million worth of electricity generated annually by Hoover Dam. The last hope of stopping that 30 year sign-away of a public resource rests with the House.

When it was finished in 1937, the giant hydroelectric facility on the Colorado River was still called Boulder Dam. Its size and power output made it one of the seven wonders of the modern world. The Federal Government signed 50-year contracts to deliver the power, at cost, to public and private power authorities in California, Nevada, and Arizona.

This electricity was always a bargain: It sold over the decades at an average price of one-sixth of the cent per kilowatt-hour. Wholesale power in the same region now sells for as much as 7 cents a Kwh. Hoover Dam power at half a cent is virtually a steal. No wonder that three benefiting States are pressing for legislation that would lock in the bargain through the year 2017.

The Environmental Defense Fund, perceiving that the underpricing of hydropower discourages conservation and increases demand for coal and nuclear power, argues that Hoover's electricity should be auctioned off to the highest bidders. San Diego, paying very high electricity costs and denied any portion of Hoover power, supports the auction alternative. But these appeals have so far been ignored.

The administration's budget office might have been expected to oppose such a giveaway of Government resources. But the President is apparently unwilling to upset his Western supporters in an election year.

The sign-away bill breezed through the Senate with bipartisan support. House Democrats, too, seem reluctant to end up on the wrong side of the politics of cheap hydropower. In this case their reluctance is probably reinforced by the fact that Representative Morris Udall, the Tucson Democrat who chairs the House Interior Committee, is a sponsor of the bill.

There are many ways to rationalize support for the measure: It only continues the existing system of power distribution . . . it's too late for effective opposition . . . millions will benefit from the low-cost electricity. But beyond these rationalizations lies a simple truth. It's just not fair to treat national resources as pork to be sliced up for the neighbors. When California, Nevada, and Arizona don't pay their share of energy costs, someone else must.

Mr. President, this bill sets a disastrous precedent for the future costs of Federal hydropower. It is one of the first Federal dams to reach the end of the original 50-year repayment period during which the construction and O&M costs have been repaid.

The question now is what price should be charged once the 50 years is over? This bill says the price of Hoover power should be only adequate to cover O&M costs. That is simply poor public policy. It commits the Federal Government to a policy of under pricing its water, not only at Hoover, but everywhere.

There is a lot of talk about how the Federal Government is only supposed to sell power at cost, that it should not profit from the sale of power, but there is nothing in the law that says that and there is nothing that establishes a cost-based pricing policy for the period beyond the initial 50-year cost recovery.

In fact, the Hoover authorizing legislation explicitly states that once the 50 years expire charges shall be on a basis hereafter prescribed by Congress.

If you pass this bill, you establish a cost base pricing policy that is bad economics; it is bad business and it is bad policy. Supporters might say, "You can't change things now. This is the way we have always done business." I say to you that our job is not to preserve the status quo, particularly when the status quo is bad policy.

Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Is the Senator from Ohio correct that I may modify my amendment but I may not send a second-degree amendment to the desk?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the rules of the Senate, the Senator may not present an amendment to his own amendment while he retains the right to modify it. At the present time, the Senator has a right to modify his amendment.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HECHT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HECHT. Mr. President, it gives me great pleasure to speak on behalf of S. 268, a bill authorizing additional hydroelectric development at Hoover Dam, as the original sponsor of the Senate amendment which now is the main body of this House-passed bill, I want to briefly describe the history and some of the innovative features of this legislation.

By way of a background, the 50-year power allocation contracts for Hoover Dam are due to expire in 1987, less than 3 years from now, this bill will provide for a 30-year extension to those contracts, subject to new terms and conditions which are the product of years of court battles and negotiations between Nevada, Arizona, California, and the Federal Government.

One key element to this negotiated package is the authorization in S. 268 for the uprating or retooling of Hoover's 50-year old powerplant generators. Once completed, this project will provide an additional 500 megawatts of capacity at Hoover Dam.

A second element in this package is the authorization of much-needed visitor facilities and safety improvements at Hoover Dam. There are now over 1 million visitors at the dam each year, and conditions are such that it will only be a matter of time before a serious accident occurs there.

A third important element in S. 268 is the provision that dedicates a fixed amount of post-1987 Hoover power revenues to the completion of the central Arizona project and the Lower Colorado Basin salinity control projects, both of which are vital to the future agricultural, environmental, and economic well-being of the Southwest. A 4½-mil-per-kilowatt-hour surcharge will be applied to power sold in Arizona for repayment of the CAP, while a 2½-mil surcharge in Nevada and California will finance the vital Salinity Control Program.

These are the major features of S. 268. Despite the fact that this bill passed the Senate unanimously once before, there are those among us who think that S. 268 is some kind of monumental giveway to the American Southwest. This is nonsense. In closing, let me briefly outline some of the truly innovative features in this bill that benefit every Federal taxpayer in the United States.

First, the Hoover uprating program authorized here will be entirely financed by the power users. This is the largest single front-end-financed hydroproject ever undertaken by the Federal Government.

Second, the safety and visitor facilities will be fully repaid, with interest, by the power users. This is a major precedent for Federal hydroprojects.

Third, the bill requires that the yield interest rate will be attached to all repayment obligations. This is something that the OMB has been pushing for years.

Fourth, the bill requires that the Western Area Power Administration institute a conservation program for all utilities, who buy and then resell Federal power.

Fifth, the bill establishes a surcharge to be paid by power users to ensure the repayment of other Federal projects in the Southwest. This too is an innovative, and I think necessary, concept in these days of Federal fiscal austerity.

Mr. President, I think we can all agree that the hour is too late for us to go back to ground zero and engage in some abstract debate about Federal power marketing and pricing in this country. It is time to get on with the business of the Senate and pass S. 268 in the form that it was passed by the House of Representatives. I urge my colleagues support for this legislation.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, today the Senate considers for the second time the provisions of S. 268, a measure which provides for the uprating of Hoover Dam and which resolves difficult issues relating to the power which that dam generates. This bill originally passed the Senate without a dissenting vote, and I want to underscore that fact. It passed the Senate before without a dissenting vote. This is not the first time we have seen this matter. At that time, S. 268 also provided for retrofitting seven other existing Bureau of Reclamation hydroelectric projects including three which were of particular interest to me. However, during consideration by the other body, these projects were deleted.

While I regret this action, and intend to pursue the deleted projects vigorously, I strongly urge the Senate to pass what remains of the original bill relating to the Hoover Dam. I do so, because the Hoover Dam provisions are extremely important to the people of the States of California, Arizona, and Nevada, as well as the rest of the Colorado River Basin States.

The version of the bill currently before us is the product of a thorough examination during the legislative process and is a compromise which reflects that review. The major provisions of the bill are as follows:

Authorization for the uprating of the capacity of Hoover Dam with 100-percent upfront financing by the power customers.

Authorization for improvement of the visitor facility at the dam and for the construction of a new bridge. Money advanced for the visitor facility will be repaid with interest at standard Treasury rates.

Provision for the allocation of power from the dam thereby resolving potentially costly litigation.

Imposition of a fixed surcharge on power supplied to California and Nevada to be used to carry out the purpose of the Colorado River Basin Salinity Control Act.

Imposition of requirement for conservation on recipients of power from the Hoover Dam.

Mr. President, this is a good bill and I wish to commend my distinguished colleagues from Arizona, Nevada, and California for the work they have done in bringing this bill before the Senate in an acceptable form. I believe an overwhelming majority of the Senate supports this measure. I hope we can pass S. 268 expeditiously without amendment so that it can be forwarded to the President for signature.

I would take a moment to express my own continued support for the concept behind title I of the Senate version of the bill and, in particular, two of the projects that were approved by the Senate.

As my colleagues will recall, the Senate version included an authorization for the replacement of the existing powerplant at the Minidoka Dam in my home State of Idaho. I will not delve deeply into the history of the matter, but I would point out that the authorization was for the replacement of an existing powerplant which is over 70 years old. The feasibility report prepared by the Bureau of Reclamation includes an extensive program for fish and wildlife mitigation and enhancement in conjuction with the project which would include additional generation capacity.

The other project that I would call to the attention of my colleagues was the authorization for the installation of a powerplant at the Yellowtail Afterbay Dam in Montana. Here again, in addition to the development of a clean renewable energy source was also the opportunity to provide a beneficial impact on the environment by reducing nitrogen supersaturation in the waters below the Afterbay Dam.

My colleagues from Montana have addressed the need for further study of the Yellowtail Afterbay project by including $100,000 in the energy and water appropriations bill for a feasibility level study, and I share their strong interest in the project and I support their efforts.

It is my hope that the Congress will be able to further address these two projects as well as others in the very near future.

I appreciate the efforts of all those concerned with this legislation, and I would particularly express my gratitude to Senator NICKLES, chairman of the Subcommittee on Water and Power of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, before whose subcommittee this bill was heard.

Mr. President, in addition, let me make one or two comments about the amendment that has now been offered to the House amendments. As I said in my prepared remarks, the House action has stricken title I. Title I authorized the retrofitting of seven other Federal hydroelectric projects throughout the West. These projects were in the original bill to which the Hoover Dam Act was attached by amendment.

I want to correct one impression that may have been left in the remarks that have been made thus far. In addition to the fact that this bill was before the Senate and acted on by the Senate before, the subject matter of the Hoover Dam Act was discussed before the Subcommittee on Water and Power Resources during hearings on S. 268. So it is not totally without background or new to us here at all.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, would the Senator yield?

Mr. McCLURE. Let me get back to that, if I may.

As I indicated before, this bill passed on August 4, 1983—at the time we had action in this body before. It has been pending in the other body since that time. The bill does not need to be passed. I do not think the Senator from Ohio or any others say that it does not. He has focused on the need to look at the question of power revenues, power rates, and the sale of power structure. But there are other reasons that I have outlined in the bill that give us some sense of urgency with respect to working on the legislation.

In that context, I should also note that even though contracts for the distribution and sale of the power may not need to be extended until 1987, there are reasons you do not wait until the last minute before you move forward. I recognize that the Senator's proffered amendment would extend that period for 1 year so that we would have more time to discuss what he thinks should be discussed more fully at this time, or at some later time with respect to the sale of power.

But let me address just very briefly—I know we will get into this more before we finish this—the question of what should the power sale be? The Senator from Idaho does not get any power from that generated at Hoover Dam. The power that is generated is generated by water that is flowing in a stream that has been dammed and which runs through generators that have been installed in that dam. The power is distributed. The people who have consumed that power have paid enough for that power to pay for all of the initial construction costs—or will have by the end of the license period—all of the original construction cost that was attributed to the power facilities. It is now being urged that indeed that power was too cheap even though they paid back what was invested, and besides that they ought to pay more in the future. Why? Simply because it is there? Simply because as a matter of fact the Federal Government may have the authority to require a payment that is above any cost to the taxpayers of this country? Where is the equity in that?

It seems to me that it is what somebody might term laissez-faire economics—the public be damned.

We have the power to cost you money. We are going to break the taxpayers because we are the Government. We are going to sock it to the consumers because we have the authority.

It does not seem to me that is a position this Senate wishes to take at this or any other time. But I see an all-too-often reiteration of the notion that there should be a market test, see what the traffic will bear, and let us extract from the consumers all that the traffic will bear. That seems to me to be a little strange coming particularly from a self-styled consumer protection advocate on the floor of the Senate that on many, many other occasions has risen to vigorously defend consumers' interests against the rapacious appetite of those who had something to sell.

But it appears in this instance since it is the Federal Government that might be the beneficiary, it is the Federal Government that might have something to sell, suddenly the consumers' interests should be subjected, and subverted to the authority and the greed of the Federal Government.

As I said at the outset, the Senator from Idaho does not represent a State that gets power from this dam. I have no claim on that power. I have no direct interest in the power sale contract. But that great dam would never have been built in the first place if we had the attitude prevailing in the Congress at that time which is being urged upon the Senate this afternoon. We could have none of that investment. We would have none of the benefit of that economic growth. We would have none of the human benefit that has accrued to people through a wide area of this country as the result of the investment of money in the 1930's which has since been repaid.

I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Ohio will be rejected, and that we can then get on with the business of passing the bill for all of the reasons which have been outlined and more which will be outlined further.

Mr. WILSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I rise to join my colleague from Idaho in urging defeat of this amendment, and the support of the underlying legislation, S. 268. I will not repeat the importance to the States of Arizona, Nevada, and my own State of California of achieving the compromise that this legislation represents. Suffice it to say that the upgrading of the Hoover Dam facility will provide Nevada and Arizona with power which they did not need in an earlier, simpler time, which their burgeoning populations, now require; it will additionally guarantee California power upon which it relied for many years, and make available new power to new users in California.

This amendment is totally unnecessary. Beyond that, it is destructive.

What is being proposed here is the increase in capacity of the facility which has historically paid its cost. It has been a self-liquidating facility from the standpoint of Federal taxpayers.

The amendment that is being proposed would destroy this historical basis of cost recovery for Federal power, not just for the recipients of power from this project, but as a precedent it threatens all Federal power users, and there are some 30 to 35 States, I am told, which are in a position not dissimilar to that of California, Arizona, and Nevada. What the Senator from Ohio proposes is that we depart from that historical basis of cost recovery and instead ask that the Federal Government go into business to make a profit.

Well, what that means, of course, is that those who do not have the courage to do the things required to lower the deficit, as indeed I think we will next spring after the election, are looking to this as a means of trying to foist upon water users an unfair share of the burden that should be the responsibility of all Federal taxpayers.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Will the Senator from California yield for a question?

Mr. WILSON. No; not at this time, but I will at the conclusion of my remarks. I will be happy to do so.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WILSON. The fact of the matter is that this is a departure not only from the historical basis of charging for Federal power but for private power as well. What we are doing is saying that we wish to completely leave that tradition, a tradition that sought not a profit for the Federal Government, not to sell to the highest bidder, but to provide power to those who needed it only at the costs that were required.

What this does is to send a message to OPEC that we are not going to seek energy self-sufficiency. What this amendment would do if accepted, unfortunately, would be to reward those utilities who have high rates and punish those with low rates. What it would do is punish ratepayers not just in these three States immediately affected as the recipients of Federal power from the Hoover project, but it threatens, as a precedent, all Federal power users.

Why do we wish to depart from what has been a successful history? Why, when this legislation affords the opportunities to adjust rates to recover fully all costs, including the costs of congressionally mandated purposes, do we need this amendment?

We need it only if we are to engage in some social and fiscal engineering for which there is not only no legitimate defense, but which indeed works a penalty upon those who are least in a position to be able to suffer it.

I have here, Mr. President, a list of all of the purchasers of federally generated hydropower in States that run from Alabama clear through the end of the alphabet, to Washington. There are more than 30 States listed here. The ultimate customers are municipalities, public utility districts, irrigation districts, cooperatives, and a very few investor-owned utilities as well. The vast, vast majority are public power consumers and public power retail marketers.

Mr. President, there will be more to say, although not much more is really required other than to remind people that the three States involved, after some years of multi-State litigation, have come to an agreement. It is an equitable agreement for power sharing, for the allocation of both the old and the new power to be provided by the upgraded Hoover project.

Very simply, there is no legitimate reason to support this amendment. I would have to say that if it is adopted, it will set back not only the settlement but the construction of the improvement that is required if Hoover is to continue its historic task of flood control and the generation of hydroelectric power. This is in no one's interest, not in California, not in Nevada, not even in Ohio, though I note that State is not included in my list.

Mr. President, I urge defeat of the Metzenbaum amendment and the adoption of the underlying amendment, without which the litigation that now can be settled will not be settled.

I yield now to my friend from Ohio for a question.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I thank the Senator from California.

Will the Senator from California advise the Senator from Ohio as to whether he read my amendment?

Mr. WILSON. Yes.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Would the Senator from California be good enough to advise how that will increase rates, affect energy self-sufficiency, and affect all Federal power users? I cannot find anything in the contract for a term of 1 year that will affect those things. The Senator from Ohio does not come to the floor and indicate what rates should be. I do not know what the rates will be. I do know it is a matter that should be given consideration. I do know that it is a matter that should not be handled without hearings ever having been held. I am not suggesting the proper pricing. I am not suggesting selling to the highest bidder. I am suggesting that we set what is the proper pricing policy for this power.

The fact is that there is no policy and there is no tradition for hydropower pricing once the project costs have been recovered. Congress said 50 years ago at the end of 50 years Congress should deal with that issue. What is wrong with taking a year, which really is more than a year because this is 1984 and I am willing to go to 1988, to examine the issues? What is the Senator afraid of? Why should we not examine into it and decide what the right policy is? I might say in passing—well, that is enough for a question.

Mr. WILSON. To go for 50 years would be consistent with financing a utility of this kind. I am sure the Senator in his experience would assure us that is the case.

Mr. METZENBAUM. But this has already been financed and paid for.

Mr. WILSON. The improvement most certainly has not been.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Let me make that clear. The Senator from Ohio is perfectly willing to sit down and discuss the language of the House bill as it returned from the House absent the pricing and allocation aspects, and I might even be willing to take a look at the allocation matter.

I have no problem or fault to find with the House bill absent the pricing and the allocation aspect. I am making it clear that I am willing to take a look at the allocation issue.

Mr. WILSON. With all due respect, that kindly offer is not one we feel necessary. The allocation has been agreed upon by the parties involved.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Who are the three States who have the right to tell the rest of the Nation how we should divide the power that all States own? They do not own this power. The people of this country own the power.

So they sat down and they negotiated what 47 other States are going to give them? That is not the way we normally negotiate. Normally somebody is there for the other side of the issue. Those three States are only concerned about how they would divide it among themselves.

Mr. WILSON. I think they are entitled to do that. That has been the history of public power and properly so because the cost recovery is paid by the users. Why should not the three States involved be the ones that make that allocation?

Mr. METZENBAUM. Because they do not own the power.

Mr. WILSON. They are the ones who pay for it.

Mr. METZENBAUM. They pay for the power on special terms arranged over 50 years ago when we provided that facility, and we provided specifically that at the end of the 50 years Congress would arrive at a determination as to what policy should prevail.

All the Senator from Ohio is saying is that Congress ought to bite the bullet and face up to its responsibility. I am not saying what the price should be, but Arizona, Nevada, and California do not have the right to tell the rest of the country what the price should be and certainly without any hearings having been held in the U.S. Senate.

Mr. McCLURE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILSON. I am happy to yield to my distinguished colleague from Idaho.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I object to the procedure of one Senator yielding to the other. I have no objection whatsoever to the Chair recognizing the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. McCLURE. I would hope the Senator from Ohio who has indulged himself in the advantage of having the Senator from California yield, would not now find it unnecessarily abrasive to have the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. METZENBAUM. No. The Senate rules provide for that.

Mr. McCLURE. Certainly the Senate rules provide for that, and I will not abuse it. I am not certain whether the Senator from Ohio objected to the Senator from California yielding.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I am only really suggesting that which I think is a simple procedure and ask that the Chair recognize the Senator from Idaho rather than——

Mr. McCLURE. The Senator from California, I think, has the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. GORTON]. The Senator from California has the floor.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I do not think much of the idea of one yielding to the other, but I do not want to deny the Senator from Idaho being heard.

Mr. McCLURE. I thank the Senator from Ohio for withholding objection and I thank the Senator from California for yielding.

Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio has, I think, phrased it well when he said it is his belief that this is not just a matter for the concern of the people who pay for the power; that in his view the power is owned by all of the people of the United States. but I would point out that under the bill—and the Senator from Ohio asked if, indeed, the Senator from California had read his amendment. I wonder if the Senator from Ohio has read the bill, because—unfortunately, apparently he does not realize that the bill provides that there will be some enhanced power provisions at this installation and that that project financing will be 100 percent up front, financed by the users. Am I not correct?

Mr. WILSON. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McCLURE. And that the bill is not asking the people of the United States to finance the enhancement; it is to permit the people who are the users of the power to finance the enhancement; am I not correct?

Mr. WILSON. The Senator is absolutely correct again.

Mr. McCLURE. It seems to me that under those circumstances, had the Senator from Ohio read the bill before he criticized it, he would have known that, indeed, there is the need for more than a 1-year extension in order that the people who are going to pay for the power can get the financing to avoid the necessity of asking the people of the rest of the country to put up the money to finance the additional facilities at that installation. I thank the Senator from California for yielding.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator is absolutely correct, and I think that is a very valid point. What we are doing with this legislation is avoiding going to the Federal Government and asking them to finance it. I am sure the Senator from Ohio would not want us to do that. We are not doing that. We are going to the marketplace; the market bonds will be based upon reasonable cost recovery.

Mr. HECHT. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield?

Mr. WILSON. I ask that the Chair recognize my colleague from Nevada. I have nothing more. I thank the Chair.

Mr. HECHT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. HECHT. I would like to refer to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, S11642 dated August 4, 1983, so that we can clear the record. The Senator from Ohio stated earlier that the Hoover Dam compromise in title 2 of S. 268 was added by an amendment without any notice to the Senate prior to passage. Mr. President, I wish to correct the record. On June 21, 1983, 2 weeks before the Senate passed this bill, I submitted to the Senate a printed amendment, No. 1424, with the Hoover Dam compromise. Two weeks later on August 4, 1983, the Senate passed this bill with that amendment. At that time, before the August recess of 1983, we all recall that the Senator from Ohio carefully monitored all legislation and consent agreements. Consequently, it is completely clear that all Members of the Senate had full and complete notice of the Hoover Dam amendment well before the Senate acted and acted without the objection of the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, it is a pleasure to rise in support of S. 268, the Hoover Dam legislation. This legislation is the result of a delicate settlement reached after 5 years of public hearings and compromises reached by the many involved parties.

The bill provides for enlarging the capacity of Hoover powerplant by approximately 500 megawatts. This will be accomplished by modernizing the existing generating units. There will be no environmental impact. The total capital will be paid in full by the power users as contributed funds—there will be no cost to the Federal Government.

The power users will pay not only the construction cost, including interest plus operations and maintenance costs, but will also pay the costs for federally mandated purposes such as desalination and river augmentation.

Colorado River developments have a long history of protracted lawsuits. Lawsuits have been filed with regard to Hoover power marketing. These lawsuits will be dropped and the situation cleared up when the legislation is passed.

In California, a tremendous effort has been made to reduce the dependence of the utilities on oil for electric generation. Passage of S. 268 will assure the availability of a reasonable amount of Hoover energy to California, and will reduce the need to burn oil to provide electricity.

In summary, this bill provides a very balanced approach to utilization of Federal resources. It provides for the beneficiaries to pay all costs and allocate the resource for the good of all people in the region.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio to change the term of the Hoover contract to less than 30 years should be opposed, I submit, in order for the utilities to put up the capital to enlarge the Hoover powerplant. They must have a reasonable period to amortize their investment. Assuming a 15-year leadtime to develop a new resource and a 5-year period to reallocate the resource—present process has taken over 5 years—if a contract term of 20 years was used, a new marketing process would need to start on the same day that the new contracts take effect.

For these reasons, Mr. President, I urge our colleagues to join in rejecting the amendment of the Senator from Ohio and in adopting the legislation before us without change.

Mr. GOLDWATER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona is recognized.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I have listened to my friend from Ohio with a great deal of interest. I have that strong suspicion that when he was taking some conservatives to task for backing this particular piece of legislation, he was aiming his arrows at me. I am very happy to receive them. The bow is rather weak so I am able to withstand the impact.

Mr. President, so the Senator from Ohio might have a better idea of our problem, Arizona is the fastest growing industrial State in the Nation. Arizona is a very young State. In fact, I am older than the State of Arizona, and I am not very young. But we have had phenomenal growth. Now, I remember when the first dam was completed that provided some electricity. We now call it the Salt River project. It was then the Salt River Valley water users. That system was paid for by private money under bond. That was the source of really our first power. After that time, steam generation was used. It was privately developed power. Today we get power from Hoover Dam. It is a very small percentage of the total electricity that we use. In fact, without falling water power, whether it is privately developed or publicly developed, there would be no real West as we know it today. Now, for example, the utility in Phoenix is building a $3.5 billion nuclear plant that we hope will provide electricity for our growing population. We are not sure that even this $3.5 billion investment will suffice. So we look to the sources on which we are now depending, and this one source, not a major source, is Hoover Dam.

Everyone is aware that electric rates have increased dramatically during the last several years because of cost increases resulting to a large extent from the actions of the OPEC cartel. One resource that has helped in at least moderating the wild increases in cost by OPEC is power from Federal projects. Power users have historically paid cost based rates for Federal power. At Hoover, power is priced—and I hope my friend from Ohio understands this—to return the construction cost allocated to power with interest along with operation and maintenance costs, and costs associated with federally mandated purposes such as flood control, desalinization, river augmentation, and in this particular case, although I would not argue it too strongly, a navigable stream. That was one of the major navigable streams in the West until the construction of the dam.

This type of pricing policy generally applies to Federal power projects which provides power to consumers in 35 States. Recently, attempts have been made to raise the price of Hoover power to reflect so-called market or marginal rates with the excess revenue being used to solve the Federal deficit problems. Put another way—the proposal would tax electric consumers to solve the Federal budget problems.

I might say that the construction of hydroelectric dams by the Federal Government or by private money has certainly not added to the deficits under which we are laboring in this country today.

S. 268 is an outstanding example of people working together to solve problems rather than attacking each other. The primary purpose of the bill is to authorize enlargement of the Hoover powerplant to provide additional environmentally sound electric generation to meet the needs of the people without the use of any money from the Federal Government. The bill is the culmination of a 5-year public process by the Department of Energy and negotiations among the affected parties. There now appears to be an effort to delay passage of this legislation. Let me explain in some detail.

S. 268 was passed in 1983. The House version of S. 268 (H.R. 4275) was approved by the House committee with very little opposition in the spring of 1984. However, when the bill reached the floor an amendment was introduced which would throw out the agreements reached during the last 5 years and have Hoover power sold to the highest bidder. Recognizing that such an amendment would, first, destroy the historic concept of selling federally generated electric power on a cost-of-service basis; second, abolish the concept of public preference in the sale of federally generated electric power; third, completely destroy the orderly marketing process required by law; fourth, reward utilities who have high rates and punish those with low rates; and, fifth, eliminate any possibility providing stable power costs to the consumers, the House rejected the amendment and passed the bill in May 1984.

If any of my friends listening to the lower power rates quoted by the Senator from Ohio think that we people who live in Arizona are living high on the hog on power rates, my monthly bill last month was $482. I will match that against any bill paid in Ohio, Maine, New York, or any other place.

S. 268 is now before the Senate for concurrence in the amendments made by the House. It is understood that additional amendments will be offered in the Senate in order to either kill the bill by delay or interject amendments to reopen the pricing issue. It is obvious that if any amendments are accepted, the bill will have to go back to the House, where further delays are possible.

S. 268 as written provides for new contracts with a term of 30 years. Provisions are in place to adjust rates to recover fully all costs, including the costs of congressionally mandated purposes. No changes are necessary. The contract term of 30 years was chosen by the Department of Energy only after lengthy hearings.

With respect to the suggestion made by the Senator from Ohio that we have a short extension of the Hoover contracts which expire in 1987 rather than the needed 30 years, he is a very successful businessman, and he knows that 5 or 10 years is not sufficient to develop an alternative resource. Power from Hoover Dam is a sole source for many irrigation districts in Nevada and Arizona; 5 or 10 years would not allow time to find other power at a reasonable price. In fact, I can say that there is no more power in Arizona for any purposes. The utility business is a long leadtime business.

We may hear arguments that the contracts should be subject to rate changes in the future. The contracts will be subject to revision to reflect changes in costs. To go beyond that will destroy the basis for long term contracts. Problems with the concept of allowing for major midstream price adjustments include:

First, in selling bonds to pay the costs of enlarging Hoover, the utilities must show that the costs of power during the bond repayment period are reasonable. This cannot be done if they do not know what the power will cost.

Second, the concept of allowing major midterm contract price adjustments is not a Federal policy and should not be considered on a spur of the moment basis.

Third, arguments that Congress may want to consider other price provisions in the future are not germane. If Congress wants to adopt new policies in the future it, of course, can but they should not be retroactively applied.

Fourth, the Federal Government should help bring stability to the cost of power to the consumer, not leave the people wondering what they may have to pay.

S. 268 relates to Hoover power. However, if it is amended as to pricing, similar provisions will undoubtedly be proposed for other Federal power projects soon thereafter. Once Federal power is compromised in this way perhaps a tax, over and above costs, could be proposed for water, sewage effluent, and other items such that the consumers of this country could all pay more to balance the budget. The precedent that is being proposed would in the end affect every State.

To set such a precedent without benefit of even one committee hearing is irrational. S. 268 should be passed immediately. I have no doubt that, under the chairmanship of my friend from Idaho, any necessary changes in power rates would be very hurriedly agreed to, not only by him but by his committee as well.

Mr. President, if necessary, I will have more to say on this subject. I urge the defeat of the proposed amendment by my friend from Ohio.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I think we ought to understand that there are two separate parts to this bill.

One part has to do with new projects, concerning which I have no objection. They are projects for which I believe an appropriate formula is provided for repayment, and I agree with the Senator from Arizona that you cannot finance those new projects with 5-year contracts. I am not saying that. We are talking about those projects most of which I think were in the original bill as it left the Senate, and I believe there is merit to the inclusion of those projects as spelled out by the House. I have no problem with respect to the matter of term concerning those contracts, those new facilities.

Then, we have the other part of the subject, and that has to do with the Hoover Dam as it is at the moment, the one that was built 50 years ago. That has been repaid, and now it is a question of renewing the contract or renewing the term with respect to the matter of those facilities.

I think we have to recognize that they are totally different issues. One has to do with whether or not we are fairly paid as the Federal Government for that which is in place and that which is paid off or whether we sell it for rates that are about one-fourth to one-fourteenth of the going rate for electricity in the area.

I have said previously that I do not know if those are the correct rates, or I do not know what are the correct rates, but I think it is appropriate that the Federal Government concern itself with the subject before it goes about renewing the term for 30 years.

The argument is then made when the distinguished manager of the bill, the Senator from Idaho, talked about some of the projects that are needed and that are provided for in this legislation. This is to advise him and the Senator from Arizona and all others who are interested in this legislation that I am prepared to work out arrangements or legislation having to do with the new projects because our differences do not result from the legislative language concerning the new projects.

Where we are in disagreement has to do with the Hoover Dam, the one that was built 50 years ago, and the question of what rates will be charged in the future concerning those facilities.

That is a fair issue to be determined, and again I repeat I am not the one who says what those rates should be. When the matter was before the House of Representatives and it was urged that the rates be set at market, the measure was defeated by a rather narrow margin. I think the figure—and I mentioned it before—was 214 or 212 to 176.

The Senator from Ohio was not offering that kind of amendment here. My amendment is far more modest than that.

My amendment would only provide for a 1-year extension rather than a 30-year extension, and I am realist enough to understand that that does create some problems with respect to the new projects. I am willing at any time that the sponsors of the legislation want to do so, to sit down to draft appropriate language to separate the new from the old.

I am frank to say that it was not my understanding that this measure was coming to the floor today, and I am told by a number of others that they were taken by surprise as well. I do not fault the majority leader in that connection. It is certainly within his prerogative. But I believe that as a consequence the separation which they would seek was not worked out in advance with them or their representatives.

But if at any time or overnight the managers of the bill want to work out language dealing with the new projects being separated from the old projects, the Senator from Ohio and his staff will certainly be very cooperative.

I have no more to say. I see the junior Senator from Arizona on the floor waiting for an opportunity to be heard. I have been heard several times previously and I have no problem at all in yielding the floor in order that he might be recognized by the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Ohio.

Let me start off by saying that the Senator from Ohio has met with some Members of this body who have an interest in this bill. We did so roughly 1 week ago last Sunday, and we discussed it at great length and the Senator from Ohio just reiterated his willingness to divide the bill at that time. He also talked about the 1-year extension and I think it was adequately explained at that time that this would substantially hinder the ability of a number of States who share in the power of Hoover Dam to be able to raise funds through bonding and the surcharges that would be attached to the power that they will receive under it.

I well realize that the Senator from Ohio knows this because we went into it at great length, and I understand his strong commitment here.

I do hope that we can have a vote on this particular amendment.

As has been pointed out by the senior Senator from Arizona, both Senators from California, but the senior Senator from California, who I happened to be listening to, indicated that there is a great deal hinging on the passage of this bill including litigation by all the States involved and that includes Arizona and California, and the other border States in the area, that of necessity this is a solution that has passed the House of Representatives that would forgo perhaps 1 year or more of litigation, and there is so much on this that I hope my colleagues will defeat the Senator's amendment and we will have an opportuanity to vote on the amendment so we can get on with the bill.

As far as splitting the two areas of new power facilities and old ones, that really is not before us here, and I see no reason why we should dwell on that and I think we have a bill that has been put together with thoughtful consideration. This is a victory for what I think the Senator from Ohio wants to achieve and that is an increase in the cost and what will be paid for the power from public facilities or generators at Hoover Dam because it is a substantial increase. It also provides in this bill that States can add a surcharge and Arizona intends to add a surcharge in order to pay for some of its needs for other projects within the State.

So it is my hope that we can defeat this amendment.

I will be glad to yield the floor.

Mr. HECHT. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio seems to imply that Hoover Dam is different; that this is the first big project in the original 50-year retainment period that ran its course, that we should not pass S. 268 until we have had time to review pricing policies for projects that have been fully paid out.

First of all, Hoover has not been fully paid out. Certain features of Hoover will not be repaid until well after 1987.

Many other dams across the country are in the same situation as Hoover. Roosevelt Dam in Arizona and Wilson Dam on the TVA system are older than Hoover.

Moreover, there are hydroelectric and thermal power projects all across this country that have been fully amortized by both private and public utilities. These companies are not allowed to earn a profit on these dams; every Public Utility Commission in the Nation requires that power from these projects be sold at cost.

There is nothing new or novel in the issue you raise. Utility regulators and even Congress have spoken on this issue repeatedly in the past. Why, just a few weeks ago, the Senate unanimously approved an amendment to the energy and water appropriations bill prohibiting the use of Federal funds to study market based or other alternative pricing criteria for Federal power.

I think it is absurd that all this cheap power goes to an exclusive group of utilities, the so-called Hoover Club.

The Hoover Club consists of those States and utilities who were willing to participate in the construction of what was then the largest dam project in history. Power is allocated as follows: 18 percent to the State of Arizona; 18 percent to the State of Nevada; 36 percent to the Metropolitan Water District—for pumping water; 24 percent to the city of Los Angeles; and 4 percent to the Southern California Edison Co.

These companies serve more than 15 million people in the American Southwest. It could hardly be said that the benefits of Hoover power go to some exclusive club.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to S. 268, the Hoover Dam bill, and in support of the amendment which I understand the Senator from Ohio will offer in connection with the bill.

Frankly, I find it much easier to explain my reasons for opposition than to understand why anyone could support this bill.

Why do I oppose this bill? First, look at the economics. We face a $175 billion deficit this year. The Congressional Budget Office estimates that unless we change our ways that deficit could exceed $300 billion by 1989.

One of the best ways to make a change, to reduce the deficit is to eliminate subsidies which are now obsolete. A subsidy which may have served a useful purpose 50 years ago may well be obsolete today.

This bill continues a subsidy begun 50 years ago and continues it for another 30 years, another 3 decades. That subsidy is the sale of power from the Hoover Dam at a price which is about one-tenth its market value.

Think of that, Mr. President, in this day and age. We face a staggering deficit. Reducing that deficit is going to require sacrifices on the part of everyone, except those who buy Federal power generated at the Hoover Dam. Delay cost-of-living adjustments for those on Social Security—no problem. Cut money for food stamps—again no problem. But ask those who use electric power to pay a fair price—no way.

This subsidy is no nickle and dime, affair. If we asked those who use this power to pay a reasonable price, the Federal Government would earn an additional $6 billion over the next decade. That is the $6 billion we would not have to take from the wallets of the American taxpayer or out of the hides of Social Security recipients.

The President of the United States yesterday deplored the tendency on the part of the Federal Government, especially under the Democrats, to encourage, and I quote, a "deeper dependency" of citizens on the Government. Well, dependencies come in many varieties. Here, we have a $6 billion dependency, started during the Depression, and today we are being asked to continue that dependency for another 30 years.

Where is the administration? Where are all the fiscal conservatives who serve in this body? For once, let us end a subsidy when it should be ended.

Mr. President, reducing the deficit is not the only reason to end this subsidy. The electric power generated at Hoover Dam is grossly underpriced and that leads to a misallocation of resources. Those with access to this power can irrigate and farm lands where such farming would otherwise be uneconomical. Industry builds plants which would otherwise be located elsewhere. This type of misallocation is not free—not by any stretch of the imagination.

Who pays for these boondoggles? First, the taxpayers do because they have to make up the cost of this subsidy. Second, farmers, workers, and small businesses in other sections of the country pay once again because they have to compete against those who use this cheap power—cheap courtesy of Uncle Sucker. Finally, our environment suffers. Regions and communities shut off from this power will try to compensate. How many extra dams will be built. How many beautiful whitewater streams will be ruined as a result?

Mr. President, I said earlier that I could not understand why anyone would support this bill. That statement was exaggerated a little. Certainly, those who benefit from this cheap power want to retain their advantage. They number perhaps 4 to 5 million people. Simple arithmetic, however, shows that perhaps 220 million people lose.

Yet those 4 to 5 million may prevail over 220 million. If you want a textbook example of how an organized, small special interest can win over the chaotic, numerically dominant majority, this bill provides the text for that lesson.

The 4 to 5 million stand immediately to lose something tangible—cheap power. But for the unorganized majority their losses—factories moved, jobs lost, streams destroyed, prices increased—are vague and indefinite.

Mr. President, if we pass this bill we will set a precedent that will come back to haunt us. Over the next 2 to 3 years we are going to have to cut the deficit.

It is going to be very painful, and very difficult for every Member of this body. It is going to be unpopular. We are going to have to do it. We do not have any real alternative, and we know it.

I prefer to reduce that deficit by cutting spending to the extent possible and only as a last resort raising taxes. I am sure most Members of this body feel the same way. But if we are going to cut spending, we are also going to have to take a hard look at all of the subsidies, all of the spending programs built into the budget.

We now have an opportunity to do just that. We know that food stamps go to the needy, that Social Security and medicare help the elderly, many of who are needy. Who benefits from this power subsidy? Only those in one small region. If we cannot cut this subsidy, is it fair to cut spending for food stamps? Of course it is not.

Let us be honest—we are going to have to raise some taxes. My preference is to try to raise the minimum amount of taxes required. But if we cannot eliminate an obsolete subsidy, what chance do we have to hold down the inevitable tax increase. I say "very little."

What we have here is a fundamental issue of fairness. This bill continues a 50-year-old subsidy. It costs the taxpayer at last $6 billion over the next 10 years. It benefits one small region of the country at the expense of every other section of the country.

Mr. President, I wish that the leadership had not brought this bill to the floor at this time. They may see it as a relatively noncontroversial continuation of a 50-year-old policy.

But this bill is far more than that. It is the opening shot in the battle of the budget which will carry over into next year. What we do today will echo again and again throughout this Chamber.

Do we have the courage to take a look at every subsidy in the Federal budget? Then let us start here.

Do we have the sagacity and wisdom to recognize change and to eliminate obsolete programs? Then let us start here.

Do we have the foresight to reduce the deficit by $6 billion over the next 10 years? Then let us start here.

Do we have the endurance to start cutting back on what the President called a "deeper dependency?" Then let us start here.

If we do not, if we miss this opportunity, we will have taken a giant step backward. We will have set a precedent which will haunt us next year.

Mr. President, it is my understanding that my distinguished colleague from Ohio, Senator METZENBAUM, has an amendment to extend the terms of this contract for 1 year. That would give us time to take a closer look at this issue. I think it is certainly a reasonable and prudent action.

It seems to this Senator that is the absolute minimum we should do.

I commend my good friend from Ohio for once again acting as a sentinel on the floor of the Senate against a giveaway program, as he has done so often and so very effectively over the years.

I earnestly hope that the Senate will see fit to adopt his amendment.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. METZENBAUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I want to thank my colleague and good friend from Wisconsin. Almost without exception, or I have no recollection of any exception, he has never failed to protect the Treasury and the people of this country. The Senator from Wisconsin has made himself known as that one person who would expose before the Senate the improprieties and giveways of the Federal Government.

He now rises to support a position I have taken in this matter, and I am very grateful to him in this regard.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. SPECTER]. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Washington is recognized.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. President, I have listened with considerable interest to the debate this afternoon and, of course, have had a good deal of experience with this whole subject during my term as chairman of the Pacific Northwest Power Council and in previous debates on this floor and in reading very carefully the debate in the House of Representatives during the so-called Boxer amendment.

While I am very much aware of the particular nature of the amendment before us, I think that everyone knows what the real rationale is. I would like to for a few moments discuss the concept of subsidy which has been raised so many times this afternoon, a strained one, I might add, and the extension of this same principle the Senator from Ohio would institute to other parts of the infrastructure of this Nation.

My idea of subsidy is the supplying of money or other resources to a project which is unable to carry its own cost by itself. It is a strained view, indeed, of a subsidy which says here in an area served by public power we ask the ratepayers to pay all of the costs of construction, all of the costs of operation and maintenance, and all of the costs of any enhancement during the life of the project but then in addition any other amount that you can get out of the ratepayers who are captive to that particular utility. And if you do not get every last penny out of the ratepayer, somehow that is subsidy. That in my view is a strained view indeed of a subsidy. But if we want to talk about a subsidy, let us look at some other parts of the infrastructure of this country.

The St. Lawrence Seaway is a good example, and I suspect that the Senator from Ohio has some particular knowledge of that particular construction project.

The original authorization in 1954 required repayment of construction, the cost of construction, the principal, the interest, and the operation and maintenance costs, as is properly the case. But there has been an interesting and checkered history since.

In 1970, the act was amended to forgive interest rates. In 1983, in the Department of Transportation appropriations bill, we forgave principal to the extent of $110 million. The tolls now are reduced to supplying only operation and maintenance, and I suspect that there may well be some proposal in the future to eliminate one or the other or both of those remaining charges.

If we are going to expand this concept of "market rates" for captive customers, that is not my view of a market rate. The market rate should be where there are competitors on both sides, where there are alternatives on both sides. But when a monopoly exists, it is difficult indeed to use the concept of market rates.

I suggest that it might be useful, if this Nation wants to cut the deficit in this fashion, to offer up for bids some of the key locks on the Saint Lawrence Seaway, to see whether in fact someone is willing to bid sufficiently for those, to pay the Federal Government some fee, in order to charge higher tolls—what "the market would bear." Perhaps we could; perhaps we could not.

Nonetheless, we are likely to get ourselves to a point, if we extend this concept logically to the many other places in the country where it could be extended, to literally auction off the infrastructure of the United States to the highest bidder. I think that is bad policy.

We could, for example, with substantially the same logic, to cut the deficit, ask that the interstate highway system, particularly some key bridges or sole routes through the mountains, be auctioned off, so that a successful bidder could place tolls on those stretches and charge "what the market would bear."

Again, we would perhaps reduce the deficit of the Federal Government, but at great cost and with little alternative to the many users of that system.

Some may say that my interest is particularly in maintaining the low power rates of the Pacific Northwest through the Bonneville Power Administration. I suggest that the market is already effective in the Pacific Northwest. Currently, we are seeing the shutdown of one aluminum plant after another because electricity prices are too high, not too low.

The concept applied just to one area such as this does not make sense, especially in the field of electric energy, where there are few, if any, alternatives, where we have established the concept of monopoly both for publicly owned as well as investor-owned utilities. We do not suggest in either case that the customers pay "market rates." We limit the price charged by an investor-owned utility; and every State with an investor-owned utility has a regulatory commission to ensure that the prices charged by that utility are no more than enough to cover operation and maintenance, new construction, and a small profit to the shareholders in order to ensure that there can be continuing financing, particularly through the equity of that company.

So we do not use it for investor-owned utilities. We have not used it for publicly owned utilities. We have not used it, so far as I know, in any other significant part of the infrastructure of this Nation; and I suggest that it is bad policy, especially in an amendment on this bill, to start such a radical change in activity in this Nation.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, will my colleague from Washington yield for a question?

Mr. EVANS. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. GORTON. As I have listened to what the Senator has said, do I correctly interpret his point to be that the word "subsidy" can be used in at least two different senses, and the so-called subsidy which is being attacked by the amendment of the Senator from Ohio is not a subsidy which paid for either the construction or the operation and maintenance of Hoover Dam, the facility in question? Is that correct?

Mr. EVANS. That is correct.

Mr. GORTON. And that the only fashion in which the word "subsidy" is used or attacked here is in the sense that because the Hoover Dam has what amounts to a captive set of ratepayers, the market would bear a higher price for power than that which is charged by the Hoover agency?

Mr. EVANS. That is correct. Or there may well be alternative ratepayers who would engage in bidding, seeking to raise rates to the maximum degree possible, and the losers would be out. The winners would pay considerably higher prices; but, in any case, there would be a monopoly, with no competition then allowed.

Mr. GORTON. Do I take it that the subsidy which the Senator from Washington has pointed out attaches to the Saint Lawrence waterway is a subsidy of quite a different and more drastic nature and now, by action of Congress, amounts to a subsidy not only for the principal cost of construction of those facilities but for the interest on that principal cost as well?

Mr. EVANS. That is correct, and that is my view of what constitutes a normal definition of subsidy—when you start out a project knowing what it costs or what you expect it to cost, and then find out, when you are part way through, that you cannot pay for it.

Mr. GORTON. And that subsidy is not being attacked by this amendment?

Mr. EVANS. No; not at all.

Mr. GORTON. My colleague from Washington also pointed out that the rationale for this amendment could also quite logically be applied to at least key portions of the Interstate Highway System, where theoretically the taxpayers of the United States could recover significant amounts of their investments if those key portions were put out to the highest bidder. Is that not correct?

Mr. EVANS. I do not think it would be a case of recovering the key portions of their investments, because it could be suggested logically that those stretches of interstate systems were built through gas taxes and weight fees on trucks. But they certainly could gain a substantial income to the Federal Government and to the taxpayers which would go to reduce the deficit, simply because they could get it from people who had no other choice than to cross a bridge which is now free and which could be tolled, and they would have little other alternative than to pay the toll.

Mr. GORTON. Would not the same logic which is behind this amendment logically be extended to charging what the traffic will bear for visitors to the national parks of the United States?

Mr. EVANS. Well, I had not thought of that as an example, but that certainly could be a logical extension of this. I think that, in the true sense of the word, we are subsidizing, through general taxpayer funds, the costs of operation and maintenance of our National Park System. We have done it deliberately, as we have done all these other things deliberately. I do not think anyone would suggest now, because we could currently reduce the national deficit, that we should charge what the traffic would bear and reserve the national parks to the rich.

Mr. GORTON. It is the point of my colleague from the State of Washington that it is appropriate national policy that we subsidize the operation of a national park; that it is appropriate national policy that we not charge what the traffic will bear for the use of key bridges of the Interstate Highway System; and that it is equally appropriate public policy that the Hoover Dam, having paid off the cost of its construction and interest charges on that construction, should not now be subject to a quasi-monopoly set of charges to its ratepayers for the future production of power from that facility.

Mr. EVANS. That is correct.

I think it makes perfectly good sense to insist that we ask the beneficiaries of projects such as Hoover Dam to pay for that initial cost, to pay for operation and maintenance, to pay for enhancement and not expect direct subsidy as is the case in the Saint Lawrence Seaway, but not ask for any more than that, any more than we would ask a person who 30 years ago bought a home, made a deal with the bank, paid the mortgage, the principal cost, the interest, the operation and maintenance of that home and having paid the mortgage, now has the bank come back and say, "Well, we would like you to pay some more, just because it is possible for you to pay some more."

Mr. GORTON. And because perhaps the value of the house was now greater than it was when he purchased it.

Mr. EVANS. That is correct.

Mr. GORTON. I thank my colleague, the Senator from Washington, for his enlightened discussion.

Mr. EVANS. I yield the floor.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The bill clerk resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The legislative clerk resumed the call of the roll, and the following Senators entered the Chamber and answered to their names:

[Quorum No. 7 Leg.]

Cranston	Gorton	Metzenbaum
DeConcini	Hecht	Specter
Evans	McClure

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is not present. The clerk will call the names of absent Senators.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move that the Sergeant at Arms be instructed to request the attendance of absent Senators, and I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ARMSTRONG] is necessarily absent.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. CHILES], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIXON], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HART], the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. TSONGAS], are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 92, nays 2, as follows:

So the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. With the addition of Senators voting who did not answer the quorum call, a quorum is now present.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, the Senate is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I send to the desk a cloture motion and ask that it be stated by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The cloture motion having been presented under rule XXII, the Chair directs the clerk to read the motion.

The bill clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provision of Rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close debate on the Baker motion to concur in the House amendment to S. 268, the Hoover Powerplant Act of 1984.

Senators Howard Baker, Ted Stevens, James A. McClure, Pete Wilson, Daniel J. Evans, Chic Hecht, Barry Goldwater, Alan Cranston, Orrin Hatch, Jeremiah Denton, John East, Dennis DeConcini, Mark Hatfield, Thad Cochran, Mack Mattingly, Paul Trible, Paul Laxalt, Max Baucus, Pete Domenici, Jeff Bingaman, John Melcher, and Jake Garn.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I anticipate that the distinguished assistant minority leader will shortly——

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President—I beg the majority leader's pardon—may we have order in the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

The majority leader.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senate is not in order yet. May we have order in the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will Senators please take their seats and clear the well?

The majority leader.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Chair, and I thank the minority leader.

Mr. President, I anticipate that in a few moments the distinguished acting minority leader may make a motion to table the Metzenbaum amendment to the House amendment in which the motion seeks to concur. Before that, however, I understand that the distinguished Senator from Ohio wishes to speak.

Could I inquire of the Senator from Ohio how long he wishes to speak?

Mr. METZENBAUM. Very briefly.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I certainly wish to accommodate the Senator in that respect, and in just a moment I am going to yield the floor so the Senator from Ohio can seek recognition for that purpose.

Before I do that, Mr. President, I announced earlier that I thought we would be out by 6 p.m. I would like to rescind that estimate.

Mr. President, we still have the so-called Baby Doe bill that I had announced we would do tonight. I am told that we believe that a time agreement on that measure has been cleared, and if the minority leader is prepared for me to do so, I am prepared to put that unanimous-consent request at this time.

Mr. President, I think that may be just a bit premature. But may I say to my colleagues that we are going to try to finish the unanimous-consent request providing for time on that bill. I estimate that if we get the agreement, it will take about an hour. And it would be the intention of the leadership on this side to ask us to finish that bill tonight, if we get that agreement, and I hope we do.

Mr. President, I now yield the floor.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, before the distinguished majority leader yields the floor, if the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from California will indulge me, would the distinguished majority leader indicate what the plans are for tomorrow?

Mr. BAKER. Yes, Mr. President. May I say, first of all, that if we do not do the Baby Doe matter tonight, it would be my intention to go to that tomorrow. I have a strong preference for doing it tonight, if possible. If we could do that tonight, I am not sure what we can clear for tomorrow. If we cannot do it tonight, we will be here, and on that, tomorrow. I am not now saying we will not be in session tomorrow because there are other matters that we might deal with. If the manority leader would let me pursue this matter, I will try to have another announcement.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the majority leader.

AMENDMENT NO. 3418

Mr. METZENBAUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, speaking for my colleagues so you may understand what this issue is about, the Senator from California is about to make a motion to table the amendment of the Senator from Ohio. The Hoover Dam has had a contract for a term of 50 years. That contract will expire on May 31, 1987. My amendment would extend that 1 additional year. The legislation before you without the amendment would extend it for 30 years.

When this matter was in the House, the House voted on the question of setting the rates at the market figure. That would be anywhere from 400 percent to 1,400 percent higher than the present rate. People in Arizona, California, and Nevada who are presently served by the Hoover Dam are paying about half of a cent per kilowatthour. The average rate throughout the country for electrical power is about 13 times that amount, 6½ cents per kilowatthour, according to the advice given to me today by the CRS.

The issue before the House was whether the rate should be set, and whether or not the power should be available to all of the States. I have no issue about that—in other words, whether it could be publicly bid. It lost in the House by a vote of 212 or 214 to 176.

My amendment does not address itself as to what the rate should be, nor am I concerned about the question of allocation. I am perfectly agreeable to having the power allocated to the three States that presently get it. Nor do I have any fault to find with that part of the legislation that has to do with the upgrading of a number of additions to the Hoover Dam. That is not the issue. The issue is whether or not Congress will do that which we were expected to do 50 years ago when it was indicated that at the end of the term—this is in the law—that Congress would decide what the rate should be. I do not know what the rate should be. But I would propose that either Congress or an independent commission give the Congress some indication as to what the rate should be.

So I am asking you to vote for a 1-year extension instead of a 30-year extension. That would take it up to May 31, 1988, and during that period of time we would have an adequate opportunity in order to resolve and determine what the rate should be. The opponents will say to you, and those who are offering the amendment, that they need the longer term for the upgrading of the new facilities; for the upgrading of the additions. I have made it clear—we have practically come to an agreement on that point—that I am not at issue on that. We are not at issue on that point. I am willing to agree to whatever language is necessary in order to make the upgrading, and to provide the lengthened term. I am willing to accept the language of the House which I understand is acceptable to most parties. I also am not challenging the question of the three States getting the electricity or the power.

So I would hope that when you consider this issue that you keep before you the question of what is the right thing to do with these dams that have been paid for that are not owned by the Federal Government; whether or not the power should be sold at greatly subsidized rates, which also in my opinion makes it possible and causes a good deal of waste in connection with that power.

I thank you for listening to me. I am ready for the Senator from California, whenever he wishes to make the motion to table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I will be even briefer than the Senator from Ohio in presenting the other side of this issue. The Hoover Dam facilities need to be upgraded. The bill provides for such upgrading at full cost to the users. The bill provides for a 30-year contract fixing the price of power at full cost. the Metzenbaum amendment would amend to limit the contract to 1 year.

Mainly, the users do need a long-term contract to assure the economic viability of their investment in upgrading Hoover, which is going to cost $77 million. If we wait 1 year, go to a 5-year, or 10-year, or some other shorter term, bonds cannot be sold, and the improvements cannot occur. The upgrading would increase the generating capacity of Hoover by one-third. It is plainly in the national interest to make maximum use of hydroelectric power.

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, would the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CRANSTON. Of course.

Mr. McCLURE. The Senator from California referred to the fact there is going to be some upgrading and referred to the amount of money to be paid. The Senator used the term "the full cost of the ratepayers." Is it not a fact that that the ratepayers will put up the entire cost and that it will all be done without cost to the Federal Government?

Mr. CRANSTON. Yes; the Federal Government puts up not 1 penney.

Inherent, let me say, in the approach of the Senator from Ohio is the concept of going to market rates for power. If the market value concept for Federal power rates was applied across the board nationwide, it would increase customer charges by at least $4.5 billion over a 3-year period, according to an analysis that has been quite carefully made. In the earlier debate, the Senator from Washington, [Mr. EVANS], made, I think, a very telling point when he stated that the infrastructure that we develop in our country should not be used to make a profit.

It should be used to meet the needs of our economy and our people. If we are going to depart from that concept, we basically change what our democracy and our society has done in providing an infrastructure—to enable our economy and our society to grow and flourish.

Let me finally say the bill is supported in its present form without the Metzenbaum amendment by, among others, the American Public Power Association, the National Rural Electric Co-ops Association, and the Consumer Federation of America.

Unless someone else has a question—I gather no one has—I move to table the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Te PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from California to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Ohio. On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ARMSTRONG] is necessarily absent.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. CHILES], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIXON], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HART], the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. TSONGAS] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mrs. KASSEBAUM]. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 56, nays 38, as follows:

NOT VOTING—6

So the motion to lay on the table amendment No. 3418 was agreed to.

Mr. CRANSTON. Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion to table was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

● Mr. LAXALT. Mr. President, I feel it imperative that I contribute a few thoughts to the debate developing on S. 268. This bill has been passed by both the Senate and the House of Representatives and we are dealing with the House version today. S. 268, as passed in both Chambers is consistent with historical practice for the marketing of hydroelectric power and is in conformity with public policy created by the Congress on numerous occasions in the past. The Senate has spoken four times in recent years to strongly support cost-based power marketing of hydropower. Those statements prohibit the expenditure of appropriated funds to study a market rate system. The acts include:

First. Section 166 of the First Continuing Appropriations for Fiscal Year 1983, Public Law 97-276;

Second. Section 114 of the Second Continuing Appropriations for Fiscal Year 1983, Public Law 97-377;

Third. Section 506 of the Energy and Water Development Appropriations, 1984, Public Law 98-50; and Fourth. Section 506 of the Energy and Water Development Appropriations, Act, 1985, Public Law 98-360.

Mr. President, the Senate has consistently maintained that system because electrical energy has been deemed a resource of the Nation, a part of the commonweal and to prevent gouging by natural monopolies.

Mr. President, there have been statements made about Hoover power being a subsidy to certain ratepayers. Subsidy is a nasty word, one which will be used if it can in order to make an argument. I hope we can lay that spurious argument to rest. There is no subsidy involved in this question, none whatever. Hoover Dam is being repaid with interest. The power users are making those payments in the rate they pay.

The uprating provided by S. 268 will be paid for up front. The funds will be appropriated but they will be repaid from the existing replacement funds also created by the Hoover power customers.

The argument seems to be that a subsidy is involved simply because hydropower rates will continue under the new contracts and that those rates are lower than market rates for coals or gas fired utility power. Two things must be kept in mind: Hoover Dam was built in the Depression; therefore its cost was low relative to costs today. If Hoover Dam were replaced today it would cost many billions of dollars and repayment rates would be correspondingly high. The second point to keep in mind is that the fuel used to create the power is water, and water is cheaper than oil. There is no subsidy in this. Hoover ratepayers will continue to pay for the cost of generating power, for the cost of increased power capacity, for desalination, for portions of the Central Arizona project, and for the safety and visitor facilities provided by the bill. Any other add-ons simply to bring rates more in line with market rates would constitute something of a subsidy for other regional ratepayers.

I wonder, Mr. President, just what such funds created by additional add-ons to the cost-based power would be used for. Would these profits be used in the highway program? To help retire the national debt? What? It seems to me that is a singular departure from present policy. It involves a public policy question which will, and should, affect the total power marketing system in this country. It is a question that deserves considerable time and attention, not something that we change on the Senate floor. Make no mistake, the objections being raised to the bill suggest a departure from present public policy—not the bill. S. 268 follows time-honored practice.

But not only will a move away from cost based pricing destroy the historic concept of power marketing, it will abolish the concept of public preference in the sale of federally generated electric service, severely inhibit the orderly marketing of such power as required by law, and destabilize power costs to customers.

If a change in such fundamental policy is to occur it must be fully considered. Heaven knows I want to see the national debt retired as much as anyone in the Congress, but I must object if my constituents are to be asked to shoulder a portion of that burden through their power rates that is not asked of similar ratepayers elsewhere. If the Congress is to make such fundamental change, such change must apply, in equity, to Bonneville Power, to the Southeast Power Administration, to the Southwest Power Administration, to the Alaska Power Administration and to TVA.

The only difference, I see, Mr. President, between Hoover and the other power administrations is that Hoover is first in line for renewal. Its contracts expire in 1987. S. 268 provides for the uprating at the powerplant which, in turn, facilitates agreement among the power customers for the next contract period. If we are to move away from cost-based power for Hoover let us consider the matter in the context of the full public policy implications and the impact on all other similar projects in the Nation. And, Mr. President, let us not burden this project with unrealistic contract terms and contingencies which make the project less efficient pending a review of that public policy. That serves no purpose but to thwart the already agreed to uprating and power division provisions of S. 268.●

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT REQUEST—S. 1003

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I am prepared now to present a unanimous-consent request which I believe has been cleared all around and will not be objected to.

I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate proceeds to the consideration of Calendar No. 171, S. 1003, the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act Amendments of 1983, it be considered under the following time agreement:

Thirty minutes on the bill, to be equally divided between the chairman of the Committee on Labor and Human Resources and the ranking minority member or their designees.

That the following three amendments be the only amendments in order; that they be first degree amendments and limited to the following time for debate: Thirty minutes on an amendment to be offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD] and others, dealing with Baby Doe; 30 minutes on an amendment to be offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH], dealing with striking the provisions regarding the role of States for intervention where parents withhold medical treatment from children for their religious reasons; 15 minutes on an amendment to be offered by the Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS] dealing with domestic violence; 5 minutes on any debatable motion, appeal, or point of order to be submitted to the Senate; and that the agreement be in the usual form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Reserving the right to object, I wonder if the majority leader would include an amendment I will offer. I can make it 20 minutes equally divided or 30 minutes equally divided.

Mr. BAKER. What would the amendment deal with?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. It would deal with Social Security.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I cannot do that at this time. I will have to go through the clearance process on that.

I think that the bill as described here can be done in an hour. There will be all sorts of opportunities to offer Social Security amendments, I think. But if the Senator persists in his request, all I can do at this time is to withdraw the request and to proceed otherwise.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I am sorry, but I do not make many such requests.

Mr. BAKER. Does the Senator object to the request?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I ask the majority leader: Will I retain the right to offer an amendment under those circumstances?

Mr. BAKER. Not in the form of this request.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. In that case, I will have to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. LONG. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an objection heard.

The clerk will resume the call of the roll.

The bill clerk resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HATCH. I object.

Mr. McCLURE. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The clerk will resume the call of the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McCLURE. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The clerk will resume the call of the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be resicinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. METZENBAUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio is recognized.

Will the Senator from Ohio suspend just a moment for an appointment?

Mr. METZENBAUM. Provided that the Senator from Ohio does not lose his right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No. The Senator has been recognized.

APPOINTMENTS TO JOINT CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE ON INAUGURAL CEREMONIES

The Chair, on behalf of the Vice President, in accordance with Senate Concurrent Resolution 122, 98th Congress, appoints the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BAKER], The Senator from Maryland [Mr. MATHIAS], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. FORD] to the Joint Congressional Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies.

The Senator from Ohio.

AMENDMENT NO. 3419

Mr. METZENBAUM. Madam President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM] proposes an amendment numbered 3419.

At the end of the House amendment add:

Notwithstanding any other provision, all provisions of this bill shall become effective upon date of enactment; Provided, however, That no section of this bill or the Boulder Canyon Project Act of 1928 regarding the price of power generated at Hoover Dam shall be effective after May 31, 1987.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, if I could have the attention of the Senate, it appears to me that we are not going to be able to get to the Baby Doe bill tonight for a variety of reasons. It also appears that we are not going to finish the Hoover Dam bill tonight. Cloture has been filed on the bill, and a vote will occur on Monday, assuming that we are going to be in tomorrow, and we are.

If the minority leader, who is on the floor, has no objection, it would be my purpose at this point to ask for a period for the transaction of routine morning business, and go out until 10 o'clock in the morning.

Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, it does not appear that we can get a time agreement on the child abuse bill. But there seems to be a desire on the part of many Senators to get on it anyway for a while. I am willing to try that.

Let me say in advance, however, that we are not going to spend a lot of time on it. At least the leadership on this side will attempt to get at it in a timely way tonight so that we will be on it tonight. If we can finish the Baby Doe bill, that is fine, but if we are going to stay past 7:30, I do not think it will be useful time. Without a time agreement, I am willing to give it a try.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate temporarily lay aside the pending business, the Hoover Dam bill, and turn to the consideration of S. 1003.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRD. Reserving the right to object, Madam President, I ask if the majority leader will restate his request.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I put the unanimous-consent request that we temporarily lay aside the Hoover Dam bill and go to the Baby Doe bill. I indicated it would not be my desire to stay on the Baby Doe bill much past 7:30 this evening. It would be the expectation on this side, if we have not finished it shortly after that, that I would ask the Senate to go out until tomorrow and intend to go back to the Hoover Dam bill, which was messaged from the House.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, I remove my reservation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CHILD ABUSE PREVENTION, TREATMENT, AND ADOPTION REFORM AMENDMENTS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1003) to extend and revise the provisions of the Child Abuse and Prevention and Treatment Act and the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act of 1978.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Labor and Human Resources with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act Amendments of 1983".

TITLE I—EXTENSION OF CHILD ABUSE PREVENTION AND TREATMENT AND ADOPTION OPPORTUNITIES PROGRAMS

PART A—CHILD ABUSE PREVENTION AND TREATMENT

THE NATIONAL CENTER OF CHILD ABUSE AND NEGLECT

(1) by striking out "this title the term" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "this title—

"(1) the term";

(2) by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and the word "and"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(2) the term 'sexual abuse' includes the obscene or pornographic photographing, filming, or depiction of children, or the rape, molestation, incest, prostitution, or other such forms of sexual exploitation of children under circumstances which indicate that the child's health or welfare is harmed or threatened thereby, as determined in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary.".

DEMONSTRATION OF SERVICE PROGRAMS AND PROJECTS

SEC. 3. Section 4(b)(2)(E) of the Act is amended by striking out "his" and inserting in lieu thereof "and the child's".

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 4. Section 5 of the Act is amended to read as follows:

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 5. There are authorized to be appropriated $27,500,000 for fiscal year 1984, $34,000,000 for fiscal year 1985, $35,500,000 for fiscal year 1986, $37,080,000 for fiscal year 1987, to carry out the provisions of this Act. Of the sums appropriated for each fiscal year $9,500,000 shall be available in each fiscal year to carry out the provisions of section 4(b)(1) of this Act, relating to State grants, and $4,000,000 shall be available in each such year for the identification, treatment, and prevention of sexual abuse.".

ADVISORY BOARD ON CHILD ABUSE AND NEGLECT AND ADOPTION OPPORTUNITIES

SEC. 105. (a)(1) The first sentence of section 6(a) of the Act is amended by striking out "including" and all that follows thereafter through "Administration,".

(2) Section 6(a) of the Act is amended by inserting at the end thereof: "The Advisory Board shall be available, at the Secretary's request, to assist the Secretary in coordinating adoption related activities of the Federal Government.".

(b)(1) Section 6(b) of the Act is repealed.

(2) Subsection (c) of section 6 of the Act is redesignated as subsection (b).

COORDINATION

SEC. 106. Section 7 of the Act is amended by striking out "between" and inserting in lieu thereof "among".

SAVINGS PROVISION

SEC. 107. The Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SAVINGS PROVISION

"SEC. 8. Nothing in this Act shall be construed to limit the right of a State to determine the health care and treatment a parent may provide his child in the exercise of the parent's freedom of religion.".

PART B—ADOPTION OPPORTUNITIES

FINDINGS AND DECLARATION OF PURPOSE FOR ADOPTION REFORM

SEC. 121. (a)(1) The first sentence of section 201 of the Child Abuse Prevention Treatment and Adoption Reform Act of 1978 (42 U.S.C. 5111; hereafter in this part referred to as "the Act") is amended by inserting after "finds that" the following: "the welfare of thousands of children in institutions or foster homes, infants at risk with life-threatening congenital impairments, and infants born to teenaged unmarried individuals may be in serious jeopardy, and that some such infants and children are in need of placement in permanent, adoptive homes; that".

(2) The first sentence of such section 201 of the Act is further amended by inserting after "should not" the following: "become victims of a denial of medically indicated treatment or nutrition, nor".

(b)(1) The second sentence of section 201 of the Act is amended by inserting after "special needs" a comma and the following: "including infants at risk with life-threatening congenital impairments,".

(2) The second sentence of such section 201 of the Act is further amended by striking out clause (2) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(2) providing a mechanism for the Department of Health and Human Services to—

"(A) promote quality standards for adoption services, including pregnancy counseling which presents adoption as a positive alternative, preplacement, post-placement, and post-legal adoption counseling, and standards to protect the rights of children in need of adoption;

"(B) coordinate with other Federal departments and agencies, including the Bureau of Census, to provide for a national adoption and foster care information data-gathering and analysis system; and

"(C) maintain a national adoption exchange to bring together children who would benefit by adoption and qualified prospective adoptive parents who are seeking such children.".

STATE ADOPTION LEGISLATION

SEC. 122. Section 202 of the Act is amended to read as follows:

"STATE LEGISLATION FOR ADOPTION OPPORTUNITIES

"SEC. 202. (a) The Secretary shall take such steps as the Secretary deems necessary to encourage and facilitate the enactment in each State of comprehensive legislation for the adoption of infants and children in need of adoption.

"(b) The Secretary shall—

"(1) review all model adoption legislation and procedures for the purpose of proposing such changes as are considered appropriate to facilitate adoption opportunities for infants at risk with life-threatening congenital impairments; and

"(2) coordinate efforts to improve State legislation with national, State, and local child and family services organizations, including organizations representative of minorities and adoptive families.".

INFORMATION AND SERVICES

SEC. 123. (a)(1) The first sentence of section 203(a) of the Act is amended by striking out "Health, Education, and Welfare" and inserting in lieu thereof "Health and Human Services".

(2) Section 203(a) of the Act is further amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: "including services to facilitate the adoption of children with special needs and particularly of children with life-threatening congenital impairments; services to couples considering adoption of children with special needs, couples with infertility problems and other prospective adoptive parents; and services to individuals, including pregnant teenaged children, who are considering adoption as a plan for their infants, and pregnancy counseling, particularly of unmarried minors, which presents adoption as a positive alternative".

(b)(1) Section 203(b) of the Act is amended by striking out in the matter preceding clause (1) "subsection (a) of this section" and inserting in lieu thereof "this title".

(2) Section 203(b)(1) of the Act is amended to read as follows:

"(1) provide (after consultation with other appropriate Federal departments and agencies, including the Bureau of the Census) for the establishment and operation of a Federal adoption and foster care data-gathering and analysis system;".

(3) Section 203(b) of the Act is further amended—

(A) by striking out "parent groups" in clause (4) and inserting in lieu thereof "adoptive family groups and minority groups";

(B) by striking out "and" at the end of clause (4);

(C) by redesignating clause (5) as clause (7) and by inserting immediately after clause (4) the following new clauses:

"(5) encourage involvement of corporations and small businesses in supporting adoption as a positive family-strengthening option, including the establishment of adoption benefit programs for employees who adopt children;

"(6) continue to study the nature, scope, and effects of the placement of children in adoptive homes (not including the homes of stepparents or relatives of the child in question) by persons or agencies which are not licensed by or subject to regulation by any governmental entity, including the legal status of surrogate parenting; and"; and

(D) by striking out "Health, Education and Welfare" and inserting in lieu thereof "Health and Human Services" in clause (7) as redesignated by clause (C) of this paragraph.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 124. Section 205 of the Act is amended by striking out "and" after "1978," and inserting after "fiscal years" the following: ", and $5,000,000 for fiscal year 1984, and for each succeeding fiscal year ending prior to October 1, 1987,".

TITLE II—PROTECTION OF SERIOUSLY ILL NEWBORNS

ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON SERIOUSLY ILL NEWBORNS

SEC. 201. (a) There is established within the Department of Health and Human Services an advisory committee on seriously ill newborns which shall conduct a comprehensive study of decisionmaking procedures in health care facilities involving the medical management of seriously ill newborns, and make certain recommendations, as required under section 2.

(b) The advisory committee shall be comprised of fifteen members appointed by the Secretary of Health and Human Services (hereafter in this title referred to as the "Secretary") as follows:

(1) Two employees of the Department of Health and Human Services.

(2) Five members of the general public who are distinguished in the fields of law, medicine or ethics, as such disciplines apply to decisionmaking procedures involving seriously ill newborns.

(3) Three individuals selected on the basis of written nominations submitted by national organizations, which persons are broadly representative of the hospital industry, medical and nursing professions, one of whom shall be a medical doctor.

(4) Five individuals selected on the basis of written nominations submitted by national organizations, which individuals are broadly representative of handicapped, parents of handicapped, and other individuals concerned with the care and treatment of seriously ill newborns.

(c) Members of the committee who are not officers or employees of the United States shall receive for each day they are engaged in the performance of the functions of the committee compensation at rates not to exceed the daily equivalent of the annual rate in effect for grade GS-18 of the General Schedule under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code, including traveltime; and all members, while so serving away from their homes or regular places of business, may be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, in the same manner as such expenses are authorized by section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, for persons in the Government service employed intermittently.

REGULATIONS

SEC. 202. (a) No later than six months after enactment of this title, the committee shall—

(1) conduct a comprehensive study of local decisionmaking procedures involving the medical management of seriously ill newborns within health care facilities including childrens' hospitals and tertiary care centers;

(2) based on such study, make recommendations concerning appropriate procedural mechanisms to be utilized by health care facilities which treat seriously ill newborns; and

(3) issue a report on its recommendations which shall be submitted to the Secretary.

Within sixty days after receiving the report the Secretary shall transmit such report to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources of the Senate and the Committee on Education and Labor of the House of Representatives together with such comments as the Secretary may deem appropriate, including whether the Secretary accepts the recommendations of the committee.

(b)(1) Not later than one hundred and twenty days following receipt of the committee's report, the Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register proposed regulations, if deemed necessary by the Secretary, for the establishment of local decisionmaking procedures within each health care facility as to medically indicated treatment of a seriously ill newborn, which shall at a minimum require that all seriously ill newborns be provided relief from suffering including feeding, and medication for pain and sedation as appropriate.

(2) The Secretary shall conduct a rulemaking proceeding on such proposed regulations in accordance with section 553 (b) and (c) of title 5, United States Code.

(c) Regulations prescribed under subsection (b) shall provide that failure by a hospital to comply with such regulations shall result in the loss of Federal financial assistance, including payments made under titles XVIII and XIX of the Social Security Act, to the hospital until it complies with such regulations.

(d) Nothing in this title shall be construed to authorize the prescription of standards of medical care by the Secretary, or other governmental entity, except to the extent such standards implement or interpret other laws or regulations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the following Senators be added as cosponsors to the amendment in the nature of a substitute: Senators GRASSLEY, RANDOLPH, JEPSEN, HUMPHREY, CHAFEE, KASTEN, and GOLDWATER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, distinguished colleagues, I have requested these next few minutes in order to commend to your attention an urgent matter directly affecting the welfare of many Americans. These Americans are the children of our country—infants, toddlers, youngsters, and teens. Today we will consider and, I hope, pass S. 1003, the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act which reaffirms our national commitment to prevent and treat the insidious threat of child abuse. This legislation further reaffirms our support for children, precious children whose needs for loving families will be met through the adoption provisions of this important legislation.

Last year, Senator DENTON and I, along with several other Senators, introduced S. 1003, the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act. Our purpose in doing so was to insure the continuation and improvement of many already established and successful Federal programs which fund child abuse prevention and treatment and adoption.

This bill was important then. It is critical today. I recently learned from the National Child Abuse Coalition that statistical reports of abused and neglected children continue to climb each year, with over 1 million reported cases of children abused annually. Between 1967 and 1982, the number of reported cases rose by 120 percent.

We now know about the reality of child abuse—that the victims of abuse at home turn into the children who run away from home, who are often pulled into prostitution and pornography, and who suffer from drug and alcohol abuse. I am talking about the 80 to 90 percent of our Nation's male prison population who were abused as children, the children of parents who were themselves abused as children. Given what we now know, we cannot afford to ignore the importance of prevention. Not when we have within our grasp legislation which can stem the suffering and turn the tide once again in favor of all that is good, true, and enduring about family life in our country.

We as Senators have an obligation to serve the needs of all Americans, and those needs must include the children pleading for a permanent home and family. The Census Bureau reports that as many as 100,000 children are legally free for adoption. These are children who are adoptable, but who remain in foster care and institutions due to various public and private barriers coupled with a lack of awareness of the part of potential parents. The majority of these children have special needs. These are children with physical, emotional, and mental handicaps; they are children who have already reached school age. They are children of varied races; children with brothers and sisters who want to retain their identity. And as children, they have a basic right as well as a fundamental need for a permenent, secure, and loving home.

In my own home State of Utah, I have become aware of many couples who have included in their families children with special needs. I would like to share with my colleagues one story from United Press International. It concerns a couple in Pleasant Grove, UT, Aaron and Bonnie Card, who have adopted 12 children. The are the natural parents of 10 children and have been foster parents, of 12. In every day of their lives, this family is a living expression of perfect love and charity, and without even trying, they serve as our national community's beacon for the homeless and downtrodden who wander in search of that which is best about the human spirit.

The Cards were named "Utah Family of the Year," and the justification for their selection as recipients of this commendation is obvious. The UPI article describes the Card family, saying:

When the Cards, who were named "The Utah Family of the Year" last year, go out in their 15-seat van, people ask them what club or troop they are, said Mrs. Card, 65.

"When we had our third homemade child, as we call them, we had a very strong feeling that we should reach out and gather an orphaned child," Mrs. Card said.

All of the adopted children are special-needs children—children who are difficult to place because they are minorities, are over 6 years old, are handicapped or have been adopted and then rejected by other foster parents.

The family includes youngsters from India, Samoa, Mexico, and Guatemala, two brothers from Texas and a Navajo girl.

Several of the children have "had experiences that are very sad, very traumatic, and yet you've got to bring them in and make a family unit," said Mrs. Card.

Their daughter from India, Rina, adopted last summer, was living as a beggar in Calcutta.

Their Korean daughter, Trin La Chere, now 16, remembers her father taking her to another man's house. That man took her on a bus ride and lost her in Seoul. She ate out of garbage cans until she was taken to an orphanage.

Mrs. Card contended that "nobody has to work very hard in a big family."

She has organized the children to help with the housework. "People have the idea that when you have a big family, you have to have a messy house," she said. "You can have it as clean and pretty and nice as you want it."

Mr. Card was a public school teacher for 24 years and is now an administrator with the Mormon Church Educational System. The family income is modest, and the children know "they're limited to certain activities because of the financial situation."

"There are a lot of people out there trying to figure out why we're doing it," said Mrs. Card. "Some say it's to bring glory and honor. It sure is a hard way to get glory and honor."

Not everybody accepts racially mixed families, she added. Once a man approached her at church and accused her of "polluting the blood around here."

Some people who want to adopt are even jealous of the Cards. But Mrs. Card said, "there are still plenty of children out there. If you want them, you've just got to pay the sacrifice. There are 150,000 special-needs children in America alone."

Let us hope that S. 1003, with the increased authorization level, will raise the awareness of all Americans about our need to place adoptable children into permanent homes.

Our discussions today will have an immediate bearing on the dramatic and difficult decisions regarding the treatment of disabled infants born with life-threatening conditions. On June 26, I, along with Senators DENTON, DODD, NICKLES, CRANSTON, and KASSEBAUM, presented an alternative in the form of an amendment that, I believe, is a reasonable solution to the"Baby Doe" portion of our bill. I am pleased to offer this amendment which is intended to provide protection for newborn handicapped infants. I am pleased to offer this amendment which is intended to provide protection for newborn handicapped infants.

At this time, I would like to extend my sincere appreciation to Senator DENTON for his leadership on this issue. He brings to the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee an incomparable commitment to achieving better ways to assure that these children have an opportunity for life, liberty, and happiness. I would also like to thank Senators DODD, CRANSTON, NICKLES, and KASSEBAUM, for their continued commitment to children in assisting in the development of this entire legislative package, and especially the "Baby Doe" portion. Further, I want to thank many organizations who have been willing to develop what I regard as landmark legislation protecting the rights of handicapped children.

At this time, in addition to expressing my deep and heartfelt gratitude to the Senators who worked closely with me on the "Baby Doe" compromise; Senators DENTON, DODD, CRANSTON, NICKLES, and KASSEBAUM, I would like to express a similar gratitude to the staff and organizations who worked so hard to make this compromise possible. I would like to thank: David Yensen of Senator DENTON's staff; Marsha Renwanz of Senator DODD's staff; Susanne Martinez and Jon Steinberg of Senator CRANSTON's staff; Laura Clay of Senator NICKLE's staff; Susan Hattan of Senator KASSEBAUM's staff; Susan Arnold of Senator STEVENS' staff; Wes Clark, Debbie Curtis, and Andrea Young of Senator KENNEDY's staff; Rick Valentine of Senator EAST's staff; and Debbie Turner, Nancy Taylor, and Steven Grossman of my own staff.

Among the many individuals and organizations, I would like to particularly thank: Jan Carroll and Doug Johnson of the National Right to Life Committee; Jack Bresch of the Catholic Hospital Association; Paul Marchand of the Association of Retarded Citizens; Alex Calcagno, Ann Weisman, and Stephan Lawton of the American Academy of Pediatrics; Doug Badger of the Christian Action Council; Patti Goldman of the American Hospital Association; Tom Birch of the National Child Abuse Coalition; and Martin Gerry.

As I earlier stated, we as Americans recognize the inherent responsibility of adults to ensure the physical, mental and emotional well-being of children and young adults. We would never abandon a child injured in an accident. We aggressively protect children from adults who would abuse them. Why is it then that any of us would turn our backs to those children born seriously ill, but for whom medical care today offers the gift of life? Our legislation reassures this commitment. I urge immediate adoption of this amendment, numbered 3385.

Now I turn to my second amendment which strikes section 107 from S. 1003. All States receiving funds under the Child Abuse and Neglect Prevention and Treatment Act must have in place systems for the reporting of abuse and the provision of proper medical care.

There are families in the United States who, as a matter of religious belief, rely on spiritual means for healing. Most of these people are responsible citizens who love their children and respect public authority. They are not members of what is popularly called "cults," and they have exemplary records as citizens and as parents.

Should such families, when their children are sick, be automatically reported to the authorities? Should such parents be totally exempt from public scrutiny and governmental regulation of their health needs because of their religious convictions? Most Americans would say "no" to both these questions. Somewhere in between lies the balancing point between the inherent rights of family and religion on the one hand, and the protection of health standards for childen on the other.

In drafting S. 1003, efforts were made to include a section addressing these sensitive issues, but the various interested parties have not reached an accord. In the interest of not impeding progress on this legislation, I am withdrawing the so-called "savings provision." I do not wish it to be assumed, however, that the problems dealt with in section 107 have been solved or will be forgotten.

More study needs to be directed on the matter of children whose parents, in the exercise of religious freedom, choose for then a responsible method of spiritual treatment. I urge the groups who have expressed interest in section 107 to continue refining the ideas that have been put forward. The National Center for Child Abuse and Neglect should review the regulations under the child abuse and neglect programs to assure that they are giving due consideration to parents, children and State law dealing with this aspect of religious freedom. I urge adoption of this amendment.

Finally, I would like to commend Senators STEVENS for his valuable and appreciated work to develop a consensus on programs addressing the issue of family violence. Each of us is deeply committed to taking whatever action is proper and effective to end this social aggression against those who should be most loved and cherished. Family violence is for the most part a disease, as well as a crime. In the past, it was often endured but kept secret. Today, through more extensive education, family violence is no longer a secret. And now, having been brought to the public's attention, it has become a matter of social concern; and society has demanded a response.

President Reagan agrees. On September 19, 1983, he directed the Attorney General of the United States to develop a task force on family violence. Chaired by Lois Harrington, the task force has traveled our Nation in search of the root causes of family violence and to encourage local efforts to prevent and treat the abusers as well as the victims. Some of what they learned in conjunction with the Department of Justice can be summarized as follows:

Battery is the single major cause of injury to women in America, according to a National Institute on Mental Health study.

Seventeen percent of all murders involve family relationships and 8.2 percent involve husband/wife [FBI].

Reluctance of victims to report incidents is a major difficulty in assessing extent of family crime.

Family violence victims generally are more hurt and humiliated than outraged.

Victims often do not want their attacker punished; they simply want the violence to stop.

Inadequate methods of recording these crimes at local, State and national levels also contribute to difficulty in measuring extent of family crime.

Definitions of abuse, measures of severity and enforcement policies vary widely among local law enforcement and protective services agencies.

Murder is the only crime for which the relationship between the offender and victim is recorded.

Arrest data is the only indication of family-related offenses, nonsupport, neglect, desertion, and abuse. Unreported incidents cannot be measured, and reported incidents that do not result in arrest are not recorded.

Basic assumptions about family violence may no longer be valid. For example, a recent study by National Institute of Justice indicates that the most effective intervention in domestic violence cases may be arrest and overnight incarceration.

This contradicts the popular belief and law enforcement practice of mediation and referral to counseling.

Arrest for family-related offenses are down 24 percent between 1973 and 1982.

The amendment Senator STEVENS is offering is in the spirit of compromise. The amendment varies in several significant ways from a domestic violence bill of 1980. Basically, it establishes a demonstration authority to provide funds for immediate shelter and other related programs in accordance with existing State laws. Significant money is earmarked for research as well as training for law enforcement officers. It also includes a requirement for a Federal/State match. As I have said, I endorse its passage as an essential part of the critically important legislation to which it is attached.

At this time, I would like to draw special attention to two leaders in Utah who provide valuable services to prevent abuse and treat victims of family violence. Mrs. Betty Tatum is director of the Utah YWCA program providing shelter and other services to victims of family violence. She continues to generate both financial and community support for her nationally recognized program. Also, I would like to commend the fine work of Ann Curran, director of the Spouse Abuser Treatment Program. The mission of this program is to develop and expand an effective service model for the purpose of intervening with spouse abusers and violent couples to achieve the long-term cessation of violence. Both these programs have been very successful. I salute both of these individuals for raising the public awareness of the various methods of obtaining local support.

At this time, I ask unanimous consent that a letter of support from the Secretary of Health and Human Services, Mrs. Margaret Heckler, for S. 1003 and Senate amendment 3385 be included in the RECORD. Secretary Heckler should be commended for her leadership on behalf of the Reagan administration in supporting the compromise legislation addressing the needs of handicapped newborn infants. I also ask unanimous consent that a letter from the National Right to Life Organization be included in the RECORD as well as letters from the National Child Abuse Coalition and the Christian Action Council which urge prompt enactment of S. 1003.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES,
Washington, DC, July 26, 1984.

Hon. ORRIN G. HATCH,
Chairman, Committee on Labor and Human Resources, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: In response to your letter of July 18 requesting the Department's views on amendment No. 3385 to S. 1003, I wish to assure you that the Administration continues to support statutory language to create a focus on the needs of disabled infants with life-threatening conditions. I always have been, and continue to be, a committed advocate of protecting the rights of handicapped infants.

With regard to amendment No. 3385, I commend you and your colleagues for your leadership in developing compromise langauge which will help parents, with the advice of their doctors, to ensure that proper decisions are made about the treatment of seriously ill newborns. We support amendment No. 3385 and urge you to bring S. 1003, the "Child Abuse Prevention, Treatment and Adoption Reform Act amendments of 1984", to the floor promptly so that this important legislation can be signed into law.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised that there is no objection to the transmission of this report from the standpoint of the Administration's program.

Sincerely,

MARGARET M. HECKLER,
Secretary.

NATIONAL RIGHT TO LIFE COMMITTEE, INC.,
Washington, DC, July 24, 1984.

Senator ORRIN HATCH,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR HATCH: Earlier this month, The Washington Times publishing an illuminating five-part series on infanticide by Pulitzer-winning journalist Carlton Sherwood. Sherwood quoted Dr. Gunter Dybwad, an internationally respected authority on handicapped issues, as saying: "In a city the size of metropolitan Washington, you could reasonably expect at least one 'Baby Doe' case a week. There have been some published reports which put the yearly figure in the U.S. at about 5,000—but that, in my view, would be conservative."

Dr. Dybwad's statement underscores the urgency of immediate decisive action by Congress to protect handicapped newborns.

The National Right to Life Committee participated in the lengthy and difficult negotiations which last month produced the "Baby Doe" amendment which you have now sponsored as Printed Amendment No. 3385. Janet Carroll of our Legislative Office staff tells me that your representatives, Nancy Taylor and Debbie Turner, played very positive roles during those arduous negotiating sessions.

We believe that the agreed-on amendment will go far towards curbing the practice of denying ordinary medical treatment, and even food and water, to handicapped infants on the basis of subjective, non-medical, "quality-of-life" judgments. The amendment explicitly states that physicians are not required to provide treatment which would "merely prolong dying" or "otherwise be futile in terms of the survival of the infant," provisions which are fully consistent with NRLC's position on this issue.

Some senators have expressed concerns regarding extensive federal involvement in the "Baby Doe" area. Your amendment places the primary responsibility for investigating these cases in the hands of state authorities. If the provisions of the amendment are properly applied, federal intervention would be a last report and unnecessary in most cases.

We believe that Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act, properly construed, provides substantial protection for the civil rights of handicapped newborns. However, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit recently ruled that Congress "never contemplated" that Section 504 would apply "to treatment decisions involving defective newborn infants."

It is our hope that this judgment will be reversed by the Supreme Court. If not, it may be necessary to amend Section 504 at some future date. While Amendment 3385 does not attempt to address the Section 504 issue directly, enactment of the amendment would send a message to the courts that Congress intends that handicapped infants receive medically indicated treatment, and that such treatment should not be denied on the basis of non-medical factors.

As you know, the Baby Doe amendment has been endorsed by most of the major pro-life, disability-rights, and medical organizations—although not, unfortunately, by the American Medical Association. Agreement between these diverse groups was achieved with great difficulty, and the coalition is somewhat fragile. If action on the Child Abuse Act is further postponed, the chances for enactment of satisfactory Baby Doe language may be sharply diminished.

NRLC regards immediate enactment of the Baby Doe amendment as an urgent necessity. We understand that there are other amendments to the Child Abuse Act which are controversial, and that there is therefore some resistance to bringing the bill to the floor. We hope that in weighing these considerations, you will recognize the paramount importance of immediate Senate approval of the Baby Doe language—preferably this week.

In closing, may I express my deep appreciation for the leadership role which you have played, and continue to play, on the right-to-life issues. The unborn and newborn children of America are fortunate to have an advocate of your stature, skill, and dedication.

Respectfully submitted,

DAVID N. O'STEEN,
Executive Director.

NATIONAL CHILD ABUSE COALITION,
Washington, DC, July 24, 1984.

Hon. ORRIN G. HATCH,
Chairman, Committee on Labor and Human Resources, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: On behalf of the National Child Abuse Coalition let me express our appreciation for your efforts in reaching an agreement on the Baby Doe provisions in S. 1003.

The future of the federal child abuse program has been mired too long in the controversy over Baby Doe. With the compromise settled it is time now to move ahead with passage of the authorizing legislation for the National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect. Your concern and leadership and the hard work of your staff have freed the legislation for the vote of support it deserves on the Senate floor. We encourage your efforts now to achieve the prompt passage of S. 1003.

Thank you for your attention and keen interest in the welfare of children. We look forward to working with you toward enactment of S. 1003.

Sincerely,

THOMAS L. BIRCH,
Legislative Counsel.

Sen. ORRIN G. HATCH,
Chairman, Committee on Labor and Human Resources, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: We are most appreciative of the work that you, Senators Cranston, Dodd, Denton, Kassebaum and Nickles have done to achieve an historic agreement on the Baby Doe amendment to S. 1003, the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act.

This extraordinary compromise has won the support of an array of divergent groups representing the medical community, as well as advocates of the rights of the disabled and pro-life organizations.

Senator Hatch, you and the other sponsors of this provision are to be applauded for taking this significant step in assuring that disabled newborns are not denied medically necessary treatment. Every American who is involved in working to secure basic rights for the unborn and for disabled citizens owes you a profound debt of gratitude.

Sincerely,

W. DOUGLAS BADGER,
Legislative Director,
Christian Action Council.

Mr. HATCH. I urge my colleague to support S. 1003 and the attached amendments and ask for its immediate consideration.

Madam President, I am happy to yield to the distinguished Senator from Alabama.

Mr. DENTON. Madam President, I thank my distinguished chairman of the Labor and Human Resources Committee.

Madam President, as the prime sponsor of S. 1003 I am pleased that at last this important bill is before the Senate.

Madam President, along with Senators HATCH and GRASSLEY, I introduced S. 1003 on April 6, 1983. You can imagine how pleased I am that the legislation has finally come before the Senate for consideration. S. 1003 would reauthorize the Federal Child Abuse Prevention Program and the Federal Adoption Opportunities Program through fiscal year 1987.

Child abuse is a national tragedy, and there is no doubt that its traumatic effects linger long after the bruises heal. The Subcommittee on Family and Human Services, which I chair, has heard sobering testimony about the prevalence of child abuse and about the mental and physical scars it leaves.

I do not believe for a minute that merely reauthorizing funding for the Federal Child Abuse Prevention Program will solve the tragic problem in this country. Indeed, after serving as chairman of the Subcommittee on Family and Human Services for 3 years and addressing a myriad of problems involving family and human services, I find that many of our programs are addressing symptoms rather than causes. Simply put, we are facing a fundamental crisis: the values of love and respect for the dignity of other human beings and for the institution of marriage are declining. Tragically, the brunt of the crisis is being borne disproportionately by the most innocent and vulnerable members of our society, our children.

Developing realistic policies to reverse the trend toward familial dissolution will take both time and renewed commitment to traditional values. In the interim, child abuse will continue, and more and more children will suffer from it. The programs authorized to be funded under the bill seek to help both the children and the parents who abuse them. Some organizations funded under the program, like Parents Anonymous, have impressive records in treating abuse while keeping the family unit intact. I sincerely hope that extending the authorization of the Federal Child Abuse Program will enable effective programs to continue, spur new prevention initiatives, and spare many children the misery of child abuse.

The bill also would increase the authorization for the Federal Adoption Opportunities Program. That program seeks to facilitate the adoption of so-called hard to place children, those who, because of age, race, or handicap, are more difficult to place than healthy infants and who often languish in the foster care system for years without knowing the joy of a permanent home and parents. There are loving couples who are waiting to adopt them; the problem has been one of matching those couples with adoptable children. Through its operation of the Adoption Exchange Network, the program seeks to expedite the matching process. Hundreds of children have been successfully placed since 1981, and I hope that the increased authorization will enable the placement of many more.

In addition, Madam President, Senator HATCH will offer an amendment to prevent the withholding of medically indicated treatment from infants born with mental or physical impairments. Hearings I chaired in April 1983 revealed that there are numerous cases where handicapped infants have been denied treatment for correctable impairments, and there have been widely publicized instances where handicapped infants did not receive medically indicated treatment, were denied food and water, and died.

Those events aroused justifiable concern across this country. Disability rights groups, prolife groups, and national medical organizations have all engaged in the debate about how best to deal with the complex and emotional issue. I believe that the amendment to be offered today, which Senators DODD, NICKLES, KASSEBAUM, CRANSTON, and I have joined as cosponsors, offers a sensible approach to the issue. It is the result of months of negotiation among Senate staff and with representatives of medical, disability, and prolife organizations. It is supported by 21 organizations.

The amendment encourages the establishment, within health care facilities, of committees to educate hospital personnel and the families of disabled infants, to recommend institutional policies and guidelines about the withholding of medically indicated treatment from disabled infants, and to offer counsel and review in cases involving those infants.

The amendment also would require each State to have in place, within its State child protective services system, procedures or programs to respond to reporting of instances of withholding medically indicated treatment. The procedures must include authority, under State law, for the State child protective services system to pursue legal remedies to prevent the withholding of medically indicated treatment from disabled infants with life-threatening conditions.

Additional funds would be authorized to train child protective services personnel to respond effectively to reports of medical neglect, and the Secretary of Health and Human Services would be authorized to make grants to develop and implement information and education programs to improve the provision of services to disabled infants and their families.

The amendment seeks to ensure that all available information about the disabling condition and about services available to the child and the parents is made available to the physician and the family. I am confident that the approach embodied in the amendment does not intrude unduly in the practice of medicine, yet provides protection to handicapped infants.

I want sincerely to thank the original cosponsors of the amendment—Senators HATCH, CRANSTON, NICKLES, DODD, and KASSEBAUM—and the representatives of the organizations that participated in the negotiations leading to the agreement. The negotiations were long and often frustrating. Compromises were offered and accepted by all parties, and the negotiations were carried out in good faith. I believe that the final compromise is a very good one, and that it will go far in preventing the withholding of medically indicated treatment from handicapped newborn infants.

Finally, Madam President, there will be an amendment offered by Senator STEVENS to authorize funding for demonstration programs to prevent family violence and to conduct research into its causes. I know that the issue caused controversy in this body in 1980. I was not a Senator in 1980 and therefore did not participate in that debate, but I do know that the amendment to be offered by my distinguished colleague from Alaska is substantially different from the measure proposed in 1980. I must confess, however, that I still have serious reservations about authorizing additional Federal funding for domestic violence programs at this time.

Additional information about the causes and solutions of the problem of family violence has emerged recently. As Senators know, the President's task force on domestic violence is scheduled to release its report in September. The task force spent many months holding hearings on the problem at various locations across the country. I believe that it would be prudent to review the recommendations of the task force before authorizing new Federal funds.

In addition, there are numerous Federal programs currently in operation that address the problem of domestic violence, as well as State and local programs. It makes sense to me that we should attempt better to coordinate the ongoing efforts before we authorize new expenditures.

Madam President, bringing the bill to the floor required a delicate compromise. The domestic violence amendment still troubles me, but a majority of my colleagues believe that it is proper to consider it at this time. Although I do not favor the amendment, I will not attempt to prevent the Senate from considering it. I believe that it is more important for us to act on S. 1003.

In sum, I hope that the Senate will act promptly on this important bill so that it can be signed into law.

Briefly, bringing this legislation before the Senate required delicate compromise. The negotiations leading to this agreement were long and often frustrating but were carried off in good faith. I would like to thank my chairman, Senator HATCH, and the ranking member, Senator KENNEDY, Senator DODD, and the other Senators who have actively participated in these negotiations on S. 1003.

I congratulate the staffs of all involved and hope that S. 1003 will be passed and enacted promptly into law.

Mr. DODD. Madam President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I am happy to yield.

Mr. DODD. Madam President, we now address one of the most pressing problems facing this country today; namely, the abuse and neglect of our Nation's children.

Madam President, I commend my colleague from Utah, Senator HATCH, my colleague from California, Senator CRANSTON, my colleague from Alabama, Senator DENTON, my colleague from Oklahoma, Senator NICKLES, my distinguished colleague from Kansas, Senator KASSEBAUM, and all others for joining me in the hard-fought efforts to bring this child-abuse reauthorization to the floor before the August recess.

Working closely with a wide range of organizations we have been able to resolve the controversies which had previously impeded Senate consideration of this child-abuse legislation for so very long.

We have put together what we think is an effective package in this regard.

Given the virtual epidemic of child abuse now confronting this Nation, I urge my colleagues to join us in passing S. 1003 without delay and accompanying compromise amendments related to first, family violence, and second, the care of disabled infants with life-threatening conditions.

CHILD-ABUSE REAUTHORIZATION

First and foremost, the bill before us restores essential funding for child-abuse prevention and treatment programs. The authorization levels had been cut virtually in half during action on the Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1981. I am particularly indebted to Senator HATCH, the distinguished chairman of the Labor and Human Resources Committee, for accepting my provision to restore this critical funding. Given skyrocketing abuse rates, such restoration is needed now more than ever before.

At a recent forum of the Senate Children's Caucus, I cochair, witnesses verified that childhood sexual victimization is dramatically on the rise. By even the most conservative estimates, a child is sexually abused someplace within this country every 2 minutes. Since 1980, the number of suspected child-sexual-abuse victims in my State of Connecticut has increased by over one-fifth. And, between 1982 and 1983, reported cases in the State of Maine increased by 126 percent.

The budget actions of 1981 abolished any separate funding for sexual-abuse prevention, identification, and treatment programs. This reauthorization restores that funding. Given that childhood sexual abuse can cause victims to run away and fall prey to prostitution, or alcohol and drug abuse, the funding is returned none too soon.

Social service agencies from my State of Connecticut across to California have also reported an alarming upsurge in cases of physical abuse and neglect. Yet more disturbing is the news that in the last year alone, the death rate from such acts of violence in many States has soared by more than 40 percent. In Connecticut, the number of children dying as a result of abuse tripled between 1930 and 1982. In Utah, the number quadrupled.

Likewise, nonfatal instances of abuse and neglect have skyrocketed. A 2-year study conducted in Wisconsin showed that in counties with the highest unemployment rate, cases of child abuse jumped by more than 70 percent. Other studies have demonstrated that children whose parents are unemployed are now three times more likely to suffer physical abuse than those whose parents have jobs.

At the same time that the rate of child abuse is soaring, budget cuts have forced States to restrict services. Some local agencies say they are unable to investigate abuse cases involving children over age 12, due to lack of staff and funds. Restoring Federal funding for service improvement grants will help sorely overtaxed agencies cope more effectively with ever-increasing caseloads.

In short, Madam President, this reauthorization is an important step toward ensuring that abused younger Americans or those in danger of abuse will not be ignored or forgotten. To do any less for the one out of every three Americans who are children not only seriously jeopardizes their future, but that of the Nation as well.

I am pleased to cosponsor the compromise amendments accompanying this reauthorization of the Federal Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act. Both were arrived at after exhaustive discussions and negotiations with organizations representing a broad spectrum of concerns. I applaud these organizations and the Senate staff who worked with them for their diligent efforts to reach responsible and workable compromises.

FAMILY VIOLENCE AMENDMENT

Like child abuse, family violence is a problem which is reaching crisis proportions in this country. Between 1980 and 1982, shelters offering emergency refuge to battered spouses reported a 50-percent increase in the incidence of such assaults. Organizations such as the Junior Leagues and the YWCA who sponsor shelters tell us they cannot accommodate an astounding 80 percent of all those who need immediate refuge. And the FBI reports that 4 out of every 10 women in this country who are murdered are victims of domestic violence.

Shelters represent an essential means of preventing spouse abuse. Law enforcement officials from across the country agree that the incidents of family violence diminish after a victim has visited a shelter. A top priority must be given to assisting shelters to operate if we are to have any serious effect in preventing and coping with emergencies posed by domestic violence.

The compromise amendment offered by Senator STEVENS today moves in the right direction by establishing family violence as a problem which we can no longer wait to address. I commend Senators CRANSTON, KENNEDY, and STEVENS for their leadership and long-term commitment to addressing the problem of family violence. I would have favored stronger provisions to cope with the pressing issue of domestic violence, in line with my previous cosponsorships of bills introduced by Senator KENNEDY and Senator STEVENS. However, I am pleased we have worked out a compromise measure with Senators HATCH and DENTON and thank them for their cooperation.

CASE OF DISABLED INFANTS WITH LIFE-THREATENING CONDITIONS

Last but not least, I must emphasize again my appreciation for the hard work of everyone involved in reaching the compromise on the provision of care to disabled infants with life-threatening conditions. I am deeply grateful to the Rossow family in Connecticut for their heartfelt efforts to see that the very best information and assistance is provided to the parents of such infants. I look forward to working with my colleagues and interested groups in strengthening such assistance in the future.

This compromise makes $5 million available for training and technical assistance to States over the next 4 fiscal years with respect to establishing procedures to investigate cases of medical neglect involving such infants. Such assistance will come none too soon for solely understaffed, overtaxed child protective service systems.

In summary, Madam President, the compromise amendments have made it possible for the underlying child-abuse legislation to be brought to the floor. This package restores critical funding for the prevention and treatment of child abuse. I urge my colleagues to support it as a means of helping us meet the national crisis posed by the physical and sexual victimization of our Nation's young people.

Madam President, in closing I want to express my sincere appreciation for the tremendously fine efforts of all Senate staff involved in deliberations on the child abuse legislation. Their work exemplifies the very best spirit of bipartisanship.

The staff worked incredibly long hours over many months and never gave up hope of reaching a compromise. The persistence of staff in refusing to let the child abuse bill die is a lesson for us all. The staffs' dedication, along with that of the representatives of the many outside organizations involved, serves the one-third of the American public who are children, well indeed.

Having previously commended the organizations for their contribution, I would like to take this opportunity to single out the Senate staff. I would like to thank Susanne Martinez and Jon Steinberg of Senator CRANSTON's staff; Debbie Turner, Nancy Taylor, and Steven Grossman of Senator HATCH's staff; David Yensen of Senator DENTON's staff; Laura Clay of Senator NICKLE's staff; Susan Hattan of Senator KASSEBAUM's staff; Wes Clark, Andrea Young, and Debbie Curtis of Senator KENNEDY's staff; Susan Arnold of Senator STEVEN's staff; and Marsha Renwanz of my own staff.

Madam President, by acting to reauthorize this child abuse legislation, the Senate takes an important step toward breaking the tragic cycle of abuse in this country. I call for immediate enactment of this legislative package.

AMENDMENT NO. 3420

(Purpose: To provide for the coordination of Federal programs involving incidents of family violence, to provide demonstration grants for the prevention of incidents of family violence, and for other purposes)

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. GARN]. The clerk will report. The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH], for Mr. STEVENS, Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. DODD, Mrs. HAWKINS, Mr. BOSCHWITZ, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. COHEN, Mr. RANDOLPH, Mr. MATSUNAGA, and Mr. COCHRAN, proposes an amendment numbered 3420.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The amendment is as follows:

On page 22, after line 20, add the following new title:

TITLE III—FAMILY VIOLENCE PREVENTION PROGRAM

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 301. This title may be cited as the "Family Violence Prevention Act."

COORDINATION OF PROGRAMS

SEC. 302. The Secretary shall coordinate all programs within the Department of Health and Human Services, and seek to coordinate all other Federal programs, which involve the prevention of incidents of family violence and the provision of assistance for victims and potential victims of family violence and their dependents.

DEMONSTRATION GRANTS AUTHORIZED

SEC. 303. (a) The Secretary is authorized to make demonstration grants to public agencies and private nonprofit organizations (including religious and charitable organizations and voluntary associations) in any State that have the capacity to administer, or are administering, family violence prevention programs. Such grants shall be made on the basis of applications submitted under subsection (b) and approved by the Secretary for the cost of programs designed to carry out one or more of the following purposes:

(1) To prevent incidents of family violence, including the provision of immediate shelter and related assistance to victims of family violence and their dependents.

(2) To conduct research into the causes of family violence, and into prevention, identification, and treatment thereof, including research into the effectiveness of (A) involving law enforcement personel in responding to incidents of family violence, (B) State procedures for the removal from the household of the abusing spouse, (C) arrest of the abusing spouse, and (D) referral to drug and alcohol treatment programs or other therapy programs for the abusing spouse.

(3) To train personnel in the conduct of programs for the prevention and treatment of family violence.

(4) To prepare local and State law enforcement personnel for the handling of incidents of family violence.

(b) No demonstration grant may be made under this section unless the public agency or private nonprofit organization submits an application to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing or accompanied by such matter as the Secretary determines reasonably necessary.

(c) In approving applications submitted under subsection (b) of this section, the Secretary shall—

(1) assure that there is an equitable distribution or assistance both with respect to States and between rural and urban areas;

(2) give priority to applications from applicants in communities currently without family violence prevention programs or which can demonstrate that current services or programs are inadequate to meet the needs of the community;

(3) assure the confidentiality of records pertaining to any individual provided family violence prevention or treatment services by any program assisted under this title, and assure that the address or location of any shelter-facility assisted under this title is not made public except by written authorization of the person or persons responsible for the operation of such shelter; and

(4) not make a grant under this section in any fiscal year to any single entity for an amount in excess of $50,000 unless the Secretary, in exceptional circumstances, determines that a grant in a greater amount is necessary.

(d) Nothing in this title shall be construed to supersede the application of State or local requirements for the reporting of incidents of suspected child abuse to the appropriate State authorities.

NATIONAL CLEARINGHOUSE ON FAMILY VIOLENCE PREVENTION

SEC. 304. (a) The Secretary shall operate a national information and research clearinghouse on the prevention of family violence (including the abuse of elderly persons) in order to—

(1) collect, prepare, analyze, and disseminate information and statistics and analyses thereof relating to the incidence and prevention of family violence (particularly the prevention of repeated incidents of violence) and the provision of immediate shelter and related assistance to victims of family violence and their dependents; and

(2) provide information about alternative sources of assistance available with respect to the prevention of incidents of family violence and the provision of immediate shelter and related assistance to victims of family violence and their dependents.

(b) The Secretary shall assure that the activities of the national information and research clearinghouse operated under subsection (a) are coordinated with the information clearinghouse maintained by the National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect under section 2 of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act.

PAYMENTS

SEC. 325. (a)(1) From the amounts appropriated and available for demonstration grants under section 308, the Secretary shall pay, in accordance with the provisions of this title, the Federal share of the costs of programs described in the applications approved under section 303.

(2) The Federal share shall be—

(A) 65 percent in fiscal year 1985,

(B) 45 percent in fiscal year 1986, and

(C) 35 percent in fiscal year 1987.

(3) the non-Federal share of demonstration grants under this title may be in cash or in kind, fairly evaluated, including but not limited to planning expenses, plant, equipment, and services.

(b) Demonstration grants made under section 303 may be paid in installments, and in advance or by way of reimbursement, with necessary adjustments on account of overpayments or underpayments, as the Secretary may determine.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

SEC. 306. (a) The Secretary shall appoint an employee of the Department of Health and Human Services to carry out the provisions of this act. The individual appointed under this subsection shall, prior to such appointment, have had expertise in the field of family violence prevention and services.

(b) In order to carry out the provisions of this title, the Secretary is authorized to—

(1) appoint and fix the compensation of such personnel as are necessary;

(2) procure, to the extent authorized by section 3109 of title 5, United States Code, such temporary and intermittent services of experts and consultants as are necessary;

(3) prescribe such regulations as are necessary; and

(4) enter into contracts, grants, or other arrangements, or modifications thereof that are necessary to carry out the provisions of this title.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 307. As used in this title—

(1) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Health and Human Services;

(2) the term "State" means each of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Northern Mariana Islands;

(3) the term "related assistance"—

(A) includes counseling and self-help services to abusers, victims, and dependents in family violence situations (which shall include counseling of all family members to the extent feasible) and referrals for appropriate health-care services (including alcohol and drug abuse treatment), and

(B) may include food, clothing, child care, transportation, and emergency services (but not reimbursement for any health-care services) for victims of family violence and their dependents; and

(4) the term "shelter" means the provision of temporary refuge and related assistance in compliance with applicable State law and regulation governing the provision, on a regular basis, of shelter, safe homes, meals, and related assistance to victims of family violence and their dependents.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 308. There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this title $5,000,000 for fiscal year 1985, $15,000,000 for fiscal year 1986, and $15,000,000 for fiscal year 1987. Of the amounts appropriated pursuant to this section for each such year, not less than 50 percent shall be available for demonstration grants made under section 303(a)(1) in such year.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, this amendment is offered on behalf of Senator STEVENS and others.

Basically, Mr. President, it involves a family violence amendment that I think everybody on the floor is aware of.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, today I propose an amendment supported by my colleagues on both sides of the aisle which addresses a situation that touches more individuals than we have cared, in the past, to think about: the problem of violence between Family members. I am pleased that the Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH] has accommodated our interest in including these provisions in the child abuse bill, as statistics show that child abuse, and the manifestation of violent and abusive behavior in adulthood, are intimately linked. Research has identified a vicious cycle of the abused becoming the abuser, and so on, and I believe the family violence prevention and services program authorized by our amendment will contribute to the breaking down of this cycle of abuse. For too many years, because of ignorance, shame, or simply indifference, we have neglected to address the variety of difficulties and tensions posed by acts of violence such as wife battering and abuse of the elderly. Now, in communities across the country, programs and projects have sprung up to assist victims of family violence and to try to prevent future violence. Private, nonprofit organizations and voluntary associations such as the Junior Leagues, Family Service America, Catholic Charities, the YMCA, and local networks of emergency shelters and safe homes, have taken on the task of providing emergency assistance and developing prevention services for those plagued by the problem of violence within the family. These community-based efforts have succeeded in elevating this issue in our collective national conscience: The Attorney General's Task Force on Family Violence, the Bureau of Justice Statistics, and national magazines such as Time have all focused special attention in the past year on the problem of family violence and the fact that it appears to be on the rise in this country. The program proposed in the amendment before us today, while not as comprehensive a program as proposed in my original family violence prevention and services bill, S. 2430, will offer a helping hand to organizations and projects already involved in the effort of family violence prevention and services or seeking to expand into it. I believe this is a timely proposal; the need for increased attention to the problem in order to understand and prevent it is highlighted as follows in the Bureau of Justice Statistics Special Report on Family Violence:

We hope this report will encourage an open discussion of a problem that has been handled with secrecy in the past. Only when more victims are willing to talk about their experiences will we be able to develop accurate measures of this problem and begin as a society to develop effective solutions.

The recognition and support implied by increased Federal attention to the phenomenon of family violence is an essential step in the process outlined by the BJS report, and the proposal before us today is an important first step in this direction. I'd like to share with my colleagues a sample of the kind of testimony received by the Attorney General's Task Force on Family Violence which further emphasizes the point made in the BJS special report. What follows was submitted to the task force by a victim of spouse abuse in Homer, AK:

"Here is how things were.

I was always afraid. Even when things were going well I had an inner terror, knowing things could snap at any time.

What is it like to be under someone's control?

It's being afraid to stay too long in the outhouse; I know he would be angry, ask me what took so long. It's being afraid to glance at someone on the street. I knew he would accuse me of wanting to go to bed with them.

And friends? Forget them too. He didn't like them.

I tried so hard to be perfect. Funny thing though. The requirements of perfection were constantly changing. People told me I was a wonderful mother, a great cook and did more hard work than anyone they knew. Somehow, though, to him I was a lazy bitch. I gradually started to believe what he told me, that I was a stupid, lazy, worthless woman just like all other women. Deep down I knew this wasn't true, but I was too tired to argue. I knew he would always win. So I did what I was told. I became a nonperson, a robot, desperately trying to keep one step ahead of the program. But it didn't matter, the black eyes, the broken teeth, bruises, scratches, and sexual abuse kept coming.

Do you really want to know what it was like? The hot white flash that comes with the first blow? The feeling of being trapped. The desperate hope held out against all hope. 'Maybe things will be different, maybe he will change, maybe I'll finally do enough to please him so he won't get so angry.'

The look of horror in your children's eyes when they see you covered with blood? The look of horror in your eyes when you see the blood from your torn vagina pouring down your legs? When I found courage to leave it's amazing I could still think at all. I had been brainwashed for so long. Finding women's service was like finding a match in the dark. I was amazed to find, through counseling and literature, that I was not alone in my experience. I had never talked about it to anyone.

Making the smallest decision seemed impossible. But I received support and gained confidence to come to my own decisions about my life.

Seven months later I feel like a real person again. I know that I have special qualities and strengths, and that I can contribute something to others. I am a better person. Maybe I could have done it on my own, but it's a lot easier to find your way with a light."

It was this victim's contact with the South Peninsula Women's Services in Homer that proved the turning point in her life, and I would like to know that all victims of abuse have such an opportunity. That is why I have proposed to add to the child abuse bill a title that would direct funds to programs and projects similar to those provided by the South Peninsula Women's Services.

Not only did South Peninsula Women's Services provide a refuge and shelter from life-threatening attacks of abuse, but they provided an environment of support, offered counseling and legal assistance, and enabled this victim to become a functioning individual making informed choices and decisions, rather than an isolated and incapacitated recipient of violence and abuse. The State of Alaska makes grants which help support a network of emergency shelters such as South Peninsula Women's Services all around the State, from downtown Anchorage to Bethel, Nome, Barrow, and Dillingham. The services offered clients, in addition to emergency shelter, include alcohol and drug information and counseling, employment assistance, education and health information, and legal assistance. Several programs of therapy and counseling for batterers are also underway in my State and have some record of success, although this is an area in which techniques for the prevention of future incidents are still emerging. Clearly, these shelters are providing essential services to Alaskan communities; services that not only play a role in crisis intervention, but assist in preventing future crises, and incidents of violence and abuse. As a resource in the community, the services they provide are an integral aspect of an ongoing effort in my State to address this problem, an effort which also includes modifications and additions to the State civil and criminal codes to enhance the rights of victims in cases of family violence and the training of law enforcement officials who are called on to handle incidents of violence within families. It is this kind of comprehensive approach to the problem of family violence that I am hopeful the amendment we are offering today will help to move along in communities across the country.

I would like to thank my colleagues who have joined me in developing this proposal—Senators CRANSTON, KENNEDY, and DODD, each of whom has a history of commitment and involvement in promoting activity on this area. The support of the other cosponsors of this amendment—Senators HAWKINS, BOSCHWITZ, ANDREWS, MURKOWSKI, DURENBERGER, LAUTENBERG, MOYNIHAN, RIEGLE, HART, COHEN, RANDOLPH, MATSUNAGA—is also appreciated. I commend Senator HATCH's efforts which have succeeded in bringing this bill to the floor; his willingness to take on the issue of family violence prevention and services is much appreciated. Senator DENTON's consideration and effort was also instrumental, and I would like to thank him for his interest and concern. Violence between family members affects all of us in the damage it inflicts on this fundamental unit of our society. I believe it is incumbent upon us to speak out, and to act, in order to understand, prevent, and control this terrible problem.

Mr. MATSUNAGA Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Alaska, Senator TED STEVENS, to S. 1003, the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act Amendments of 1983.

As an original cosponsor of Senator STEVENS' bill (S. 2430) which authorizes a 3-year $65 million block grant to enable States to support community-based projects which serve family violence victims and their dependents, I fully recognize the need for such prevention and services programs.

When H.R. 1904, the companion bill of S. 1003, was considered by the House of Representatives on February 2, 1984, it was amended by a vote of 367 ayes to 31 noes to include the $65 million State domestic violence funding as similarly provided by S. 2430. It is my hope that the Senate, by passing this family violence prevention and services amendment, will recognize and address one of the most serious problems facing our Nation today.

Senator STEVENS' amendment provides modest funding, $35 million over 3 years, for demonstration grants awarded by the Secretary of Health and Human Services to local service and research projects. At least 50 percent of these funds must be used to assist programs which provide immediate shelter and related services to victims of family violence. The remainder of funds would support personnel training, research into prevention and treatment of domestic violence, and improvements in law enforcement efforts in this area.

The family violence amendment is a consistent extension of the child abuse program to assist other family members who suffer from similar acts of violence. In recent years, abuse at home has escalated. Battery is currently the prime cause of injury to women, more significant than auto accidents, rapes, or muggings. Approximately 40 percent of all women killed are beaten to death annually, and about 10 percent of all men killed are murdered by their mates. Furthermore, shelter programs for abused wives report that an increasing number of residents are children in need of services. Children exposed to violence of parent against parent frequently exhibit a wide range of behavioral and emotional problems and often grow up to inflict violence on their own children and spouses—or become victims themselves. Many dependent elderly individuals live in fear of abuse at the hand of their adult children.

While the Federal Government has been slow to respond to this tragic social problem, State and local communities have taken action—There are over 500 community shelters across the country. In my State of Hawaii there is a shelter on each of the major islands—Oahu, Maui, Kaui, and Hawaii. In addition, a minister shelters victims in her home on Molokoi. The shelter on Oahu was established nearly 10 years ago in 1975. Together with a network of other nonprofit and public agencies, they have formed coalitions to assist family violence victims. Many States have also strengthened their laws to ensure better protection of domestic violence victims. Community and public education programs have been created, crisis hotlines established, and training implemented to improve intervention within criminal justice, medical, and social service agencies. Importantly, counseling and education programs for abusers, as well as family counseling, have been developed with the aim, where appropriate, to unify and rehabilitate a family torn by violence.

We must provide these community initiatives the necessary resources and encouragement on the Federal level. It is imperative that we combine our efforts to break the cycle of violence that is passed on from generation to generation within much too many families.

Mr. President, to preserve the all-important family unit of our great society, I urge my colleagues to join in support of this most essential family violence prevention and services amendment.

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I rise today to express my strong support for family violence legislation.

The American family is one of this Nation's greatest assets. Yet, it is under attack, buffeted by domestic pressures and internal violence. The force and power of this assault is little known; the magnitude of family violence is poorly perceived by the general public and even by those in positions of responsibility.

Statistics highlight the scope of the problem. Each year, between 2 an 5 million women are battered in family disputes; 40 percent of these incidents remain unreported to the police. And those that are reported are often dealt with poorly, leading to an escalation of violence that sometimes spills over into dangerous rampages. In this vein, it becomes clear why 40 percent of all murdered women die at the hands of family members or boyfriends and why 40 percent of all police injuries occur during investigations of domestic disputes. Family violence is not limited to a few slaps or bruises; it is a dangerous malignancy that strikes at the root of societal stability.

This is true because, tragically, family violence only breeds more violence. A victim of abuse often becomes an abuser later in life. Unfortunately, incompetent and brutal parents still serve as role models for impressionable children. The victim becomes the abuser and the cycle of pain rolls on through the successive generations. And tragically again, there are now millions of children who are being transformed into the abusers of the future. Authoritative sources suggest that 6.5 million children are abused each year and 1.7 million are severely battered. While these figures are probably underestimated, they indicate that there are millions of children being battered today who are the heir to the legacy of abuse tomorrow. It is our duty to do all we can to break this tragic cycle of pain.

However, there are many obstacles to solving the problems of family violence. The clanish nature of the family, the difficulties of prevention and counseling programs, and the reluctance to report these familial assaults are all barriers to erecting an effective violence prevention system. Indeed, there is another problem that excacerbates violence and stymies community help. Alcohol is this new element; it is the grease that helps spin this cycle of pain. It is the omnipresent variable that turns a minor incident into murderous intent. Alcohol is often the solace victims turn to after an attack, but it is not a solution to the problem. Indeed, it is a root cause. Any program that attempts to minimize family violence must also strike at this national problem of alcohol addiction.

Mr. President, we have reached a point where family violence is no longer a thinly spread social phenomena; it is a disease that afflicts millions of homes and all generations. I believe that this legislation is an important first step in the fight to end this national nightmare. Another key element in this battle will be the report of the Attorney General's Task Force on Family Violence. I eagerly await the report as another part of our efforts to break this cycle of violence. I urge all my colleagues to join me in this important and vital task.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I strongly urge my colleagues to support the Stevens-Kennedy domestic violence amendment. This amendment is a bipartisan effort to respond to the need in our society for services to prevent domestic violence and provide assistance for the victims of domestic violence.

While a compromise from my original bill, this bill will provide badly needed funds for the grassroots movement to assist the victims of spousal abuse. Support for shelters, which provide emergency services to victims of domestic violence, counseling and community education, remains a priority.

This legislation is a modest response to a tremendous need. When I introduced my domestic violence bill well over 1 year ago women's groups had been lobbying for such legislation for many years. Under Senator CRANSTON'S leadership the Labor and Human Resources Committee reported a domestic violence bill in the last Congress.

For over a decade, women and men in the shelter movement have provided emergency relief for victims of spousal abuse, conducted community education campaigns to increase our awareness of this problem and provided counseling for all the victims of family violence. Through their persistence, dedication and commitment of the persons in the shelter movement we can no longer ignore the painful reality of family violence. Recognition is the first step to stopping the cycle of family violence.

All across the country, State and local governments, community organizations and women's groups have recognized the need for assisting the battered spouse; 700 shelters and safe homes exist today as a result of these efforts; 44 States have enacted new legislation to provide some kind of help to the battered spouse through direct grants or technical assistance. Although thousands of families are served each year by these programs, shelters are forced to turn away three times the number of people they serve. In my own State of Massachusetts 26 shelters receive State assistance in combination with local and private contributions. Last year 15 of these shelters were forced to deny services to over 2,500 family units due to lack of space.

Access to domestic violence shelters is often the only resource for these families. It is imperative that we provide the necessary resources and encouragement on the Federal level to existing shelters and incentive for new shelters to be established so that families will no longer find these doors closed to them. This is even more urgent now, as States find themselves forced to cut back on funds for social services due to decreasing Federal grants and the rising costs of the recession. The stress on families due to the disastrous rise in unemployment has dramatically increased the incidence of wife and child abuse.

The House of Representatives passed domestic violence legislation at the beginning of the session. Volunteers, privately supported organizations, local governments, and victims of domestic violence across this country are awaiting action by this body. The American family is our greatest resource. We must be willing to make them our highest priority.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3420) was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3421

(Purpose: To provide for the inclusion in State child protective services system of provision for responding to reports of the withholding of medically indicated treatment from disabled infants with life-threatening conditions)

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and Senators DENTON, DODD, CRANSTON, NICKLES, and KASSEBAUM, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH], for himself, Mr. DODD, Mr. DENTON, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. NICKLES, and Mrs. KASSEBAUM proposes an amendment numbered 3421.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, will the Senator please explain what the amendment is?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, this amendment involves a very extensive compromise worked out over an extensive period of time with the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, the distinguished Senator from Alabama, the distinguished Senator from California, and others, all of whom deserve a great deal of credit for working together and trying to resolve this very difficult issue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to dispensing with the reading?

Mr. LONG. I object until I have heard an explanation of it, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 11, beginning with line 11, strike out all through line 2 on page 12. On page 12, line 3, strike out——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 11, beginning with line 11, strike out all through line 2 on page 12.

On page 12, line 3, strike out "(c)" the first time it appears and insert in lieu thereof "(b)".

On page 12, line 8, strike out "SEXUAL ABUSE".

On page 12, lines 10 and 11, strike out "title" and insert in lieu thereof "Act" in both places.

On page 12, lines 14 and 15, strike out "comma and the word 'and' " and insert in lieu thereof "semicolon".

On page 12, line 24, strike out the end quotation marks and the period the second time it appears and insert in lieu thereof a semicolon and "and".

On page 12, after line 24, insert the following:

"(3) the term 'withholding of medically indicated treatment' means the failure to respond to the infant's life-threatening conditions by providing treatment (including appropriate nutrition, hydration, and medication) which, in the treating physician's or physicians' reasonable medical judgment, will be most likely to be effective in ameliorating or correcting all such conditions, except that the term does not include the failure to provide treatment (other than appropriate nutrition, hydration, or medication) to an infant when, in the treating physician's or physicians' reasonable medical judgment, (A) the infant is chronically and irreversibly comatose; (B) the provision of such treatment would (i) merely prolong dying, (ii) not be effective in ameliorating or correcting all of the infant's life-threatening conditions, or (iii) otherwise be futile in terms of the survival of the infant; or (C) the provision of such treatment would be virtually futile in terms of the survival of the infant and the treatment itself under such circumstances would be inhumane.".

On page 13, strike out line 10 through line 17 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"$32,500,000 for fiscal year 1984, $39,000,000 for fiscal year 1985, $40,500,000 for fiscal year 1986, and $42,000,000 for fiscal year 1987 to carry out the provisions of this Act. Of the sums appropriated for each fiscal year, $9,500,000 shall be available in each fiscal year to carry out the provisions of section 4(b)(1) of this Act, relating to State grants, $4,000,000 shall be available in each such year for identification, treatment, and prevention of sexual abuse, and $5,000,000 shall be available in each such year for the purpose of making additional grants to the States to carry out the provisions of section 4(c) of this Act (as amended by section 201 (c)(2) of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act).".

On page 15, lines 11 and 12, strike out "infants at risk with life-threatening congenital impairments" and insert in lieu thereof "disabled infants with life-threatening conditions".

On page 16, lines 20 and 21, strike out "infants at risk with life-threatening congenital impairments" and insert in lieu thereof "disabled infants with life-threatening conditions".

On page 17, lines 9 and 10, strike out "children with life-threatening congenital impairments" and insert in lieu thereof "disabled infants with life-threatening conditions".

On page 19, beginning with line 9, strike out all through line 20 on page 22 and insert in lieu thereof the following new title:

TITLE II—SERVICES AND TREATMENT FOR DISABLED INFANTS

SEC. 201. (a) Section 4(b)(2) of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (42 U.S.C. 5103(b)(2), hereinafter in this title referred to as "the Act") is amended by—

(1) striking out "and" at the end of clause (I);

(2) striking out the period at the end of clause (J) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and the word "and"; and

(3) inserting after clause (J) the following new clause:

"(K) have in place for the purpose of responding to the reporting of medical neglect (including instances of withholding of medically indicated treatment from disabled infants with life-threatening conditions), procedures or programs, or both (within the state child protective services system), to provide for (i) coordination and consultation with individuals designated by and within appropriate health-care facilities, (ii) prompt notification by individuals designated by and within appropriate health-care facilities of cases of suspected medical neglect (including instances of withholding of medically indicated treatment from disabled infants with life-threatening conditions), and (iii) authority, under State law, for the State child protective service system to pursue any legal remedies, including the authority to initiate legal proceedings in a court of competent jurisdiction, as may be necessary to prevent the withholding of medically indicated treatment from disabled infants with life-threatening conditions.".

(b) Section 4(b)(3) of the Act is amended by striking out "and (F)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(F), and (K)".

(c) Section 4 of the Act is further amended by—

(1) redesignating subsection (c) as subsection (d), subsection (d) as subsection (e), and subsection (e) as subsection (f); and

(2) inserting after subsection (b) the following new subsection (c):

"(c) The Secretary is authorized to make additional grants to the States for the purpose of developing, establishing, and operating or implementing—

"(1) the procedures or programs required under clause (K) of subsection (b)(2);

"(2) information and education programs or training programs for the purpose of improving the provision of services to disabled infants with life-threatening conditions for (i) professional and paraprofessional personnel concerned with the welfare of disabled infants with life-threatening conditions, including personnel employed in child protective services programs and health-care facilities, and (ii) the parents of such infants; and

"(3) programs to help in obtaining or coordinating necessary services, including existing social and health services and financial assistance for families with disabled infants with life-threatening conditions, and those services necessary to facilitate adoptive placement of such infants who have been relinquished for adoption.".

REGULATIONS AND GUIDELINES

SEC. 202. (a)(1) Not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services (hereinafter in this title referred to as the "Secretary") shall publish proposed regulations to implement the requirements of section 4(b)(2)(K) of the Act (as amended by section 201(a)(3) of this Act).

(2) Not later than 100 days after the date of the enactment of this Act and after notice and opportunity for public comment, the Secretary shall publish final regulations under this subsection.

(b)(1) Not later than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall publish interim model guidelines to encourage the establishment within health-care facilities of committees which would serve the purposes of educating hospital personnel and families of disabled infants with life-threatening conditions, recommending institutional policies and guidelines concerning the withholding of medically indicated treatment from such infants, and offering counsel and review in cases involving disabled infants with life-threatening conditions.

(2) Not later than 150 days after the date of the enactment of this Act and after notice and opportunity for public comment, the Secretary shall publish the model guidelines.

REPORT ON FINANCIAL RESOURCES

SEC. 203. The Secretary shall conduct a study to determine the most effective means of providing Federal financial support, other than the use of funds provided through the Social Security Act, for the provision of medical treatment, general care, and appropriate social services for disabled infants with life-threatening conditions. The Secretary shall report the results of the study to the appropriate Committees of the Congress not later than 270 days after the date of the enactment of this Act and shall include in the report such recommendations for legislation to provide such financial support as the Secretary considers appropriate.

TRAINING, TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE, AND CLEARINGHOUSE ACTIVITIES

SEC. 204. The Secretary shall provide, directly or through grants or contracts with public or private nonprofit organizations, for (1) training and technical assistance programs to assist States in developing, establishing, and operating or implementing programs and procedures meeting the requirements of section 4(b)(2)(K) of the Act (as amended by section 201(a)(3) of this Act); and (2) for the establishment and operation of national and regional information and resource clearinghouses for the purpose of providing the most current and complete information regarding medical treatment procedures and resources and community resources for the provision of services and treatment for disabled infants with life-threatening conditions.

STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION

SEC. 205. (a) No provision of this Act or any amendment made by this Act is intended to affect any right or protection under section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973.

(b) No provision of this Act or any amendment made by this Act may be so construed as to authorize the Secretary or any other governmental entity to establish standards prescribing specific medical treatments for specific conditions, except to the extent that such standards are authorized by other law.

(c) If the provisions of any part of this Act or any amendment made by this Act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances be held invalid, the provisions of the other parts and their application to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

EFFECTIVE DATES

SEC. 207. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b), the provisions of this Act or any amendment made by this Act shall be effective on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendment made by section 201(a)(3) of this Act shall become effective one year after the date of such enactment.

(2) In the event that, prior to such effective date, funds have not been appropriated pursuant to section 5 of the Act (as amended by section 104 of this Act) for the purpose of grants under section 4(c) of the Act (as amended by section 201(c) of this Act), the Secretary may grant to any State which has not met the requirements of section 4(b)(2)(K) of the Act (as amended by section 201(a)(3) of this Act) a waiver of such requirements for a period of not more than one year, if the Secretary finds that such State is making a good faith effort to comply with such requirements.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I have agreed to explain this amendment for the benefit of our colleagues on the floor and in particular the distinguished Senator from Louisiana.

The amendment would require States to have procedures to respond to reports of instances of withholding medically indicated treatment from disabled infants.

Such procedures would provide for coordination and consultation with designated individuals and hospitals, notification of such cases, and authority for child protective services to invoke legal proceedings to prevent withholding of treatment to disabled infants.

The questions most often asked are answered best by the joint explanatory statement by the principal sponsors of the compromise amendment. The statement was placed into the RECORD on Friday, June 29, 1984. I ask unanimous consent that that joint explanatory statement be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint explanatory statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT BY PRINCIPAL SPONSORS OF COMPROMISE AMENDMENT REGARDING SERVICES AND TREATMENT FOR DISABLED INFANTS

This explanatory statement is a product of the six principal sponsors of this compromise measure: Senators HATCH, DODD, DENTON, CRANSTON, NICKLES, and KASSEBAUM. It is their intention that this statement serve in lieu of a Committee report on the compromise agreement and thus be the definitive legislative history in the Senate on it. Any remarks of individual Senators, including the principal sponsors, on this legislation express only their personal views and do not, therefore, constitute authoritative interpretation or explanation of the measure.

The provisions of the amendment are discussed below:

AMENDMENTS TO THE CHILD ABUSE PREVENTION AND TREATMENT ACT

The amendment would add a new clause (K) to section 4(b)(2) of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (hereinafter referred to as "the Act"). Section 4(b)(2) authorizes grants to carry out child abuse prevention and treatment programs to be made to States which meet the requirements of the Act.

New clause (K) would require States which participate in the State grant program to have in place procedures and/or programs (within the State child protective service system) for the purpose of responding to the reporting of medical neglect, including instances of withholding of medically indicated treatment from disabled infants with life-threatening conditions. The new clause specifies that these procedures and/or programs will provide for (i) coordination and consultation with individuals within appropriate health care facilities who have been designated by such health-care facilities, (ii) prompt notification by such individuals to the child protective services system of cases of suspected medical neglect, including instances of withholding of medically indicated treatment from disabled infants with life-threatening conditions, and (iii) the authority, under State law, for the State child protective services system to pursue any legal remedies, including the authority to initiate legal proceedings in a court of competent jurisdiction, as may be necessary to prevent the withholding of medically indicated treatment from disabled infants with life-threatening conditions.

The term "withholding of medically-indicated treatment" is defined (in a new definition to be added to section 3 of the Act) as the failure to respond to the infant's life-threatening conditions by providing treatment (including appropriate nutrition, hydration, and medication) which, in the treating physician's or physicians' reasonable medical judgment, will be most likely to be effective in ameliorating or correcting all such conditions except that the term does not include the failure to provide treatment (other than appropriate nutrition, hydration or medication) to an infant when, in the treating physician's or physicians' reasonable medical judgment, (A) the infant is chronically and irreversibly comatose; (B) the provision of such treatment would (i) merely prolong dying, (ii) not be effective in ameliorating or correcting all of the infant's life-threatening conditions, or (iii) otherwise be futile in terms of the survival of the infant; or (C) the provision of such treatment would be virtually futile in terms of the survival of the infant and the treatment itself under such circumstances would be inhumane. The use of the term "inhumane" in exception (C), above, is not intended to suggest that consideration of the humaneness of a particular treatment is not legitimate in any other context; rather, it is recognized that it is appropriate for a physician, in the exercise of reasonable medical judgment, to consider that factor in selecting among effective treatments.

Under the definition, if a disabled infant suffers from more than one life-threatening condition and, in the treating physician's or physicians' reasonable medical judgment, there is no effective treatment for one of those conditions, then that infant is not covered by the terms of the amendment (except with respect to appropriate nutrition, hydration, and medication) concerning the withholding of medically indicated treatment.

The term "infant" as used in this definition is intended to mean infants less than one year of age although it may include older infants who have been continuously hospitalized since birth, who were born extremely prematurely or who have long-term disabilities. The reference to less than one year of age is not intended to imply that treatment should be changed or discontinued when an infant reaches one year of age. Nor is it intended to affect or limit any existing protections available under State laws regarding medical neglect of children over one year of age.

The reference to "reasonable medical judgment" of the treating physician or physicians means a medical judgment that would be made by a reasonably prudent physician, knowledgeable about the case and the treatment possibilities with respect to the medical conditions involved.

With respect to the procedures and/or programs to be utilized to comply with the requirements in new clause (K), the Act now requires States which receive funds under section 4(b)(2) to provide certain mechanisms for the reporting of abuse or neglect cases. The same reporting mechanisms and standards set forth in the Act and existing regulations would be applicable to the reporting of cases of medical neglect covered under new clause (K).

Similarly, the Act now requires the appointment of a guardian ad litem for children involved in judicial proceedings relating to abuse or neglect. This provision would be applicable in judicial proceedings with respect to cases under new clause (K).

The Act and regulations also now already require States receiving funds under section 4(b)(1) to take appropriate steps to protect the health and welfare of abused or neglected children, including instituting legal proceedings. The new clause (K) includes specific statutory reference to the authority to institute legal proceedings only because questions have occasionally been raised about the authority of particular child protective services agencies to take such actions in cases involving withholding of medically-indicated treatment from disabled infants with life-threatening conditions. Under new clause (K), States have the flexibility to determine the specific agency or agencies within their child protective services systems, to exercise that authority. State authority to utilize other agencies, in addition to the child protective services system, for these purposes would be unaffected by the legislation.

ADDITIONAL GRANTS TO STATES

The amendment (in section 201(c)(2)) would add a new subsection 4(c) to the Act to authorize the Secretary to make additional grants to the States for the purposes of developing, establishing, and operating or implementing (1) the procedures or programs required under the new clause (K), (2) information and education programs or training programs (for the purposes of improving the provision of services to disabled infants with life-threatening conditions) for professional and paraprofessional personnel concerned with the welfare of such infants, including personnel employed in child protective services programs and health-care facilities, and for parents of such infants, and (3) programs to help obtain or coordinate necessary services, including existing social and health services and financial assistance for families with disabled infants with life-threatening conditions as well as those services necessary to facilitate adoptive placement of such infants who have been relinquished for adoption.

REGULATIONS AND GUIDELINES

The amendment (in section 202) would direct the Secretary, within 90 days of the date of enactment, to publish for public comment proposed regulations to implement the requirements of the new clause (K), and to publish final such regulations within 180 days after enactment.

It also would direct the Secretary to publish, within 60 days after enactment, interim model guidelines to encourage the establishment within health-care facilities of committees which would serve the purposes of educating hospital personnel and families of disabled infants with life-threatening conditions, recommending institutional policies and guidelines concerning the withholding of medically indicated treatment from such infants, and offering counsel and review in cases involving disabled infants with life-threatening conditions. Not later than 150 days after the date of enactment and after notice and opportunity for public comment, the Secretary would be required to publish the model guidelines.

REPORT ON FINANCIAL RESOURCES

The amendment (in section 203) would require the Secretary to conduct a study to determine the most effective means of providing Federal financial support other than the use of funds provided through the Social Security Act, for the provision of medical treatment, general care, and appropriate social services for disabled infants with life-threatening conditions and report the results of such study to the appropriate committees of the Congress not later than 270 days after the date of enactment. The report to the appropriate Committees would also be required to contain such recommendations for legislation to provide such financial support as the Secretary considers appropriate.

TRAINING, TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE, AND CLEARINGHOUSE ACTIVITIES

The amendment (in section 204) would direct the Secretary to provide, directly or through grants or contracts with public or private nonprofit organizations, for training and technical assistance programs to assist states in meeting the requirements of new clause (K) and for establishing and operating national and regional information and resource clearinghouses to provide the most current and complete information regarding medical treatment procedures and resources and community resources for services and treatment for disabled infants with life-threatening conditions. The funds to carry out these activities would be provided from the funds, other than those funds made available for basic States grants under section 4(b)(1), otherwise available to the Secretary to carry out activities under the Act (meaning the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act).

STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION

The amendment (in section 205) would provide that no provision of or any amendment made by the Act is intended to affect any right or protection under section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973.

It would also provide that no provision of or any amendment made by the Act may be construed to authorize the Secretary or any other governmental entity to establish standards prescribing specific medical treatments for specific conditions, except to the extent that such standards are authorized by other laws.

It would also contain a standard severability provision in the event that a particular provision of or any amendment made by the Act is declared unconstitutional by a court.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

The amendment (in section 206) would increase the authorizations of appropriations—from the levels in the bill as reported ($27 million for FY 1984, $34 million for FY 1985, $35.5 million for FY 1986, and $37.08 million for FY 1987)—under the Act by $5,000,000 for each fiscal year for the purpose of making the additional grants to the states to implement the provisions of new clause (K) and to establish the information and education and training programs and the programs to help obtain or coordinate necessary services for disabled infants with life-threatening conditions authorized under the new section 4(c).

The amendment would retain the earmark contained in S. 1003 as reported of $9,500,000 in each fiscal year for the carrying out of the provisions of section 4(b)(1), relating to basic state grants and $4,000,000 in each fiscal year for identification, treatment, and prevention of sexual abuse.

It is the firm intention of the sponsors that appropriations for the new section 4(c) program should be in addition to appropriations at the authorization levels contained in the amendment for the section 4(b)(1) basic state grant program and for the sexual abuse, identification, treatment, and prevention program and that neither of these existing programs should be reduced in funding in order to provide funds for the new section 4(c) program.

EFFECTIVE DATES

The provisions of the Act and amendments made by the Act would be effective upon the date of enactment, except that the amendment establishing new clause (K) as a requirement for participation in the state grant program does not become effective until one year after the date of enactment.

The amendment further provides that in the event that, prior to the clause (K) effective date, funds have not been appropriated pursuant to section 5 of the Act (as amended by section 104 of this Act) for the purpose of grants under new section 4(c), the Secretary may grant to any State which has not met the requirements of new clause (K) a waiver of such requirements for a period of not more than one year, if the Secretary finds that such State is making a good faith effort to comply with such provisions.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am happy to deliver a copy of that statement to the distinguished Senator from Louisiana.

Does the distinguished Senator have any other questions about it? I will be happy to go into detail, but I think that provides him with a basic explanation.

Mr. LONG. Will the Senator give me further explanation?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, let me give the Senator some more detail.

Mr. LONG. I am pretty much in the dark even now.

Mr. HATCH. If I may, I am happy to yield for further explanation to the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, who would like to respond to the distinguished Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. DODD. I thank my colleague for yielding.

I reiterate to my good friend from Louisiana that this has again been a very difficult and delicate process to go through because of the very strong feelings so many people have on the Baby Doe issue.

What the Senator from Utah, myself, and others have done is come up with a compromise that has six major features to it. Very simply, those features try to set up a process that will allow for a good decision. Mr. President, no one can sit back and tell you what that decision ought to be, but we want to make sure that when decisions are made we have gone through a process that will allow for a decision that will make sense.

Maybe those are not the proper words to use, but that is the purpose—so that we do not end up with this becoming a political football, as it has been in so many cases.

The six key elements of the Baby Doe compromise are:

First, it relies on existing State child protective services systems to respond to reports of medical neglect involving disabled infants with life-threatening conditions.

Second, it includes carefully crafted provisions to spell out the areas of concern regarding medical treatment for these infants.

Third, it relies very heavily on reasonable medical judgment as determinative factor in the decisionmaking process.

Fourth, it provides for coordination and consultation with designated individuals within health-care facilities to enhance that decisionmaking process.

Fifth, it authorizes the setting up of training and technical assistance programs to improve the provision of services to these infants—$5 million, which is not much.

Sixth, it authorizes the setting up of programs to assist the families of such infants in finding the necessary support services, including financial assistance. That is significant because caring for such infants can pose a serious financial burden to the parents.

Those are the six major features. It tries to bring together all of these elements in an intelligent way so that good decisions can be made in trying to resolve these problems.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DODD. Again, I commend my colleague from Utah.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator please explain one matter to me? He made the statement that various organized groups concerned favored, I believe, this amendment other than the American Medical Association. Is the American Medical Association opposed to this matter?

Mr. HATCH. Let me mention, first, the groups that do support it. It is a broad group that are directly concerned with the welfare of the child and the family and the hospital and the doctor. These are the groups that support this amendment: American Hospital Association, Catholic Health Association, National Association of Children's Hospitals and Related Institutions, American Academy of Pediatrics, American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, American Nurses Association, American College of Physicians, California Association of Children's Hospitals, Nurse Association of the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, American Association of Mental Deficiency, Association for Retarded Citizens, U.S. Spina-Bifida Association of America, Downs-Syndrome Conference, People First of Nebraska, Association for Persons With Severe Handicaps, Disability Rights Center, Operation Real Rights, Christian Action Council, National Right to Life Committee, and the American Life Lobby.

The American Medical Association has not endorsed it.

Mr. LONG. Does the American Medical Association oppose it or are they just silent? What is their position about the matter?

Mr. HATCH. It is my understanding that they do oppose it, but all of the others support it.

Mr. LONG. Sometimes even one holding out might be right. Will the Senator explain to me, why is the American Medical Association opposed to the matter?

Mr. HATCH. I think the association does not want any type of definitive rules and regulations or definitive statutory language which puts any pressure either way on this particular issue. I cannot speak for them. All I can say is that I think they think they are acting in the interests of their doctors. Yes, I believe most of the doctors who are concerned are totally for this. What I am saying is that they are acting in a very special interest way that they feel necessary but we feel is not proper under the circumstances.

As I understand it, the AMA does not like the definitiveness of this particular bill. They wanted a few words in the bill that at the negotiating table all the other organizations opposed. So it comes down to a classic confrontation by all the other organizations which deal with this problem and by the American Medical Association, which may deal generally but perhaps not as directly as these other organizations.

We feel they are wrong. We feel that this is a classic compromise and that this is the way to resolve it and that it will be resolved across the spectrum in this way. It is a reasonable compromise. We have worked very hard to put it together. It involved Senators and Representatives across the spectrum who have tried to bring this about. We feel that the American Medical Association is being unreasonable under the circumstances.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, in answer to the Senator from Louisiana, the pediatricians and the gynecologists, the physicians most directly involved in this issue, support the compromise. The American Medical Association, as an umbrella organization, has some problems with it, and I suspect it is like any professional organization.

There is probably some resentment because we have talked about other people being involved. The American Medical Association feels that only the doctors and the parents should be involved and everybody else should be excluded. It is part of their argument. I do not say that it is without merit, but to have something that does involve other people is not necessarily bad. The fact that the American Medical Association objects to some of the other people being involved is not enough for me to say that we should not adopt this compromise and get this issue behind us.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, in response to the Senator from Louisiana, I want to say that I share some of the concerns he might have. I have given a great deal of thought and my staff has given a great deal of effort to this compromise. One does worry about excessive governmental intrusion in such a sensitive area. When parents are going through great agony and emotional trauma and medical personnel are doing everything possible to assist their decisions, the injection of another element—such as Government fiat—does become a real concern.

This proposal is the product of an effort to strike a balance and to develop a thoughtful and realistic approach to this difficult issue. The attempt was to meet, on balance, the various and diverse needs of family and doctors, as well as governmental interest in assuring there will be fair and equitable treatment for newborn infants.

Mr. LONG. Does the Senator from Kansas favor the amendment?

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Yes. I am a cosponsor.

Mr. President, as I have said, I am a cosponsor of the compromise "Baby Doe" proposal now under consideration as an amendment to S. 1003, the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act Amendments of 1983. I join Senators HATCH, DODD, DENTON, CRANSTON, and NICKLES in offering what I believe to be a well-balanced approach for dealing with the treatment decisions involving disabled infants with life-threatening conditions.

This proposal has the support of a broad coalition of medical, disability, and right-to-life groups. It is the product of months of discussion among representatives of these groups, Senate staff, and the cosponsors of the amendment. Arriving at this point has not been an easy undertaking. The issues involved are troubling and complex, and it is a tribute to the good faith and dedication of all involved that we are able to bring this proposal to the Senate floor.

My interest and involvement in this issue stem in large part from my heartfelt concern for the parents who find themselves in these unfortunate situations. I have been deeply troubled by news accounts of the way these situations have been handled, particularly during the period in which the intial HHS regulations in this area were in effect. Prominent signs posted in maternity wards advertising hot lines and the deployment of "Baby Doe squads" to local hospitals created an atmosphere which was inherently disruptive and confrontational. I was appalled at the concept of bringing the full force of State power to point an accusatory finger at parents who were attempting to do what they believed to be best under extremely trying and uncertain circumstances.

Experiencing the emotional shock of not having the healthy baby they expected, these parents are struggling to balance a faith in medical technology against the realities of painful and often uncertain prognoses. It is a disservice to these parents and the hospital personnel who attempt to assist their decisionmaking to imply that their love and concern for the child is in any way lessened by its disabling conditions. I was greatly relieved when the original regulations were discarded and replaced with a more reasonable approach placing greater emphasis on internal hospital review mechanisms. These regulations have since been struck down in court.

Reviewing the legislation approved by the House in this area, I became concerned that its ambiguity would open the door to a repetition of our experience with the original Federal regulations in 50 different State settings. In considering the situation, my reaction has been that an area involving so many complex and unique cases is really not amenable to a uniform Federal solution. In my mind, the more individualized responses available through hospital infant care review committees seem a more appropriate and workable solution. At the same time, I recognize that many issues surrounding the operation and function of such committees have yet to be resolved. As we gain more experience with them, I think we will find they are an extremely valuable and helpful mechanism.

Moreover, I found in the course of working with this issue that many were looking toward Government for guidance in the way of some kind of standard for dealing with the relatively new issues posed by technological advances. They expressed deep concern that sufficient information is not always available to guide parental decisionmaking and that mistakes were being made. One capacity of our democratic form of government is that of bringing together diverse viewpoints to mold public policies under which all can live.

Consequently, it seemed worthwhile to explore means by which government could play a role in clarifying and assisting the decisionmaking process. The negotiations associated with this effort offered its diverse participants an even deeper appreciation of the seriousness and complexity of the decisions involved.

The result we achieved is one which works through existing child protective services systems in calling for procedural mechanisms to deal with reported instances involving the withholding of medically indicated treatment from disabled infants with life-threatening conditions. It clarifies those instances which are and are not areas of potential medical neglect in such situations. It relies heavily on the reasonable medical judgment of physicians in determining appropriate treatment.

In addition, it acknowledges that the best possible information and support should be available to all involved through the authorization of training programs and of programs to assist families in obtaining supportive services. It also recognizes the important role which can be played by hospital committees by requiring the Secretary of Health and Human Services to publish model guidelines encouraging their establishment.

On balance, I believe this is a thoughtful, realistic proposal which avoids excessive governmental intervention while assuring that the best interests of disabled infants will be served. It establishes an appropriate balance among all concerns.

I commend the efforts of all who spent countless hours over the past months in bringing us to this point. I urge my colleagues to join in supporting this amendment.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I hope we can clear up a question that has arisen in my review of the proposed amendment relating to the withholding of medically indicated treatment for disable infants. Let me make an inquiry of my friend from Utah [Mr. HATCH], the original sponsor of this amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I would be happy to entertain a question from my friend from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. Am I correct in understanding the words "appropriate nutrition (and) hydration," as used throughout the amendment, are not meant to sanction outright denial of all nutrition and hydration but are intended only to affirmatively require appropriate nutrition and hydration in all cases? In other words, nothing in this amendment allows an infant to be denied nutrition and hydration?

Mr. HATCH. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I thank my able colleague from Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3421) was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DODD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I agree with the intent in the minds of the drafters of this amendment—that is, that handicapped babies should not be put to death by withholding what amounts to ordinary medical care such as food, water, routine surgery, and so forth.

The problem is that this intent is not fully carried out, in my opinion, because of vague and ambiguous language, which may well be misconstrued in application—to the detriment of the very infants we seek to protect.

Therefore, Mr. President, I want the RECORD to show that I voted "nay" on this amendment.

Mr. ZORINSKY. Mr. President, I would like to concur with the views expressed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS], and I would like the RECORD to show that I voted against this amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 3422

(Purpose: To strike the savings provision and add an implementation report)

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH] for himself and Mr. KENNEDY proposes an amendment numbered 3422.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 14, strike out lines 9 through 16.

At the end of the bill add the following new title:

TITLE IV—REPORT

SEC. 401. Not later than October 1, 1987, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall submit to the Congress a detailed report on the implementation and the effects of the provisions of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act Amendments of 1983 and the amendments made by it.

Mr. LONG. Is the Senator going to explain the amendment?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. President, we have language in the bill that provided for a so-called "savings provision" which dealt with the interaction of the bill's provision with religious liberty. I have agreed to drop this provision out, at the request of its proponents because of the controversy surrounding it. In addition, as a completely separate part of the amendment and at the request of Mr. KENNEDY, there is added to the bill a requirement for an implementation study on the entire act.

Mr. LONG. Will the Senator explain what is being dropped from the bill?

Mr. HATCH. It allowed States to determine to what extent a religious exemption applies. The text that would be deleted from the bill (page 14, lines 9 through 16) reads as follows:

SAVINGS PROVISION

SEC. 107. The Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SAVINGS PROVISION

"SEC. 8. Nothing in this Act shall be construed to limit the right of a State to determine the health care and treatment a parent may provide his child in the exercise of the parent's freedom of religion.".

Thus, the first part of the amendment removes the savings provision that I had in this particular bill. It is a delicate issue, important particularly for its recognition of the rights of the Christian Scientists in our society, but one that cannot be resolved properly today and which is therefore being withdrawn from the bill to avoid unnecessary controversy. As I indicated in my opening statement, it is an issue on which the concerned parties will be continuing to talk in order to reach a satisfactory resolution.

Mr. DODD. I believe, as well, that there is a second provision in the amendment which would require that after 3 years, there would be an analysis of the bill we are now adopting. Even though I think good ideas have been incorporated, we will not know until they are tried. So there is language in there that suggests that we take a good, hard look at it to see if all initiatives are working, for example, the Baby Doe initiative. That is added to what the Senator from Utah has just explained. So there are two parts to the amendment.

Mr. HATCH. That is correct.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I support Senator HATCH's call for active study of the problems faced by families who believe in healing through religious means. No one would suggest that society cannot under proper circumstances intervene to protect the lives of children who are gravely ill. However, their right to enjoy the free exercise of religion must be guaranteed to the fullest practical extent. Fortunately, most of those, such as Christian Scientists who under most circumstances decline orthodox medical treatment, are not hostile to medical practice and are law-abiding citizens.

I understand that State juvenile courts are dealing satisfactorily with this delicate issue. They will intervene and assure that medical services are provided where there is clear danger to a child's life or future health. I call on the professional and religious groups as well as the Department of Health and Human Services to continue their efforts to come to an understanding of the proper roles of parents and the State in this difficult area, building on the base of experience already laid in State courts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3422) was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DODD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I am delighted that the Senate is finally considering legislation to reauthorize the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Act of 1984. Reauthorization of this act is essential in order to restore funding to this small but effective program. I believe that the limited Federal funds that the Government allocates to combat this growing epidemic is woefully inadequate. But that is not to belittle the excellent programs funded under this act. Grants from the National Center for Child Abuse and Neglect make a critical difference in our efforts to prevent child abuse from ever occurring and to counsel and treat the victims of abuse to avoid a repeat of this terrible cycle of abused children growing up to be abusive adults.

In Florida, the Orlando Regional Medical Center has operated an excellent therapeutic program for sexually abused preschoolers called The Orange Playhouse, with a 3-year grant from NCAN. Another grant was given to Sacred Heart Hospital of Pensacola for a program to teach new parents parenting skills in order to avoid potential abuse and neglect. A mental health center in Hillsborough County received a grant to offer specialized treatment and counseling services for sexually and physically abused children in an attempt to help them deal with their severe emotional problems caused by the abuse. Funding for these prevention and counseling programs is essential. Studies have shown that abused children who do not receive treatment to deal with this trauma suffer irreparable harm that often results in them being abusive parents.

Various studies have indicated that a high percentage of individuals involved in prostitution, juvenile delinquency, and child abuse were themselves child abuse victims. A study by Dr. Mimi Silbert, a criminologist who runs the Delancy Foundation, a shelter for young prostitutes in San Francisco, indicated that 70 percent of the child prostitutes interviewed reported early sexual child abuse which affected their decision to engage in prostitution. A Boston University School of Law study determined that child abuse is a common ingredient in the backgrounds of many delinquents in the United States; 10 percent of children left in an environment with recurrent physical abuse will not survive that situation; 30 to 60 percent of children have severe mental, emotional or behavioral disturbances that don't seem to disappear in adulthood.

In my own State of Florida, the Florida Child Abuse Registry reports that 2.4 million children were reportedly abused or neglected in Florida last year—128 children incurred serious neurological damage due to the abuse, 564 were seriously scalded or burned, and 1,880 children were placed in foster care due to the physical abuse in their homes; 65 percent of Florida's children who were admitted to State mental hospitals had histories of abuse and neglect. In 1971, only 4,225 children were reported to this registry. This number has steadily grown to the 85,466 reported in calendar year 1982. I would like to think that this increase indicates only an improved reporting system, but all indications point to the sad fact that this situation of child abuse is indeed worsening.

Mr. President, I would like to take just a few minutes to praise the efforts of those Senators who are responsible for crafting the compromise on the sensitive issue of care of newborn handicapped infants that enables us to be considering this legislation today. Senators HATCH, DENTON, NICKLES, KENNEDY, DODD, and CRANSTON have dedicated long hours of negotiation which fortunately for us proved extremely fruitful. These Senators and their dedicated staffs deserve our praise and gratitude for developing a legislative compromise which achieves the delicate balance of providing protection for the rights of handicapped newborns without adversely affecting the relationship between patient and physician or disrupting the operation of a hospital.

I urge my Senate colleagues to enact this legislation without further delay. The abused and neglected children need our help and assistance now.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I rise in support of S. 1003 and commend the untiring efforts of all those who participated through the entire journey of this bill and to those who worked many late hours in the night to bring a fruitful resolution of the many concerns.

S. 1003 reauthorizes and amends the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act of 1978. Child abuse is a national tragedy and when we pause and look at the statistics documenting the rapid increase in child abuse, we should be deeply concerned and appalled. This bill provides for the study of the National incidence of child abuse and neglect and makes more explicit the definition of what constitutes sexual abuse and provides funding for sexual abuse prevention and treatment.

I am also encouraged to see this bill emphasizing the promotion of special needs adoptions and the improvement of the Federal role in promoting adoption of children whose welfare is otherwise at risk.

Another important provision in this measure addresses the tragedy of the Baby Doe issue. An amendment to this bill ensures that State child abuse agencies which receive Federal funds, will incorporate procedures to enable them to handle incidences of medical neglect, such as we see occurring in major medical centers in this country. In the Bloomington, IN, case the child abuse agency was offered the right to defend Baby Doe, and they declined.

Pediatrics, October 1983 official Journal of the American Academy of Pediatrics, reported a program in which systematic neglect of spinabifida children was taking place. A cable news network series aired in February of this year and the subsequent Washington Times series from July 9–13, 1984, also exposed that program. I find the selective destruction of a handicapped child morally and ethically repugnant to our very way of life. Our Nation's commitment to equal protection under the law will have little meaning if we deny such protection to those who have not been blessed with the same physical or mental gifts that we too often take for granted. What would happen if necessary medical treatment were withheld from infants based on race, sex or creed? We must never allow a mind-set that arbitrarily determines the "quality of life" another may or may not have.

I am proud to be a cosponsor of this bill and of the "Baby Doe" amendment. I ask my colleagues to support this important and necessary legislation.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I am pleased to support S. 1003 and the amendments which are being offered to the bill today. This compromise package includes a significant increase in authorizations for the child abuse program, the creation of a demonstration program for those who are the victims of domestic violence, and a small sum of money that is set aside to help find homes for hard to place children. In addition, it includes the final product of long negotiations with medical, hospital, disability, and right to life organizations on language addressing the "Infant Doe" situation.

The statistics show an increase in reported cases of child abuse, including the abhorrent crime of sexual abuse of children. Whether this increase represents a change in society's attitude and openness toward reporting abuse cases or whether it represents an increase in the actual amount of child abuse occurring in our country, it has become apparent that the States are straining to keep up with the increased caseload.

This bill increases the authorization for Federal funding of State child abuse programs from $17 million in 1983 to $32.5 million in 1984, $39 million in 1985, $40.5 million in 1986, and $42 million in 1987. Of this money, $9.7 million is for State grants, $5 million is targeted for identification and treatment of sexual abuse, and $4 million is for States to carry out the new provisions relating to treatment of handicapped infants. It is my hope that this increase in funds will assist States in meeting the needs of those children and families who are victims of the tragedy of child abuse and neglect.

It is a known fact that there are many families in America who would like to adopt children. They often wait 1, 2, 3 or more years for infants and sometimes just give up waiting. Unfortunately, however, there is another waiting list which is equally as dismal, and that is the list of children who are waiting to find permanent homes through adoption. Often these children fall into a category known as the hard to place kids. They may come from mixed racial backgrounds, have mild to severe disabilities, or serious behavioral problems. Sometimes it seems that they just fall through the cracks of the State child placement system or are regarded as a lower priority than placing those children who are more easily placed. Yet, programs such as "Wednesday's Child" which feature hard to place children on news programs have shown that there are homes for these children. I believe that more can be done to match these special children with special families. The legislation which is before us today has a small amount of money in it for that purpose. I will be most anxious to see what the results of this seed money are over the next several years.

Recently, I received a letter from a woman in Oklahoma who had been a victim of physical violence from her husband. As she told her story, I was both shocked and impressed—shocked that this is a reoccurring phenomenon in families throughout our country, and impressed at the fortitude of this woman and the way she has used her tragic experiences to help others. She has given her time and energies for a shelter—one that helped her and now helps many others like her.

Because of her letter and those that I received from other women in Oklahoma, I want to state my support for the seed money that is provided in Senator STEVENS, amendment for a new demonstration program for domestic shelters and services. It is my understanding that the social services block grant does allow for funding of domestic violence programs. However, not all States use their funds for this activity. The demonstration program which we are authorizing today is intended to be a temporary stimulant for States to act, as is evidenced by the matching component. For 1985, the Federal share is 65 percent of any program funded under this Federal initiative. In 1986, this decreases to 45 percent, and in 1987, it decreases again to 35 percent. This is consistent with my belief that this activity is primarily one for which States should assume responsibility. However, seed money is needed to initiate such responsibility.

Finally the last new provision of this package is an amendment which Senators HATCH, DENTON, KASSEBAUM, CRANSTON, DODD, and I have offered to S. 1003 to deal with the so-called "Baby Doe" issue. The amendment expands the responsibilities of State child protective service agencies receiving Federal funds under this program to include procedures and/or programs for responding to reports of medical neglect, including the alleged denial of necessary medical treatment for handicapped newborns. In reality, this is not a new responsibility in most States since the child abuse statutes could be interpreted to include this form of medical neglect.

It is an understatement to say that defining what constitutes medical neglect is fraught with difficulties, sensitivities, and very fine lines. No one wants Washington establishing medical standards and practices for every case or diagnosis. Yet, on the other side of the equation, no one wants to condone the discriminate denial of medical treatment for infants simply because they may suffer some degree of retardation, paralysis, or other disability. Our Nation has come too far in the mainstreaming of persons with disabilities into all aspects of society to sanction a quality of life ethic in which only those who are fit or productive or functioning members of society are allowed to live. I believe that this legislation represents the best middle-ground approach to the issue.

First, it designates States, rather than the Federal Government as the first tier of review for any allegation of the withholding of medically indicated treatment from an infant. The State child protection authorities are encouraged to establish a working relationship with hospitals, particularly those which serve as referral centers for children born with complications, not only for purposes of any neglect reporting, but also for the exchange of information about what services are available to an infant born with disabilities and his or her family. One of the most helpful things for a family dealing with the trauma of the birth of a handicapped child is to talk with other parents who have gone through the same experience. The Rossaw family of Connecticut have adopted 11 children with various disabilities. In their experience, this single recommendation is the one which has made the most difference to families coping with an unanticipated complication at birth. I envision that the child protective services can serve as a conduit for this kind of exchange and for notification of the other services which may be available in the community.

Second, the amendment to S. 1003 provides a carefully crafted definition of the phrase "withholding of medically indicated treatment" to guide States in carrying out the provisions of this act. This language was the product of a broad spectrum of interests from the medical, hospital, disability, and prolife organizations.

Those who now support it include: The American Hospital Association, the Catholic Health Association, the American Academy of Pediatrics, the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, the American Nurses Association, the American College of Physicians, the National Association of Children's Hospitals and Related Institutions, the California Association of Children's Hospitals, the Nurses Association of the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, the American Association on Mental Deficiency, the Association for Retarded Citizens, U.S.; the Spina Bifida Association of America, the Down's Syndrome Congress, the Association for Persons with Severe Handicaps, the Disability Rights Center, People First of Nebraska, Operation Real Rights, the National Right to Life, and the Christian Action Council.

Withholding of medically indicated treatment is defined as:

* * * the failure to respond to the infant's life-threatening conditions by providing treatment (including appropriate nutrition, hydration, and medication) which, in the treating physicians' or physician's reasonable medical judgment, will be most likely to be effective in ameliorating or correcting all such conditions, except that the term does not include the failure to provide treatment (other than appropriate nutrition, hydration, or medication) to an infant when, in the treating physicians' reasonable medical judgment, (A) the infant is chronically and irreversibly comatose, (B) the provision of such treatment would not be effective in ameliorating or correcting all of the infant's life-threatening conditions, (C) the provision of such treatment would merely prolong dying, or, (D) the provision of such treatment would be almost entirely futile in terms of the survival of the infant and the treatment itself under such circumstances would be inhumane.

I think that this language is very clear in what it does not require. First, it does not require unending treatment of an infant which is doomed to die regardless of what is done. If the child is born dying, then only that which is necessary to feed the child and relieve pain is required. Second, if a child is born with more than one anomaly, and one or several are correctable with treatment, but the child has some condition which is fatal and untreatable, then the physician is not being mandated to take the infant through repeated surgeries for the correctable condition(s). Third, the language does not apply to children in comas.

Finally, the last exception allows for the so-called gray areas. These are the cases when the child has a very slim chance for survival and the physician must make a judgment call as to whether the odds of correcting the child's condition are strong enough to merit an attempt to save the baby, even with treatment that may be very painful. This provision in our language gives a physician the leeway needed to make such a judgment call without fear of violating the letter or spirit of this legislation.

What does this language require, then? It requires a physician to treat treatable medical conditions to the best of his/her ability without regard for any handicap that a child may have. For example, a child born with Down's syndrome who also has an esophagus which needs surgery cannot be denied that surgery and allowed to die simply because he or she will suffer some unknown degree of retardation. Or, a child born with spina bifida cannot be denied aggressive life-saving treatment simply because he or she may need leg braces to walk.

Cathryn Donnelly of Tulsa, OK, was born with spina bifida. No one could have predicted how Cathryn's family would handle her disability, how she would cope, what the degree of her paralysis would be, or if she would suffer any mental impairment. Yet, there are decisions being made in hospitals today which judge all of these things in the first few days of birth and rule against treatment because some alleged quality of life is not expected. I am not comfortable setting standards for who shall live and who shall die, nor am I comfortable allowing someone else to make such a decision for me. The standard that has been part of our common law is to treat those for which there is a reasonable chance to save, regardless of whether or not they are going to be retarded, paralyzed, or otherwise disabled. Obviously, such a standard requires that we, as a society, are willing to commit the resources necessary to help this population reach their potential. We have gone a long way at the Federal level to try and ensure that medical, rehabilitative, educational, and other services are available to meet that commitment.

In closing, I would like to say that this compromise in the "Infant Doe" area is one that is a reasonable balance between the twin objectives of minimal Government interference, while ensuring adequate protection of the civil rights of all Americans, regardless of age, handicap, sex, or race. The other portions of the amendment as I have outlined them are also laudable initiatives which I am happy to support and recommend to my colleagues.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator CRANSTON and I be added as cosponsors of the underlying bill, S. 1003.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support the reauthorization of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act. The extension and increase in authorization for child abuse prevention and support for child protective service is desperately needed.

In my State, the Massachusetts Committee for Children and Youth reports that we are unable to provide adequate services at the present level of Federal funding. Staff, services, foster care and emergency shelter are inadequate to meet the need. According to Parents Anonymous, 30,000 incidents of child abuse and neglect were reported in Massachusetts in 1982-83.

A nation that truly cherishes its children must protect and support those children. Our children are our future, our most precious national resource.

Families suffering the stress of modern society, the erosion of traditional support systems, the humiliation of unemployment, the isolation of single parenthood, the pain of poverty, or the affliction of mental illness must have somewhere to turn. We must strengthen the support systems for our families. We must not abandon the weakest and most vulnerable members of our society—our children.

With the passage of this legislation we reaffirm our commitment to care for and protect our Nation's children.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I am pleased to join in cosponsoring and supporting the legislation which the Senate is considering which would extend the authorizations of appropriations for the Federal Child Abuse and Neglect Program and Adoption Reform Program, respond to the difficult and troubling problems surrounding the provision of medical care to disabled infants with life-threatening conditions, and establish a program to help meet the needs of victims of family violence.

Mr. President, the legislation before the Senate today represents a complex package dealing with a number of critical issues. First, it would continue the important Federal Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act. As the Senate author of the 1978 extension and revision of that program, I am pleased to see this program continued. I doubt anyone can seriously question the need for continuation of this program, particularly given the increases in cases of reported child abuse that have taken place during the past several years. Second, it would continue the adoption reform program which I also authored in the 95th Congress. This program is designed to help facilitate the adoptive placement of children with special needs. It is a companion to the landmark legislation we enacted in 1980, Public Law 96-272, the Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Act. Both laws are focused upon eliminating those barriers which have held thousands of children in the foster care system limbo and prevented their placement in loving, adoptive homes. The bill which was reported by the Labor and Human Resources Committee does add some additional activities to be carried out under this program, but I am satisfied that these additional activities are not intended to alter the focus of this program upon the problems related to the adoptive placement of children with special needs.

Third, the legislation would establish a new program to provide demonstration grants to programs providing assistance to victims of family violence and research and personnel training in this area.

Mr. President, I would like to discuss the two amendments, one relating to the withholding of medical treatment from disabled infants with life-threatening conditions and the other relating to the Family Violence Program.

DISABLED INFANT AMENDMENT

As I indicated at the time this amendment, No. 3385, was introduced on June 29, 1984, it was developed as the product of many, many long hours of negotiations with representatives from the disability community, the health-care community and the pro-life community. This process contended over 4 months and virtually nonstop for 4 days and nights at the end of June.

Mr. President, as I said at that time, those negotiations were absolutely remarkable in every respect. These divergent groups have met repeatedly with the Senate staff to attempt to hammer out an agreement. Some of the parties to the negotiations would have preferred no Federal legislation in this area; others would have preferred a stronger Federal role. Nevertheless, in an effort to develop a workable and appropriate amendment, they all worked constructively together.

The compromise has the support of virtually all of the groups involved, including the American Association on Mental Deficiency, Association for Retarded Citizens, U.S., Spina-Bifida Association of America, Downs-Syndrome Congress, People First of Nebraska, American Coalition of Citizens With Disabilities, the Association for Persons with Severe Handicaps [TASH], Disability Rights Center, Operation Real Rights, Christian Action Council, National Right to Life Committee, American Hospital Association, Catholic Health Association, National Association of Children's Hospital and Related Institutions, American Academy of Pediatrics, American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, American Nurses Association, American College of Physicians, California Assocation of Children's Hospitals, and Nurses Association of the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists.

This amendment, I believe, represents an appropriate response to a very difficult problem. It relies upon the existing State child protective services system to respond to reports of medical neglect involving the withholding of medically indicated treatment from disabled infants with life-threatening conditions. It includes carefully worded provisions to delineate the areas of concern regarding medical treatment for these infants. It relies heavily upon reasonable medical judgment as a determinative factor in decisionmaking. It provides for coordination and consultation with designated individuals within health-care facilities to enhance the decisionmaking process involving these cases. It would authorize the establishment of training and technical assistance programs to improve the provision of services to these infants and programs to assist their families in finding the necessary support services, including financial assistance.

I think it is a reasonable, rational, and carefully crafted response to a difficult area; it represents an approach which is likely to improve the decisionmaking process without unnecessary Government intervention. It also includes a provision for additional funding so that the already sorely overtaxed child protective services agencies will receive some additional resources to carry out their responsibilities in an effective manner.

Finally, an amendment proposed by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] would direct the Secretary of Health and Human Services to provide Congress, by October 1, 1987, with a detailed report on the implementation and the effects of the amendments made by each of the titles of this legislation. This is most particularly aimed at the provisions of title II.

DOMESTIC VIOLENCE PROVISIONS

Mr. President, I am also a principal cosponsor of the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS] which would add, as a new title III to the bill, a program relating to family violence. Again, this amendment was worked out with the floor managers and represents a compromise proposal.

As an original cosponsor of S. 2430, introduced by the Senator from Alaska on March 15 of this year, an original cosponsor as well of similar legislation introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], S. 699, in March of last year, and as the author of the legislation dealing with family violence twice passed by the Senate—S. 1843 in 1980 during the 96th Congress and S. 2759 in 1978 during the 95th Congress, I have been deeply committed to the enactment of legislation which would provide for Federal assistance to State and local programs dealing with the devastating problems associated with family violence.

Mr. President, as would the other cosponsors of this amendment, I would prefer to see a stronger domestic violence bill enacted. However, like the other cosponsors, we entered into negotiations with the distinguished chairman of the Labor and Human Resources Committee and the chairman of the Subcommittee on Family and Human Resources in order to develop an amendment which would accommodate, as much as possible, the concerns of all the parties. Given the long history of congressional inability to reach a final agreement about the appropriate Federal role in this area, I am pleased that we have been able to reach a bipartisan agreement with regard to this amendment. I congratulate my colleagues on all sides of this issue for their efforts in this endeavor, and I think that the amendment which we have developed does meet many of the critical goals which have motivated legislative initiatives in this area.

BRIEF DESCRIPTION

Mr. President, I would like to take a few moments to describe the major features of the amendment.

First, it would establish authority for the Secretary of Health and Human Resources to make demonstration grants to public agencies and private nonprofit organizations, including religious and charitable organizations and voluntary associations for one or more of the following purposes: First, to prevent incidents of family violence including providing immediate shelter and related assistance to victims of domestic violence and their dependents; second, to conduct research into the causes of family violence and into the prevention, identification, and treatment thereof; third, to train personnel working in family violence programs, and, fourth, to train local and State law enforcement personnel on techniques in handling incidents of family violence.

The legislation would provide that not less than 50 percent of the funds appropriated shall go to programs aimed at preventing incidents of family violence, including shelter programs.

Mr. President, this earmark is important because it makes clear the intent of the sponsors that the majority of the funds allocated under this legislation must go to programs actually providing services to victims of domestic violence and particularly those programs providing emergency shelter, rather than to the research or personnel training programs. In my view, it would be preferable that more than 50 percent of the funds be allocated to those types of service programs. The 50 percent is intended simply to be a minimum guarantee, not a maximum, and I certainly intend to monitor closely the allocation of program grants to assure that this intent be carried out. The overwhelming necessity of providing support to programs providing emergency shelter care to victims of family violence has always been a major, driving force behind this legislation, and it is our intent that providing assistance to those programs continue to be a major priority under this amendment.

In this connection, Mr. President, I want to stress that the availability of emergency shelter has always been regarded as an integral part of prevention efforts in this area. Law enforcement officials who testified before a hearing on family violence I chaired during the 95th and 96th Congresses repeatedly stressed their support for emergency shelter facilities and the importance of such facilities in preventing incidents of family violence.

There are, of course, other services that can and should be provided to individuals involved in family violence programs. But the provision of a refuge to those women and children whose lives are endangered during violent episodes has always been of the utmost importance in our effort to deal with this overall problem.

The legislation also would require the Secretary to ensure that there is an equitable distribution of assistance both with respect to the States and between rural and urban areas and would direct that a priority be given to applications from communities without such programs or which are underserved.

The size of the grants would also be limited to not more than $50,000 in any entity unless the Secretary, in exceptional circumstances, determines that a grant in a greater amount is necessary. Similar provisions have been included in previous proposals in order to encourage programs to secure other funds and not rely solely upon grants from this program. An increasing matching share is also contained in the bill in order, again, to encourage programs to seek other support. The non-Federal share requirements could be met either by cash or in-kind services. Similar provisions have been included in the provisions proposals.

Second, in addition to the demonstation grant authority provisions, the amendment directs the Secretary to coordinate programs within HHS and to seek to coordinate all other Federal programs which involve the prevention of incidents of family violence. The Secretary would also be directed to appoint to implement the act an employee of the Department with expertise in the field of family violence prevention and services. Those provisions also include the responsibility for operating a national information and research clearinghouse on the prevention of family violence which would include collecting, preparing, analyzing, and disseminating information and statistics and analyses of such information and statistics relating to the incidence and prevention of family violence and providing information about alternative sources of assistance for the prevention of incidents of family violence and for the provision of immediate shelter and related assistance to victims of family violence and their dependents.

These clearinghouse activities would be required to be coordinated with the information clearinghouse maintained by the National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect.

Mr. President, the sponsors of the amendment are aware that some of these activities required for the clearinghouse functions under section 304 of the amendment are already being performed by certain existing entities. However, the level of activity in this area being supported by the Department is not sufficient, and a substantial increase in these activities would be required to take place if section 304 is enacted.

Finally, the amendment would authorized the $5,000,000 fiscal year 1985, $15,000,000 for fiscal year 1986, and $15,000,000 for fiscal year 1987 to carry out this title. These funding levels are extremely modest and clearly would provide a very minimal level of assistance in areas of great unmet needs. Nevertheless, they represent a beginning for a long-awaited program.

Mr. President, as I indicated at the outset, I certainly would have preferred a stronger bill. Nevertheless, I am acutely aware of the problems which have hindered enactment of legislation in this area and the necessity of reaching a compromise. The amendment represents an important step in the direction which should have been taken long ago.

I want especially to congratulate the Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS] for having offered this amendment and having made the effort to enact family violence legislation a truly bipartisan effort. I also want to make note of the dedication and commitment—derived from firsthand experience in helping domestic violence victims—which Susan Arnold of Senator STEVENS' staff has given to this issue.

DELETION OF SAVINGS PROVISION

Mr. President, one issue of controversy arose fairly recently regarding the so-called savings provision, contained in section 107 of the Senate-reported bill which relates to States granting exemptions from child abuse or neglect findings under State law in cases involving failure to provide medical treatment on the basis of religious beliefs.

Because of the shortness of time and the urgency of moving ahead with this legislation, it was not possible to resolve the differing viewpoints on this provision. The Senator from Utah therefore decided to delete this provision from the bill rather than hold up its consideration because of this issue. This was a very conciliatory and gracious move on his part, and I congratulate him for his willingness to set this issue aside for the time being so that we could move forward today with the rest of the bill.

I share the Senator from Utah's view that this issue does need to be revisited, particularly in light of the confusion which has for many years surrounded its relationship to the child abuse State grant program. Much of this confusion resulted from the failure of the Congress to deal directly with the religious exemption issue when the legislation was first enacted in 1973. The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare—now the Department of Health and Human Services—attempted to fill this void by promulgating in 1974 regulations requiring States to enact religious exemption clauses in order to receive State grant funds. The Department based those regulations upon language that had appeared in the 1973 House report, not upon any express requirement in the statute itself. The most recent set of regulations, published in 1983, reversed that interpretation and indicated that States are free to enact or not enact such exemptions, but required that any such exemptions that are enacted must provide administrative or judicial authority to order medical treatment for a child "when his health requires it." There is no clear consensus as to what impact these provisions or exemptions have upon reporting obligations.

Congress needs to focus upon this entire question very carefully and seek to find a reasonable balance which allows States to deal with the religious exemption issue in their own fashion while reaffirming the well-recognized authority of the State, through its judicial system, to protect the health and lives of the children involved and to ensure that reporting mechanisms are appropriately fashioned to achieve those ends. Congress ought to determine these issues and not merely relegate them to a regulatory process which has in the past produced quite contradictory results.

Again, I congratulate Senator HATCH for his willingness to set this important issue aside temporarily so that we can move forward with the other most important components of this bill.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, in concluding I want to make special note of the extraordinary contributions made by the staffs on both sides of the aisle in working out the numerous issues involved in this legislation. In particular, Nancy Taylor, Debbie Turner, and Steve Grossman of Senator HATCH's staff, David Yensen of Senator DENTON's staff, Laura Clay of Senator NICKLES staff and Susan Hutton of Senator KASSENBAUM's have played a truly productive and creative role on behalf of the majority. On the minority side, Andrea Young and Debbie Curtis ably represented Senator KENNEDY on the domestic violence legislation as did Westly Clark on the disabled infant amendment. Marsha Renwanz of Senator DODD's staff, played a critical role in working out all of the provisions of the bill. On my own staff, Susanne Martinez and Jon Steinberg were deeply involved in the negotiations that lead to agreements on each of the amendments and played crucial roles in drafting the legislative language.

I also want to express my deep admiration for all of the groups who worked on this legislation and the amendments. The compromises and willingness to continue striving to reach agreement was extrordinary. Senator HATCH has already mentioned the names of the representatives of these groups, and I would like to add my personal tribute for the vital contribution that each one of them made to the final legislative action being taken by the Senate tonight.

Mr. JEPSEN. Mr. President, I am pleased to see that the Senate has turned to the consideration of S. 1003, the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act. This important bill has been delayed for over a year because of language dealing with the treatment of handicapped infants.

Through the diligent efforts of Senators HATCH, DENTON, NICKLES, KASSEBAUM, DODD, and CRANSTON, their staffs, and several health/medical, disability, and prolife groups, a compromise has been reached on the treatment of handicapped infants. This compromise, which is being offered as an amendment to S. 1003, provides protections to handicapped infants.

As many of my colleagues will remember, the issue of treating handicapped infants started over 2 years ago when an infant with Down's syndrome and an incomplete esophagus was allowed to die. The public was outraged about this case, including many of us on Capitol Hill.

In response to this case, known as the "Baby Doe" case, the Department of Health and Human Services issued regulations twice under section 504 to ensure that treatment was not deliberately withheld from handicapped infants. However, in both cases, a U.S. court struck down the regulations.

Pressure to adopt some protections for handicapped infants have intensified as more cases of medical neglect have been discovered. I could point out many shocking cases where infants were allowed to die, some of which were based on a mathematical equation. These tragedies must not continue.

We cannot destroy life just because the life does not meet our specifications nor can we judge the quality of life. These infants should not be deprived the opportunity of living just because they have a crippling handicap. I know of many handicapped individuals who have had very successful, happy, and productive lives. I know of many families who feel blessed to have experienced the joys of raising a handicapped youngster.

I am increasingly concerned about the growing lack of respect for life we have in this Nation today. This lack of respect starts out with the willingness of our society to kill the unborn and continues onward to handicapped newborns. One way we can turn this trend around is to adopt protections for these handicapped infants.

It is for this reason that I cosponsored the compromise "Baby Doe" amendment, and I urge my colleagues to support it today. This amendment is a reasonable step toward protecting these infants.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, child abuse and neglect reporting laws have revealed to us in recent years the dimension of this painful social problem. The system of mandatory reporting is the backbone of our effort to understand and combat abuse and neglect.

However, in situations where parents rely on spiritual healing methods, some consideration should be given to the protection of religious freedoms. I am not prepared to say today what adaptations of these reporting laws will best protect our children while respecting the spirit of the first amendment, but I believe the matter is worthy of continued study.

These reporting requirements pose a particular dilemma for persons engaged in a religious healing industry, such as Christian Science practitioners. Depending on administrative interpretations, they are left in an ambiguous situation by many State reporting laws. An examination of abuse and neglect reporting laws should include consideration of the traditional privileges given to confidential communications with ministers, priests, rabbis, and others serving in a similar capacity.

I support Senator HATCH in asking all those interested to join in an effort to produce some legislation which will be fair and acceptable to the families affected, the health professions and the social agencies which must administer the reporting statutes.

● Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I am encouraged that the Senate has finally reached a compromise on issues which have delayed this Chamber's consideration of S. 1003 since the measure was reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources in May 1983. This legislation is needed to reauthorize the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act of 1978, which provides Federal support to States for child abuse prevention and adoption services.

As a member of the Labor and Human Resources Committee, I believe it is essential that we have a strong Federal policy designed to combat the widespread occurrence of child abuse in this Nation. The alarming increase in the number of child abuse and neglect cases affirms the need for us to continue with vigor our efforts to reduce what is truly a serious and unacceptable tragedy.

In addition, Mr. President, I am pleased to cosponsor the amendment to S. 1003 offered by the Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS], to provide funding for demonstration grants to community-based groups to promote prevention and provide services to victims of family violence. Although I supported the allocation of greater resources for this important effort, the amendment we are offering today is nevertheless critically needed.

Violence in the family is unfortunate and increasing, and it has shown to be a practice handed down from generation to generation. Family violence threatens the integrity of our society and, again, I am pleased to be a cosponsor of this action and urge all of my colleagues to join us in this effort.●

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I am in strong support of this bill. The reauthorization of the Child Abuse Prevention, Treatment, and Adoption Reform Act is an urgent necessity if we are to stem the tide of violence against children and protect handicapped infants and children. The epidemic of child abuse and neglect demands our immediate attention. The tragedies of Baby Doe and Baby Jane Doe, and an increase in the sexual abuse of children are the most recent signals that we can no longer delay implementing a coordinated national campaign to save our most vulnerable citizens, our children.

This legislation enables us to address these critical issues and to act together to assist parents, with the advice of their physicians, to ensure that proper decisions about the treatment of seriously ill newborn children are made. I applaud Senators HATCH, DODD, KASSEBAUM, NICKLES, and CRANSTON, and the Committee on Labor and Human Resources for developing an approach that balances very important and sensitive concerns: The privacy rights of the family, the vulnerability of children, and the need to ensure medical treatment for handicapped children when it is necessary, but not when it is merely futile.

The key to the compromise represented by this act is that it relies upon the existing State child protective services system to respond to reports of medical neglect involving the withholding of medically indicated treatment from disabled infants with life-threatening conditions. It clearly states that reasonable medical judgment is part of the decisionmaking process and provides for coordination and consultation with designated health care professionals in these difficult cases. I am particularly impressed by the provisions for training and technical assistance to improve the level of care and support provided both to the infants and to their families.

The act also continues Federal programs supporting the adoption of special-needs children, increasing their authorization levels to $5 million, a modest but significant increase over the previous level of $2 million. This bill contains important provisions for adoptive family and minority group consultation, encouragement of private sector support for adoption services, and a national study of unlicensed adoption and child placement operations.

I urge my colleagues to give this bill unanimous support.●

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator object to having the yeas and nays ordered on final passage of the bill?

Mr. HATCH. We have a number of Senators who would not like to have the yeas and nays. I would like to have the yeas and nays, but I would like to accommodate other Senators.

Mr. LONG. It is all right with me to go to third reading and have the yeas and nays tomorrow. I would like to have a rollcall vote on the bill.

It is my understanding that a message has been sent out on the Democratic hotline that there may be further votes tonight.

Mr. HATCH. I told everybody that I did not think there would be, but I could not guarantee it.

Mr. LONG. It seems to me that we should have a vote on the bill. I would like to be on record.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, if I may finish——

Mr. LONG. May we have the yeas and nays on the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, as agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H.R. 1904, Calendar No. 647.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 1904) to extend and improve the provisions of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act and the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act of 1978.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed immediately to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to strike all after the enacting clause of H.R. 1904 and to insert in lieu thereof the text of S. 1003, as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Utah.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the yeas and nays were ordered on the Senate bill and not on the bill now before us.

I ask to have the yeas and nays on the bill that is now pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we vitiate the yeas and nays on the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ARMSTRONG], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. HEINZ], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. PACKWOOD], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PERCY], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. STAFFORD], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS] are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. HEINZ], would vote "yea."

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. CHILES], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HART], the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JOHNSTON], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. TSONGAS] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 89, nays 0, as follows:

So the bill (H.R. 1904), as amended, was passed.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, and request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the Chair be authorized to appoint the following conferees.

The motion was agreed to, and the Chair appointed the following conferees; Senator HATCH, Senator DENTON, Senator NICKLES, Senator KENNEDY, and Senator DODD.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to indefinitely postpone Calendar No. 171, S. 1003.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I congratulate all of the respective Senators and staffs for the wonderful work they have done on this very historic bill.

Mr. BAKER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, if I could have the attention of the Senate, I believe there will be one more record vote tonight. I think it can begin within the next 5 minutes or so. I urge Senators to pay attention of what we are about to do.

Senator MOYNIHAN has proposed a Social Security amendment to the previous bill.

The distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee indicated that he would cooperate in trying to find another vehicle for that. I am happy to report that the chairman of the Finance Committee has found such a vehicle.

I report as well that I support this, and the administration supports this action. The amendment about to be proposed by Senator MOYNIHAN and Senator DOLE, I believe, we can move on now with a minimum of difficulty.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate temporarily lay aside the Hoover Dam bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SOCIAL SECURITY COST-OF-LIVING ADJUSTMENTS IN 1985

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I further ask unanimous consent that the Finance Committee be discharged from further consideration of H.R. 1428, and that the Senate proceed to its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report the bill by title.

The bill clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 1428) for the relief of the estate of Nell J. Redfield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, H.R. 1428 is a House-passed private relief bill to provide an estate tax credit to the Redfield estate to facilitate Federal acquisition of forest land.

The relief was recently enacted as part of the Deficit Reduction Act, H.R. 4170. Thus, there is no need to deal further with the substance of H.R. 1428.

AMENDMENT NO. 3423

(Purpose: To provide that there will be a cost-of-living increase in social security and SSI benefits for 1985 without regard to whether the 3 percent threshold is met)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I move that all after the enacting clause be stricken, and I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of myself and Mr. DOLE, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN], for himself, Mr. DOLE, and Mr. BRADLEY, proposes an amendment numbered 3423.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert:

That (a) in determining whether the base quarter ending on September 30, 1984, is a cost-of-living computation quarter for the purposes of the cost-of-living increases under sections 215(i) and 1617 of the Social Security Act, the phrase "is 3 percent or more" appearing in section 215(i)(1)(B) of such Act shall be deemed to read "is greater than zero".

(b) For purposes of section 215(i) of such Act, the provisions of subsection (a) shall not constitute a "general benefit increase".

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to offer legislation that would ensure a cost of living increase in January 1985 for the Nation's Social Security and supplemental security income beneficiaries.

The Social Security Act provides for an automatic benefit increase in any year when the cost of living rises by 3 percent or more. Inflation, of late, has slowed markedly, and in most respects this is a welcome and happy event. But for aged and disabled Americans, lower inflation is a mixed blessing. Current projections for the increase in the Consumer Price Index from the third quarter of 1983 to the third quarter of 1984 are hovering just below 3 percent. While this may mean only slightly higher prices for the goods our elderly and disabled citizens must purchase, it also appears that, barring the change I am proposing, Social Security and SSI recipients will receive no cost of living increase.

The fact is, we are in a position to provide for this increase, because the trust funds are in satisfactory condition.

On January 15, 1983, the National Commission on Social Security Reform, on which I served, agreed to a set of recommendations to put Social Security on a firm financial footing. Our proposals became law 3 months later, and optimism about their efficacy has been vindicated. On April 5 of this year, the trustees of the Social Security trust funds—Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan, Labor Secretary Raymond J. Donovan, and Health and Human Services Secretary Margaret M. Heckler—reported that benefits to be provided "under these programs can be paid well into the next century."

This 1984 trustees report assumed that in January 1985, benefits would increase 4.7 percent—that being the projected rise in the CPI. In 1985, that increase would cost the Social Security system $8.3 billion in benefit payments. If benefits were adjusted in January of next year based on a 2.9-percent CPI increase, the costs to the OASDI funds would be about $5 billion—roughly $3.3 billion less than is now incorporated in the trust fund projections.

Let me also note that over 2 years, this legislation will not cost the trust fund any substantial additional moneys. Under provisions of the Social Security Act, if recipients forfeit their COLA because the CPI rises less than 3 percent, the COLA for the following year would be based on the increase in the CPI over the previous 2 years. With this legislation, then, we simply would ensure that our elderly and disabled citizens receive their COLA's when they need it—when the CPI rises, without waiting an additional year. And let me mention another happy fact. The OASDI trust funds are in even sounder condition today than the 1984 trustee's report had estimated. That report predicted a trust fund balance in January 1985 of $27.7 billion. According to Social Security actuaries, the military adjustment payment to the trust funds will exceed the trustee's expectations by some $2.6 billion. Moreover, the current recovery is increasing revenues into the fund at a faster rate than expected. A timely COLA of just under 3 percent would leave the trust funds in a fine and healthy condition.

President Reagan now supports this increase in Social Security benefits.

This week, the President joined in the view of the trustees of the Social Security funds. The President's remarks are a happy, though somewhat belated, expression of confidence in the solvency of the Social Security funds. In effect, he acknowledged that the trust funds are healthy enough to provide benefit increases beyond those required by present law. Perhaps now, at last, the cosntant harping we have heard about the failings and possible demise of the Social Security system is at an end.

Single Americans on Social Security receive an average benefit of $425 a month, an annual income of just $5,100. This increase of roughly 3 percent will mean about $12 more each month, or $144 a year. The average benefit for aged couples on Social Security, about $700 a month, would be increased by roughly $21 per month. That means $252 more a year for a couple living now on just $8,400. Among the most poor aged—those receiving SSI—this increase will mean $108 more per year for an individual now living on less than $3,800, and $168 more per year for a couple now receiving less than $5,700 in annual support.

These certainly are small sums for individuals, but they maintain the buying power of their current incomes. These increases just keep pace with actual inflation, inflation which elderly and disabled Americans cannot offset, like some of the rest of us, by working harder.

This increase of about 3 percent will keep almost a half million elderly and disabled Americans above the poverty line, according to estimates by the American Association of Retired Persons. Can we do otherwise? Can we sit by and watch a half million of our elderly and disabled citizens slip below the poverty line? They deserve—indeed, have earned—this cost of living adjustment.

I invite my colleagues to join me in this effort to grant a cost of living adjustment to the millions of elderly, blind, and disabled Americans who receive Social Security and supplemental security income.

Mr. President, I am introducing this amendment with my good friends and colleagues, Senators DOLE, BRADLEY, and HART.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, this amendment would permit Social Security beneficiaries to receive their cost of living adjustment [COLA] in January 1985. Under the law, if inflation is very low—3 percent or less—the COLA is delayed until the following year. This has been a part of the law since Social Security was first indexed in 1972. It is in there only for administrative convenience, not as a solvency matter. Beneficiaries would ultimately receive the COLA; this amendment just ensures they receive it on time.

President Reagan, recently proposed this modification of the law.

I'd like to assure my colleagues that this in no way would affect the consensus reform package adopted last year. This amendment just modifies a technical provision in the law and does so for just 1 year, 1985. I would also like to point out that the Congress adopted this provision for the 1984 COLA in last year's Social Security amendments.

Under this amendment if inflation, measured from the third quarter of 1983 to the third quarter of 1984, should fall to less than 3 percent—to say 2.8 percent—a 2.8-percent COLA will be paid in January, rather than being deferred to 1986. The other indexed features of the Social Security program would also be increased on time—the exempt amount of earnings under the retirement-earnings test, the amount of taxable earnings, and the SSI COLA. If inflation does run below 3 percent, 2.8 percent, for example, the net costs will be about $3.0-$3.5 billion. If the inflation rate remains above 3 percent, as it certainly may, the amendment will have no effect at all.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment. It ensures the Nation's elderly that they will receive their COLA on time, in January, and not find it delayed due to a technicality in the law that few are even aware of.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I rise as a cosponsor of this amendment to ensure that Social Security recipients be provided with the cost-of-living adjustment that is due them this January.

Under current law, if the inflation rate over the past year is less than 3 percent, a COLA is not granted. Last year, the Congress delayed Social Security COLA's for 6 months—from June 1984 to January 1985.

Mr. President, inflation has been averaging approximately 3 percent over the past year. If the inflation rate comes out to just under 3 percent, Social Security recipients will be denied a COLA until January 1986. The last COLA was provided in June 1983. Unless we pass this legislation, Social Security recipients will have to wait 2½ years between COLA's. We can do better.

Mr. President, for the sake of fairness, I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I assure the Senate that a very careful day was spent with the actuaries of the Social Security Administration, which convinces this Senator that this is wholly feasible, that the Social Security trust funds at the end of the 1985 will be by a considerable number larger than projected by the actuaries earlier this year.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, assuming this amendment is adopted at this time, there will be no more record votes tonight.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I indicate to the majority leader that this has been discussed with the White House, and they are very pleased that we are taking action on this this evening.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Shameful.

The bill clerk called the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ARMSTRONG], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. PACKWOOD], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SIMPSON], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. STAFFORD], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS] are necessarily absent.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. CHILES], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HART], the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. TSONGAS] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILSON). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

So the amendment (No. 3423) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read a third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

So the bill (H.R. 1428), as amended, was passed.

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk to the title and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

Amend the title so as to read:

An act to insure the payment of Social Security cost of living adjustments in 1985.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to amend the title.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I enter a motion to reconsider the vote on amendment No. 3423, I enter a motion to reconsider the third reading of this bill, and I enter a motion to reconsider the final passage of the bill, H.R. 1428.

NOMINATION OF JAMES HARVIE WILKINSON III TO BE U.S. CIRCUIT JUDGE

Mr. TRIBLE. Mr. President, earlier today the Senator from Massachusetts repeated the same insubstantial and irrelevant allegations regarding the nomination of J. Harvie Wilkinson III as he has advanced in the past. The same arguments were rejected by this body 54 to 36 on a vote to recommit the nomination to the Judiciary Committee. I regret that this nomination has fallen prey to petty partisanship by Senator KENNEDY.

But I regret most the Senator's unfortunate characterization of the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee and his handling of J. Harvie Wilkinson's nomination to the Fourth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

To even insinuate that Senator THURMOND has, in some way, stonewalled this nomination is both incorrect and manifestly unfair. The record clearly shows that Senator THURMOND, in his capacity as Judiciary Committee chairman, has acted fairly and evenhandedly in all of these proceedings.

Senator KENNEDY knows very well that there have been two separate hearings before the committee on this nomination—neither of which he nor any other Democratic member attended.

Also, since the nomination was first made in November 1983, Senator THURMOND has three times—three times—held over action on it in an effort to accommodate minority members of the committee.

Those are not the actions of a man trying to stonewall a nomination. Senator THURMOND is too gracious a gentleman to come to his own defense in this matter, but I feel that the record must correctly reflect the fair and open manner in which this nomination has been handled by the Judiciary Committee chairman.

It is, quite simply, time to vote on this nomination. Senator THURMOND has urged us to do that, and has instructed members of the committee who have continuing objections about Mr. Wilkinson's qualifications or the ABA rating system to express themselves in a vote on this nomination. However, to hold up one nomination for this long is neither accommodating nor constructive.

There are hearings pending by the Judiciary Subcommittee on the Courts regarding the ABA rating system. I urge those Senators with concerns about that system to attend those hearings and to participate if they so wish. In the meantime, it is time to move on with this nomination and get on with the Nation's business.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

At 11:11 a.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Goetz, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5712) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes; it agrees to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. SMITH of Iowa, Mr. ALEXANDER, Mr. EARLY, Mr. DWYER of New Jersey, Mr. MRAZEK, Mr. CARR, Mr. WHITTEN, Mr. O'BRIEN, Mr. MILLER of Ohio, Mr. PORTER, and Mr. CONTE as managers of the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House has passed the bill (S. 1146) to amend the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 to provide for the revocation of the airman certificates and for additional penalties for the transportation by aircraft of controlled substances, and for other purposes, with an amendment; it insists upon its amendment to the bill, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MINETA, Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. ROE, Mr. SNYDER, and Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT as managers of the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the following bills:

H.R. 559. An act to amend the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 to increase the sanctions against trading in securities while in possession of material nonpublic information; and

H.R. 1310. An act to provide assistance to improve elementary, secondary, and postsecondary education in mathematics and science; to provide a national policy for engineering, technical, and scientific personnel; to provide cost sharing by the private sector in training such personnel; to encourage creation of new engineering, technical, and scientific jobs, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House has passed the following bills, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate

H.R. 5223. An act to exempt restaurant central kitchens from Federal inspection requirements;

H.R. 5358. An act to enable honey producers and handlers to finance a nationally coordinated research, promotion, and consumer information program designed to expand their markets for honey;

H.R. 5541. An act to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to extend certain authorizations of appropriations contained in such Act, and for other purposes;

H.R. 5833. An act to improve certain maritime programs of the Department of Transportation and the Department of Commerce; and

H.R. 5890. An act to establish a commission to assist in the first observance of the Federal legal holiday honoring Martin Luther King, Jr.

The message further announced that the House has agreed to the following concurrent resolution, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H. Con. Res. 340. Concurrent resolution to correct technical errors in the enrollment of the bill H.R. 559.

MEASURES REFERRED

The following bills were read the first and second times by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

H.R. 5223. An act to exempt restaurant central kitchens from Federal inspection requirements; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

H.R. 5358. An act to enable honey producers and handlers to finance a nationally coordinated research, promotion, and consumer information program designed to expand their markets for honey; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

H.R. 5541. An act to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to extend certain authorizations of appropriations contained in such act, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

H.R. 5833. An act to improve certain maritime programs of the Department of Transportation and the Department of Commerce; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

MEASURES PLACED ON THE CALENDAR

The Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from the further consideration of the following joint resolutions which were placed on the calendar:

S.J. Res. 272. Joint resolution recognizing the anniversaries of the Warsaw uprising and the Polish resistance to invasion of Poland during World War II; and

S.J. Res 323. Joint resolution designating August 1984 as "Polish American Heritage Month."

The Committee on Foreign Relations was discharged from the further consideration of the following concurrent resolution; which was placed on the calendar:

H. Con. Res. 331. Concurrent resolution to condemn the closing of ABC Color, the only independent newspaper in Paraguay, and to urge the Government of Paraguay to permit the reopening of that newspaper, and to guarantee freedom of the press.

MEASURES HELD AT THE DESK

The following bill was ordered held at the desk until the close of business on July 27, 1984, by unanimous consent:

H.R. 5890. An act to establish a commission to assist in the first observance of the Federal legal holiday honoring Martin Luther King, Jr.

The following concurrent resolution was ordered held at the desk pending further disposition, by unanimous consent:

H. Con. Res. 340. Concurrent resolution to correct technical errors in the enrollment of the bill H.R. 559.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

The Secretary reported that on today, July 26, 1984, he had presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bill:

S. 373. An act to provide for a comprehensive national policy dealing with national research needs and objectives in the Arctic, for a National Critical Materials Council, for development of a continuing and comprehensive national materials policy, for programs necessary to carry out that policy, including Federal programs of advanced materials research and technology, and for innovation in basic materials industries, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS

The following communications were laid before the Senate, together with accompanying papers, reports, and documents, which were referred as indicated:

EC-3587. A communication from the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Army, transmitting, pursuant to law, notice of the intention of the Departments of the Army and Agriculture to interchange jurisdiction of certain Army Corps of Engineers lands and Forest Service lands in Kentucky; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

EC-3588. A communication from the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency transmitting, pursuant to law, the national statistical assessment of rural drinking water conditions; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

By Mr. COCHRAN, from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments:

H.R. 5743: A bill making appropriations for Agriculture, Rural Development, and Related Agencies programs for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 98-566).

By Mr. MATTINGLY, from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments:

H.R. 5898: A bill making appropriations for military construction for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 98-567).

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following executive reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. THURMOND, from the Committee on Armed Services:

Walter T. Cox, III. of South Carolina, to be a Judge of the United States Court of Military Appeals for fifteen years.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, from the Committee on Armed Services, I report favorably the following nominations: Lt. Gen. George M. Browning, Jr., U.S. Air Force (age 55), to be placed on the retired list, Maj. Gen. Casper T. Spangrud, U.S. Air Force, to be lieutenant general, Rear Adm. Thomas E. Flynn, U.S. Navy, to be Judge Advocate General of the Navy, Gen. Wilbur L. Creech, U.S. Air Force (age 57), to be placed on the retired list, and Gen. Jerome F. O'Malley, U.S. Air Force, to be reassigned. I ask that these names be placed on the Executive Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, in addition, in the Air Force there are 35 appointments to the grade of colonel and below (list begins with David E. Ternes), in the Air Force there are 14 appointments to the grade of lieutenant colonel (list begins with Charles E. Cook), in the Army Reserve there are 272 promotions to the grade of colonel and below (list begins with John W. Gaines), and in the Navy and Navy Reserve there are 18 appointments to the grade of captain and below (list begins with Robert K. Yoho). Since these names have already appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and to save the expense of printing again, I ask unanimous consent that they be ordered to lie on the Secretary's desk for the information of any Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so orderd.

(The nominations ordered to lie on the Secretary's desk were printed in the RECORD of June 28 and June 29, 1984 at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. LEAHY:

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. LEAHY:

S. 2869. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide an income tax credit for expenses incurred by an individual taxpayer for the purchase of television subtitle equipment to be used by a hearing-impaired individual; to the Committee on Finance.

(The remarks of Mr. LEAHY and the text of this legislation appear earlier in today's RECORD.)

By Mr. HATCH:

S. 2870. A bill to amend the Higher Education Act of 1965, to establish a financial assistance program emphasizing student self-help, to enhance the equity and effectiveness of Federal programs in support of higher education, to increase flexibility and simplify higher education programs, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

HIGHER EDUCATION AMENDMENTS

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill to authorize needed initiatives included in the President's fiscal year 1985 budget which will encourage student self-help efforts, improve the effectiveness and efficiency of our student aid and other higher education programs, reduce waste and program abuse, and more equitably distribute Federal assistance to disadvantaged students.

In general, the authority for Higher Education Act programs will expire at the end of fiscal year 1985. The Department of Education is not proposing extension of the act at this time. The Secretary is continuing to study the need for long-term legislative changes in these programs, and will forward his proposals for reauthorization of the Higher Education Act at a later date.

Over the past decade, annual Federal appropriations for student assistance programs have increased by $4.6 billion, a 373-percent increase. This increase has, unfortunately, been accompanied by a shift in the traditional responsibility for financing college costs from students and families toward the Federal Government.

At many schools, average student contributions for relatively better off individuals represent only a small share of education costs, and do not begin to reflect actual student earning or borrowing capacities. Excessive reliance on federally supported student financial assistance abuses the spirit of student aid, which should supplement, not replace, other sources of college financing.

STUDENT SELF-HELP INITIATIVE

A major purpose of this legislation is to promote the principle that postsecondary students should be expected to contribute to their own education costs before Federal grant assistance is provided. This policy would be implemented by first, increasing college work-study support by $295 million in fiscal year 1985—representing a potential increase of some 335,000 student jobs; second, making work-study funds more flexible for use in job search and grants where appropriate; third, extending the need test for guaranteed student loans [GSL] to students of all family income levels; and, fourth, restructuring the Pell grant into a Pell self-help grant explicitly designed to supplement family and student contributions. This reformed grant program, in tandem with the federally subsidized work and loan programs, would continue to ensure financial access to moderately priced institutions and would broaden the institutional choice of financially needy students.

STUDENT GRANTS

This bill includes provisions designed to encourage student self-help and to better target Federal grant aid toward students with the greatest need. Under the amended Pell grant program, student awards would become subject to reasonable self-help expectations. The grant amount and self-help expectations would vary with education costs so that needy students interested in attending higher cost schools and willing to undertake greater self-help efforts could receive additional Federal grant assistance.

In place of the current half-cost limit, the Pell self-help grant would be limited to 60 percent of educational costs minus the expected family contribution, with a minimum student self-help expectation of $500. The maximum Pell award would be increased to $3,000. The expected family contribution [EFC] would be taken into account in determining the Pell awards of all students—eliminating an inequity in the current program whereby the EFC's of some students—those affected by the half-cost rule—are ignored.

The combination of Pell self-help and supplemental grant [SEOG] awards would be limited to 60 percent of educational costs or $500, whichever is less, minus the expected family contribution. Also, the receipt of SEOG and Pell awards by a particular student would be generally limited to 4 academic years—restoring a reasonable limit which was repealed in 1980.

WORK-STUDY/COOPERATIVE EDUCATION

The bill would increase to $850 million the 1985 work-study authorization level, and also increase institutional discretion in the use of these funds. While it is expected that the work-study program will be used primarily to finance employment—self-help—opportunities, it is recognized that in special circumstances an institutionally based grant might be required to complete the financial aid package for a needy student. Therefore, participating institutions would be allowed to use up to 50 percent of their work-study funding for making supplemental grants. The institutional allocation provisions would be simplified and made more equitable, with State allotments based solely on relative full-time equivalent enrollment subject to a fiscal year 1984 hold-harmless level. All other hold-harmless provisions would be repealed.

The amount of an institution's work-study funds which may be used to administer a job location and development program would be expanded from $25,000—or 10 percent of the allocation—to $100,000—no percentage limit. Schools would also be authorized to use all or any part of this amount for purposes of administering cooperative education, and/or adult literacy programs. This new approach to Federal support for cooperative education is designed to consolidate funding for federally sponsored student employment programs under a broader and more flexible program—through which institutional and student participation in cooperative education programs may be substantially expanded in light of the funding level we are seeking for work-study.

STUDENT LOANS

The bill includes several important amendments to the Guaranteed Student Loan [GSL] Program. All applicants for regular GSL's would become subject to the need analysis limitation which now applies only to those with adjusted family income above $30,000, thus eliminating loans to those who do not need them and the related Federal subsidy costs while improving equity in student treatment. The less subsidized auxiliary loan component of the GSL Program would remain nonneed based, and could be used to meet expected family contributions derived from need analysis.

The administration is proposing several amendments which are designed to reestablish State cost sharing in meeting the administrative and default costs associated with the GSL Program. All current interest-free Federal loan advances to guarantee agency reserve funds would be returned by October 1, 1985. The two guarantee agency administrative allowances based on new loan volume would be repealed. The agencies would still be allowed to retain up to 30 percent of default collections to help meet administrative costs. Federal reinsurance would be reduced from 100 percent—generally—to 80 percent of default costs. These measures would create new incentives for State level efforts to control GSL default and administrative costs.

This proposal would repeal existing provisions which place various limits on GSL's made and originated by eligible educational institutions. These limitations restrict loan access, impose unreasonable administrative burdens on program participants and have proven to be administratively unworkable. Moreover, they fail to address the main problems caused by origination relationships—the increased likelihood that unsophisticated borrowers will not be made to understand that they are receiving loans, not grants, and that borrowers will refuse to repay their loans if they are dissatisfied with the education they receive. These problems are adequately addressed by current regulations of the Secretary and the Federal Trade Commission and by common law agency principles.

In the National Direct Student Loan [NDSL] Program, Federal cancellation payments to educational institutions related to outstanding loans to individuals in certain occupations would be based only on the original institutional investment. Institutions would not have to reinvest these repayments in the NDSL program as is now required. The NDSL interest rate would be increased from 5 to 8 percent—the current GSL rate—effective for loans made after June 30, 1985. This would establish some degree of equity between NDSL and GSL and increase the flow of funds available for new loans in a reasonable way without new Federal capital appropriations.

This bill also includes several student loan technical and administrative improvement amendments, and it includes amendments designed to make the plus/auxiliary loan program more workable and more attractive to lenders and students.

INSTITUTIONAL AID—DEVELOPING INSTITUTIONS

Title III of the Higher Education Act would be substantially simplified—by merging parts A and B, and reducing eligibility requirements. Greater emphasis would be placed on endowment building and institutional graduation to self-sufficienty. The bill provides for 1- to 5-year nonrenewable strengthening institutions grants which would require institutional matching of 10, 20, and 30 percent for the third years of the award eligibility period. Graduates of this new part A program would be eligible for further title III aid only under the endowments grant—new part B—program. Set-aside provisions for 2-year and historically black institutions—25 percent of the appropriation, and $45.7 million respectively—would be simplified and applied to the entire title.

SPECIAL PROGRAMS FOR THE DISADVANTAGED [TRIO]

The bill includes amendments which simplify these programs, reduce administrative burden, and provide for a more equitable and effective distribution of Federal funds. The very similar talent search and educational opportunity centers programs would be consolidated, and the staff training program would be eliminated. Special services and upward bound grantees could use their awards for the new consolidated program. Special services grantees would be required to share increasingly in the costs of their projects and to graduate from Federal funding for these activities after 5 years. The upward bound institutional participants would be required to provide 10 percent of project costs and the consolidated talent search and assistance program would require institutions to meet 25 percent of costs.

FUND FOR THE IMPROVEMENT OF POSTSECONDARY EDUCATION [FIPSE]

By providing that institutions must meet 50 percent of projects costs, the bill would require a demonstration of institutional commitment and recognize that institutions derive direct benefits from these awards. Currently, institutions meet about 40 percent of project costs. The amendment would allow an estimated 20 additional comprehensive program grants under level funding.

Mr. President, I believe that, if enacted, this higher education legislation would substantially improve the effectiveness of Federal student financial assistance and other higher education programs and would result in a more equitable distribution of limited Federal resources. I ask that the full text of the bill along with a section-by-section analysis of it be included in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill and analysis were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2870

Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Higher Education Amendments of 1984".

TITLE I—INSTITUTIONAL AID NEW CONSOLIDATED PROGRAM

"(b) Any funds made available under this section for grants under part C which are not expended during the fiscal year for which such funds were appropriated shall remain available for expenditure for the purpose of making grants until expended.

"(c) Of the sums appropriated under subsection (a) for the fiscal year 1985, the Secretary shall make available to use for the purpose of this title not less than 25 per centum to institutions that are junior or community colleges.

"(d) The Secretary shall reserve from the funds appropriated for the fiscal year 1985 under this title $45,741,000 for eligible institutions that have historically served substantial numbers of black students.".

TITLE II—STUDENT ASSISTANCE PART A—STUDENT GRANT AMENDMENTS

Subpart 1—Pell Self-Help Grants

NOMENCLATURE AMENDMENTS

SEC. 201. (a) Section 401(a)(1) of the Act is amended by striking out "basic educational opportunity grants (hereinafter referred to as 'basic grants')" and inserting in lieu thereof "Pell Self-Help Grants".

(b) The heading of subpart 1 of part A of title IV of the Act is amended by striking out "BASIC EDUCATIONAL OPPORTUNITY GRANTS" and inserting in lieu thereof "PELL SELF-HELP GRANTS".

(c) The heading immediately before section 411 of the act is amended by striking out "BASIC EDUCATIONAL OPPORTUNITY GRANTS" and inserting in lieu thereof "PELL SELF-HELP GRANTS".

(d) Section 411 of the Act is amended by striking out "basic grant" or "basic grants" each place they appear and inserting in lieu thereof "Pell Self-Help Grant" or "Pell Self-Help Grants", respectively.

(e) Section 411(a)(1)(C) of the Act is amended to read as follows: "(C) Grants made under this subpart shall be known as 'Pell Self-Help Grants'.".

PELL GRANT AWARD RULES

SEC. 202. (a) Section 411 (a)(1) of the Act is amended—

(1) by adding in subparagraph (A) at the end thereof the following: "A student may receive only one Pell Self-Help Grant for an academic year during an award year as defined by the Secretary.";

(2) by striking out subparagraph (B); and

(3) by redesignating subparagraph (C) as subparagraph (B).

(b) Section 411(a)(2) of the Act is amended to read as follows:

"(2)(A) For academic year 1985-1986, the maximum Pell Self-Help Grant for an eligible student shall be $3,000. For each succeeding academic year, the Secretary shall establish the maximum Pell Self-Help Grant amount.

"(B) The amount of a Pell Self-Help Grant which an eligible student may be paid shall not exceed the lesser of—

"(i) the amount determined as the student's cost of attendance under section 413; minus the sum of (I) the amount determined as the student's expected family contribution under section 412 and (II) $500 for academic year 1985-1986, or such amounts as the Secretary shall establish for each succeeding academic year;

"(ii) the amount determined as the student's cost of attendance under section 413, minus the sum of (I) the amount determined as the student's expected family contribution under section 412 and (II) 40 per centum of the amount determined as the student's cost of attendance under section 413;

"(iii)(I) for academic year 1984-1986, the sum of 25 per centum of the amount determined as the student's cost of attendance under section 413 and $1000, minus the amount determined as the student's expected family contribution under section 412; or (II) for each academic year after 1985-1986, the sum of such per centum, as the Secretary shall establish, of the amount determined as the student's cost of attendance under section 413 and such additional amounts as the Secretary may establish, minus the amount determined as the student's expected family contribution under section 412; or

"(iv) the maximum Pell Self-Help Grant, minus the amount determined as the student's expected family contribution under section 412.

"(C) If a student attends an institution of higher education on less than a full-time basis during any academic year, the amount of the Pell Self-Help Grant which that student would otherwise be paid shall be reduced in proportion to the degree to which that student is not attending on a full-time basis, in accordance with a schedule of reductions established by the Secretary. In no event shall the award exceed the amount specified in paragraph (2)(B)(i) and no award shall be made to a student attending an institution on less than a half-time basis.

"(D) No Pell Self-Help Grant shall be awarded to a student if the amount of the grant would be less than $100.".

(c) Section 411(a)(3) of the Act is amended to read as follows:

"(3) The period during which a student may receive Pell Self-Help Grants shall be the period required for the completion of the undergraduate course of study being pursued by that student at the institution at which the student is in attendance. A student who already has a baccalaureate degree shall not receive a Pell Self-Help Grant. The maximum eligibility period may not exceed four academic years unless—

"(A) the student is pursuing a course of study leading to a first degree which is designed by the institution offering it to cover a period of more than four but not more than five academic years;

"(B) the student is, or will be, unable to complete a course of study within four academic years because of a requirement of the institution that the student enroll in a course of study for which no credit is given toward an academic degree, and which is designed to increase the ability of the student to engage in an undergraduate course of study leading to such a degree; or

"(C) the student is, or will be, unable to complete a course of study within four academic years because of exceptional circumstances as determined by the Secretary. In any case in which subparagraph (A), (B), or (C) is applicable, the maximum eligibility period may not exceed five academic years.

(d) Section 411(a) of the Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) For purposes of determining the maximum eligibility period under paragraph (3), part-time enrollment shall be counted as a ratable portion of an academic year.".

FUNDING AMENDMENTS

SEC. 203. Section 411(b) of the Act is amended—

(1) by amending paragraph (3)(B) to read as follows:

"(B)(i) If the funds appropriated for payments under this subpart are insufficient to satisfy fully all entitlements as calculated under subsection (a)(2)(B), the amount paid to each eligible student shall be—

"(I) the full amount for any student whose expected family contribution is $100 or less; or

"(II) a percentage of that payment, as determined in accordance with a schedule of reductions established by the Secretary, for any student whose expected family contribution is more than $100.

"(ii) Any schedule established by the Secretary for the purpose of division (i) shall contain a single linear reduction formula in which the percentage reduction increases uniformly as the payment decreases, and shall provide that if a payment is reduced to less than $100, no payment shall be made.

"(iii) If the funds appropriated under this subpart for any fiscal year are insufficient to satisfy fully payments to students whose expected family contribution is $100 or less, the Secretary is further authorized to reduce payments to such students on an equitable basis, notwithstanding subsection (a)(2)(D).."; and

"(2) Section 411 of the Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this subpart $2,800,000,000 for fiscal year 1985.".

PELL SELF-HELP GRANT NEED ANALYSIS

SEC. 204. Subpart 1 of part A of title IV of the Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"EXPECTED FAMILY CONTRIBUTIONS

"SEC. 412. (a) For the purpose of calculating a Pell Self-Help Grant under this subpart, the Secretary shall publish, in accordance with the notice and comment procedures of section 553 of title 5, United States Code, a schedule of expected family contributions for each academic year. Each schedule of expected family contributions shall contain the amounts, as determined by the Secretary, that a dependent student, his spouse, and his family, or an independent student and his spouse, may reasonably be expected to contribute to the student's postsecondary education for the academic year.

"(b) The Secretary shall base a schedule of expected family contributions on relevant factors which shall include, but not be limited to, the following:

"(1) the adjusted gross income, as defined under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, for the base year as defined by the Secretary, of the student, his spouse, or his parents;

"(2) the Federal income tax paid by the student, his spouse, or his parents in the base year;

"(3) the income of the student, his spouse or his parents in the base year, (A) which is exempt in whole or in part from Federal income tax under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, and (B) which the Secretary determines decreases the student's financial need;

"(4) the number of dependents who would qualify as exemptions of the student, his spouse, or his parents under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 in the base year; and

"(5) the assets, as defined by the Secretary, of the student, his spouse, or his parents in the base year.

"(c) In determining the expected family contribution under this section for any academic year, the Secretary shall establish assessment rates to be applied to a family's discretionary income and assets.

"COST OF ATTENDANCE

"SEC. 413. (a) For the purpose of calculating the amount of a Pell Self-Help Grant under this subpart, the term 'cost of attendance' means the tuition and fees normally assessed a fulltime student at the institution at which the student is in attendance, plus additional amounts for living expenses as may be established by the Secretary.

"(b)(1) For academic year 1985–1986, the living expense allowance for a student not residing with his parents shall not exceed $3,000 and for a student residing with his parents such allowance shall not exceed $1,500.

"(2) For subsequent academic years, the Secretary shall set appropriate limits on living expense allowances.".

Subpart 2—Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants

SUPPLEMENTAL GRANT AWARD RULES

SEC. 205. Section 413B of the Act is amended to read as follows:

"AMOUNT AND DURATION OF GRANTS

"SEC. 413B. (a) Each institution of higher education which receives funds under this subpart shall award supplemental grants to eligible students for each academic year in accordance with the requirements of this section.

"(b)(1) Except with respect to a student who has also received a Pell Self-Help Grant under section 411, the amount awarded as a supplemental grant to any student for an academic year shall be the amount determined by the institution, in accordance with a need analysis system approved by the Secretary, to be needed by such student for pursuing a course of study at the institution, except that such amount shall not exceed $2,000.

"(2) With respect to any student who has also received a Pell Self-Help Grant under section 411, the amount awarded as a supplemental grant to such student for an academic year shall be the amount determined by the institution, in accordance with a need analysis system approved by the Secretary, to be needed by such student for pursuing a course of study at the institution, except that such amount shall not exceed the lesser of—

"(A) $4,500, minus the amount of the student's Pell Self-Help Grant, minus the student's expected family contribution; or

"(B) 60 per centum of the cost of attendance, minus the amount of the student's Pell Self-Help Grant, minus the student's expected family contribution.

"(3) If the amount determined by an institution to be awarded to a student for an academic year is less than $100, no supplemental grant shall be awarded to such student for the academic year.

"(4) For purposes of this subsection, the terms 'expected family contribution' and 'cost of attendance' shall have the same meanings given to such terms under sections 412 and 413.

"(5) For any academic year after 1985–1986, the Secretary is authorized to change the base line figure of $4,500 in paragraph (1)(A) by regulation.

"(c)(1) The period during which a student may receive supplemental grants shall be the period required for the completion of the undergraduate course of study being pursued by that student at the institution at which the student is in attendance. A student who already has a baccalaureate degree shall not receive a supplemental grant. The maximum eligibility period may not exceed four academic years unless—

"(A) the student is pursuing a course of study leading to a first degree which is designed by the institution offering it to extend for a period of more than four but not more than five academic years;

"(B) the student is, or will be, unable to complete a course of study within four academic years because of a requirement of the institution that the student enroll in a course of study for which no credit is given toward an academic degree, and which is designed to increase the ability of the student to engage in an undergraduate course of study leading to such a degree; or

"(C) the student is, or will be, unable to complete a course of study within four academic years because of exceptional circumstances as determined by the Secretary. In any case in which subparagraph (A), (B), or (C) is applicable, the maximum eligibility period may not exceed five academic years.

"(2) For the purposes of determining the maximum eligibility period under paragraph (1), part-time enrollment shall be counted as a ratable portion of an academic year.".

COST SHARING

SEC. 206. Section 413D of the Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) Each institution receiving funds under this section or under section 488 of the Act shall provide matching funds equal to 20 per centum of the amount received under such sections, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary.".

(C) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (6);

(D) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (7) and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and the following: "including a summary of student compensation received and of any activities performed by organizations participating in programs under this section; and";

(E) by redesignating paragraphs (4), (5), (6), and (7) as paragraphs (3), (4), (5), and (6), respectively; and

(F) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(7) provide such fiscal controls and fund accounting procedures as may be necessary to ensure proper and effective expenditure of funds awarded under this section, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary."; and

(4) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c)(1) For academic year 1986-1987 and thereafter, the maximum amount of an institution's allotment under section 446 that may be used for any or all programs authorized by this section shall not exceed one-fifth of the total amount of earnings received by students, through their participation in such programs, during the previous academic year.

"(2) For purposes of calculating the allotment limitations in paragraph (1), the Federal contribution to any earnings received by a student employed under a work-study program and placed in employment through a job location and development program shall be excluded unless the student is employed in an adult literacy program.

"(3) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'earnings' shall mean total gross income received by a student in compensation of services performed in programs authorized by this section.".

CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

SEC. 236. (a) Section 448 of the Act is repealed.

(b) Section 801 of the Act is amended by striking out "1983, 1984, and 1985," each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "1983, and 1984,".

(4) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e)(1) The Secretary is authorized to award grants based on applications submitted by those institutions of higher education which have entered into a program participation agreement with the Secretary under section 487 and which participate in programs authorized by this title, other than this subpart. Applications shall be submitted in the form, manner, and at such time that the Secretary deems appropriate to carry out the purposes of this section.

"(2) Any institution of higher education which, on or before October 1, 1984, had received assistance under this section for three or more years shall not receive additional assistance for a period greater than three years. The amount of any grant awarded to an institution which is subject to this paragraph shall not exceed—

"(A) 75 per centum of the cost of the project during its first year of funding;

"(B) 50 per centum of the cost of the project during its second year of funding; or

"(C) 25 per centum of the cost of the project during its third year of funding.

"(3) Beginning on October 1, 1984, any institution which is not subject to the requirements of paragraph (2) shall not receive assistance awarded under this section for a period greater than five years. The amount of any grant awarded to an institution which is subject to this paragraph shall not exceed—

"(A) 100 per centum of the cost of the project during its first year of funding;

"(B) 90 per centum of the cost of the project during its second year of funding;

"(C) 75 per centum of the cost of the project during its third year of funding;

"(D) 50 per centum of the cost of the project during its fourth year of funding; or

"(E) 25 per centum of the cost of the project during its fifth year of funding.

"(4) For purposes of this subsection, the Secretary shall determine the cost of any project funded under this section.".

REPEALS

SEC. 245. Sections 417E and 417F of the Act are repealed.

PART E—NATIONAL DIRECT STUDENT LOANS

TECHNICAL AND NEED ANALYSIS CHANGES

SEC. 251. (a) Section 462(b)(2) of the Act is amended by striking out in the first sentence "the amount requested in such application." and inserting in lieu thereof "an appropriate amount of funds, taking into account the amount reasonably needed by such applicant as reflected in its application.".

(b) Section 464(b) of the Act is amended by striking out "in accordance with section 482" and inserting in lieu thereof "in accordance with a need analysis system approved by the Secretary".

DEFERMENTS AND INTEREST RATE

SEC. 252. Section 464 of the Act is amended—

(1) in subsection (c)—

(A) by striking out in paragraph (1)(A) "over a period beginning" and everything that follows until the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof "over a ten-year and six-month repayment period which shall begin six months after the month in which the borrower ceases to carry, at an institution of higher education or a comparable institution outside the United States approved by the Secretary for this purpose, at least one-half the normal full-time academic workload, except that such repayment period may begin at an earlier time if requested by the borrower;";

(B) by amending paragraph (1)(D) to read as follows:

"(1)(D) shall provide that a loan made on or after July 1, 1985, shall bear interest, on the unpaid balance of the loan, at the rate of 8 per centum per annum, except that no interest shall accrue (i) prior to the beginning date of repayment determined under clause (A)(i), or (ii) during any period in which repayment is suspended by reason of subsection (e);";

(C) by striking out in paragraph (2)(A) "No repayment of principal" and inserting in lieu thereof "For a loan made on or before July 1, 1985, no repayment of principal"; and

(D) by striking out paragraph (2)(C); and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) No repayment of principal of, or interest on, any loan made on or after July 1, 1985, from a student loan fund assisted under this part shall be required during any periods——

"(1) not in excess of five years in the aggregate, during which the borrower has resumed study, and is carrying at least one-half the normal full-time academic workload, at an institution of higher education or at a comparable institution outside the United States approved by the Secretary for this purpose;

"(2) not less than six months, nor more than three years in the aggregate, during which the borrower is serving as a member of the Armed Forces of the United States;

"(3) not in excess of three years in the aggregate during which the borrower is in service as a volunteer under the Peace Corps Act; or

"(4) not in excess of three years in the aggregate, during which the borrower demonstrates a financial inability to repay any loan principal or interest because of exceptional circumstances which meet criteria established by the Secretary.".

CANCELLATION

SEC. 253. Section 465(b) of the Act is amended to read as follows:

"(b) The Secretary shall pay to each institution for each fiscal year an amount equal to 10 per centum of the aggregate of the amounts of loans from its student loan funds which are cancelled pursuant to this section for such year. Such payments may be used as each institution determines appropriate.".

PART F—GENERAL PROVISIONS AMENDMENTS

DEFINITION OF INDEPENDENT STUDENT

SEC. 261. Section 482 of the Act is amended to read as follows:

"INDEPENDENT STUDENTS

"SEC. 482. (a) For purposes of this title, the term 'independent student' means a student who is determined, pursuant to regulations of the Secretary, to be financially independent of the parents or legal guardians of the student.

"(b)(1) In the case of any student who claims to be independent of his parents or legal guardians in any application for student financial assistance under this title and who has not attained the age of 25 on July 1 of the award year in which such application is made, each parent or guardian of such student shall certify to the Secretary or the eligible institution which such student attends that such student meets the definition of independent student under subsection (a).

"(2) Whenever the Secretary or the eligible institution has reasonable cause to believe that a student is not entitled to be classified as an independent student under this section, each parent or guardian of such student shall submit, upon request, to the Secretary or the eligible institution Federal income tax returns or any other relevant documents that the Secretary or the eligible institution deem necessary to substantiate that such student meets the definition of independent student under subsection (a).

"(3) Whenever, because of exceptional circumstances as determined by the Secretary, the information required by paragraphs (1) and (2) cannot be obtained from each parent or guardian of a student who claims to be independent, such student shall submit to the Secretary or eligible institution an itemized accounting of his financial condition, including a description of how such student previously supported himself at a minimum subsistence level determined by the Secretary.

"(c)(1) Whenever the information required from a parent, a guardian, or a student under subsection (b) has not been submitted or, if submitted, fails to substantiate that such student is an independent student to the Secretary or the eligible institution, such student shall be treated as a dependent student for purposes of any student financial assistance program under this title during the award year for which assistance was sought.

"(2) Whenever the Secretary or the eligible institution determines that the information submitted by a parent, guardian, or student under subsection (b) contains any material false statement or claim regarding such student's claim of independency, such student shall be denied any student financial assistance under this title during the award year for which assistance was sought.".

COMMON FORMS

SEC. 262. Section 483 of the Act is amended—

(1) by striking out subsection (a) and (c); and

(2) by striking out "(b)" in subsection (b).

ELIMINATION AND WAIVER OF INSTITUTIONAL PARTICIPATION REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 263. Section 487 of the Act is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)—

(A) by striking out paragraph (2) and by redesignating paragraphs (3), (4), (5), and (6) as paragraphs (2), (3), (4), and (5), respectively.

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) The Secretary is authorized to waive any requirement of this section with respect to an institution of higher education located outside the United States and organized under the law of a foreign nation.".

TRANSFER OF ALLOTMENT FOR WORK-STUDY AND SUPPLEMENTAL GRANT PROGRAMS

SEC. 264. Section 488 of the Act is amended by striking out the first sentence "10 per centum" and inserting in lieu thereof "50 per centum".

ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES

SEC. 265. Section 489(a) of the Act is amended—

(1) by striking out the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "From the funds appropriated under subpart 1 of part A, the Secretary is authorized to pay each institution which has entered into an agreement under section 487 an amount up to $5 for each student who receives a Pell Self-Help Grant for attendance at that institution. The Secretary may require that an institution use the funds it receives under the preceding sentence to carry out specific activities.";

(2) by striking out the last sentence therein.

TITLE III—CONSTRUCTION, RECONSTRUCTION, AND RENOVATION OF ACADEMIC FACILITIES

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 301. Section 702 of the Act is amended to read as follows:

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 702. (a) There are authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1985 § 18,775,000 to carry out part C, and $14,194,000 to carry out part D.

"(b) None of the sums appropriated pursuant to subsection (a) or otherwise available may be used for commitments for new loans under this title.".

TITLE IV—FUND FOR THE IMPROVEMENT OF POSTSECONDARY EDUCATION

COST SHARING

SEC. 401. Section 1001 of the Act is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a)" immediately before "Subject to the provisions of section 1002,"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) The Secretary shall require a recipient of assistance under this part to pay 50 per centum of the allowable costs incurred by the recipient in carrying out a project assisted under this part.".

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 402. Section 1005 of the Act is amended to read as follows:

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 1005. There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this title $11,710,000 for the fiscal year 1985.".

TECHNICAL AMENDMENT

SEC. 403. Section 1001, 1002, and 1004(b) of the Act are amended by striking out "contracts" and "contract" each place they appear and inserting in lieu thereof "cooperative agreements" and "cooperative agreement", respectively.

TITLE V—EFFECTIVE DATES

EFFECTIVE DATE PROVISIONS

SEC. 501. (a) The amendments made by titles I, III, and IV, and by part D of title II of this Act shall take effect on October 1, 1984.

(b) The amendments made by parts A, C, E, and F of title II of this Act shall take effect on July 1, 1985.

(c)(1) Except as provided in paragraphs (2) and (3), the amendments made by part B of title II of this Act (regarding the Guaranteed Student Loan Program) shall take effect on July 1, 1984 or 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, whichever is later, and shall apply to loans made to cover the cost of attendance for any period of enrollment beginning on or after such effective date. Any provisions repealed by such amendments shall continue to apply to loans made to cover the cost of attendance for any period of enrollment beginning prior to such effective date.

(2) The amendments made by section 216 of this Act shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act and shall apply to all advances, whenever made.

(3) The amendments made by sections 221(3) and 222 of this Act shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act and shall apply to all loans, whenever made.

HIGHER EDUCATION ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1984

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

TITLE I—INSTITUTIONAL AID

PART A—STRENGTHENING INSTITUTIONS

Section 101. Section 101 of the bill would repeal the program which authorizes Aid to Institutions with Special Needs under part B of title III (Institutional Aid) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 ("the Act"; 20 U.S.C. 1001 et seq.). Part B of title III which would no longer be maintained as a separate program of institutional aid under the consolidation proposal in this bill. For purposes of simplification, activities currently funded under the part A Strengthening Institutions program and part B would be supported under an expanded part A program, which would retain the title of Strengthening Institutions. A single program would be less confusing to applicants, less costly to administer, and would reduce regulatory burden and related costs.

Section 102. Section 102 of the bill would add to the statement of purpose for the proposed consolidated part A program the goal of helping institutions meet their special needs, the purpose of part B which would be repealed.

Section 103. Section 103 of the bill would make certain changes to the definitions in section 312 of the Act for new part A. Principally, the definition of "eligible institution" would be amended by (1) deleting the requirement that the average amount of Pell Grants (awarded under subpart 1 of part A of title IV of the Act) received by students at eligible institutions is higher in comparison with the average amount of Pell Grants awarded at comparable institutions, (2) eliminating the requirement that average expenditure calculations be limited to the number of undergraduate students, and (3) adding, as eligibility factors, items from part B of the Act. These amendments would be made to focus assistance on institutions serving the most disadvantaged students.

Section 104. Section 104 of the bill would provide that the duration of a grant to an eligible institution under amended part A not exceed five years. Under current law, certain grants for part A are for not more than three years, while others are for between four and seven years. For current part B, five years is the maximum limit. One grant limit would simplify the award process and reduce the need for annual regulations. The bill would continue to provide for one-year planning grants, with the new requirement that only one such grant be awarded to an institution.

Section 105. Section 105 of the bill would incorporate the Federal cost sharing provisions from part B of the current law into amended part A. The Federal share for the cost of grants to eligible institutions would be 100 percent for the first two years of a grant, decreasing to 70 percent in the fifth year. This section would also provide for phasing out grants under parts A and B of current law. The Secretary would be authorized to make continuation awards under current part A for not more than a total of seven years and under part B for not more than a total of five years to recipients awarded multi-year grants prior to October 1, 1984. These limits are the maximum grant periods for each part under the current statute. Furthermore, an institution which received a grant for the maximum period of seven or five years, as appropriate, would not be eligible for a new grant under amended part A of title III.

PART B—CHALLENGE GRANTS TRANSITION

Section 106. Section 106 of the bill would redesignate part B of title III (which was repealed in section 101 of this bill) as "Challenge Grant Transition Awards." The Challenge Grant program, currently authorized under part C of title III, would be phased out over several years.

Section 107. Section 107 of the bill would repeal sections 331 and 332 of the current Challenge Grant program which would be unnecessary due to the proposed elimination of the program.

Section 108. Section 108 of the bill would provide for continuation awards for multi-year Challenge Grants until the end of fiscal year 1988. The Secretary would be authorized to make continuation awards to eligible institutions under the Challenge Grant program as in effect on September 30, 1984, provided that the institution received a multi-year grant prior to October 1, 1984. The maximum total grant period would be five years.

PART C—ENDOWMENT GRANTS

Section 109. Section 109 of the bill would redesignate part C as "Endowment Grants." The authority to carry out the Endowment Grant program is currently in section 333 of the Act.

Section 110. Section 110 of the bill would make certain conforming amendments to section 333 of the Act which are necessary as a result of the repeal of part B of the Act and the changes to the Challenge Grant program.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

Section 111. Section 111 of the bill would make conforming amendments to part D of title III—General Provisions, required as a result of other amendments in this bill. In addition, this section would make several minor amendments to improve the operation of programs under title III of the Act. For example, the June 30th notification date by which the Secretary must inform each applicant institution of its scores and recommendation of the evaluation panel and the reasons for decisions by the Secretary in awarding grants under title III has been made more flexible. The Secretarty would continue to provide timely notice to applicants of this important information without being held to an inflexible statutory deadline.

Section 112. Section 112 of the bill would amend the authorization of appropriation language in section 347 for title III. The authorization provisions would be significantly simplified and would be applicable to fiscal year 1985 only. Only the following restrictions would be placed on the fiscal year 1985 appropriation: (1) Endowment Grant funds not expended in fiscal year 1985 would remain available until expended; (2) a 25 percent set-aside would be required for junior and community colleges; and (3) $45,741,000 would be reserved for eligible institutions which have historically served substantial numbers of black students. While current law does not provide carryover authority for the Endowment Grant program, it does provide special set-asides for junior and community colleges and historically black colleges and universities. In the latter case, a "hold harmless" provision based on fiscal year 1979 funding is provided under current law rather than a specific dollar amount, as proposed.

TITLE II—STUDENT ASSISTANCE

PART A—STUDENT GRANT AMENDMENTS

Subpart 1—Pell self-help grants

Section 201. Section 201 of the bill would make a number of nomenclature changes to the current Pell Grant program. Essentially, these changes would direct that student grants under the program be classified as "Pell Self-Help Grants." This change would emphasize that students receiving the benefits of the program are expected to share in the responsibility of financing the cost of a postsecondary education.

Section 202. Section 202 of the bill would provide for a number of operational changes in delivering, awarding, and computing payments to students who receive Pell Self-Help Grants. As described more fully below, these changes are designed to improve the operations of the program and provide a more equitable basis in distributing awards to students under the program. More importantly, section 202 places a minimum self-help requirement on all students wishing to receive the benefits of the program.

Subsection (a) would mandate that students could only receive one Pell Self-Help Grant during an academic/award year. The Department of Education possesses evidence that students may be receiving more than one grant per academic/award year, a practice not prohibited by the current law.

Subsection (b) would extensively modify the current method of calculating the amounts of financial assistance that students receive under the program. Among other things, these modifications would increase the maximum grant award level from $1,900 to $3,000 in academic year 1985-86; would mandate, in calculating the amount awarded to students, a minimum student self-help contribution to their educational expenses of 40 percent of such expenses or $500, whichever is greater; would control the number of years during which a student may receive grants under the program to 4 years, in general; and would prohibit students from receiving additional grants after they have completed a baccalaureate degree—a prohibition not included under current law.

Section 203. Section 203 of the bill would provide for several funding and award calculation changes. This section modifies the language of the linear reduction formula which was enacted as part of the Student Financial Assistance Technical Amendments of 1982, Pub. L. No. 97-301, 96 Stat. 1400. The current formula provides that in the event funds appropriated are insufficient in any given year to pay for all grants to students, then the most financially hard-pressed students (the so-called "hold-harmless" class of students) would not have their awards reduced; however, other students would, under the formula, have their awards progressively reduced depending on their financial status. The modification proposed would effect a technical change in the formula so that the hold-harmless class of students would also have their awards reduced in the event of very low appropriations.

This section also establishes a $2.8 billion limitation on Pell Self-Help Grant appropriations for fiscal year 1985 for consistency with the President's 1985 budget request for this program.

Section 204. Section 204 of the bill would add two new sections to the Higher Education Act for purposes of simplifying awarding of Pell Self-Help Grants.

New section 412 would simplify and improve the criteria of student need (commonly stated as the "need analysis system") for determining the student's award under the restructured Pell Self-Help Grant program by moving the need analysis criteria from the General Provisions part of title IV of the current law to the subpart authorizing the program.

New section 413 would simplify and improve the current need analysis system for the Pell Self-Help Grant program by (1) moving the "cost of attendance" provisions from the General Provisions part of title IV of the current law to the subpart authorizing the program, and (2) authorizing the Secretary to set an appropriate, uniform limit on a student's indirect costs of attendance allowable for computing Pell Self-Help Grant entitlement levels. This allowance would be in addition to actual tuition and fees. Under currently applicable legislation, an indirect cost allowance of $1,500 (including $400 for travel, books, and supplies) is used for all students residing off-campus. Under the proposed new authority, a $3,000 indirect cost allowance (for 1985-86) for all students other than those residing with their parents would be established. For students residing with their parents, the indirect cost allowance could remain at $1,500. (Again, this allowance would cover travel, books, and supplies in addition to basic living costs.) This more standardized approach would result in a more equitable distribution of awards.

While this bill would eliminate the current statutory deadlines for publication of Pell Grant family contribution schedule regulations, the Secretary intends to publish these schedules at approximately the same times during the year as now required.

Subpart 2—Supplemental educational opportunity grants

Section 205. Section 205 of the bill would extensively modify the terms, conditions, and award levels of grants under the SEOG program. With respect to award levels, section 205 mandates in calculating the amount of a SEOG award to a student, that Pell Self-Help Grants awarded to students be taken into account. "Supplemental Grants", as the name itself suggests, would operate as a supplement to Pell Self-Help Grants when a student has received the latter type of assistance. Thus, under section 205 the amount a student could receive as a supplemental award would be limited in such a way that the combination of Pell Self-Help and Supplemental Grant awards, together with a student's expected family contribution, could not exceed the lesser of $4,500 or 60 percent of the cost of that student's attendance at a postsecondary institution. For the student who has not received a Pell Self-Help Grant, the current award rule of limiting the amount of a supplemental grant to $2,000 or less would be preserved. With respect to terms and conditions of supplemental grants, the same reform measures proposed for the Pell Self-Help Grant program are also proposed for the SEOG program, e.g. durational limitations for receiving grants.

Section 206. Section 206 of the bill would require institutional matching of any funds allocated for this campus-based program on the same (80/20) matching basis for the Work-Study program. In addition, if funds are transferred from an institutions Work-Study allotment to its SEOG program, such funds would be subject to the 20 percent matching requirement.

As will be discussed under Section 264 of the bill, greater discretion over using funds allocated under these two campus-based programs would be provided to institutions.

Section 207. Section 207 of the bill would repeal a number of statutory provisions under the Student Financial Assistance Technical Amendments of 1982, P.L. 97-301, 96 Stat. 1400-1401, as amended by the Student Loan Consolidation and Technical Amendments Act of 1983, P.L. 98-79, 97 Stat. 479. These provisions are not consistent with the amendments proposed by this bill.

Subpart 3—State student incentive grants

Section 208. Section 208 of the bill would eliminate a maintenance of effort condition. This condition is burdensome on participating States and schools, and it is not necessary as a means of assuring substantial State-level financial contributions—this concern is adequately met by the 50/50 State matching requirement.

PART B—GUARANTEED STUDENT LOAN PROGRAM

Section 211. Section 211 of the bill would change the heading for part B of title IV of the Act from "Federal, State, and Private Programs of Low-Interest Insured Loans to Students in Institutions of Higher Education" to "Guaranteed Student Loan Program." This new title for the program is commonly used in the higher education community and is less cumbersome than the current statutory heading.

Section 212. Section 212 of the bill would require borrowers at all family income levels to demonstrate need for a loan under a need analysis system prescribed in regulations. The Secretary would publish, in accordance with notice and comment procedures prescribed in the Administrative Procedures Act (5 U.S.C. § 553), a schedule of expected family contributions for each academic year. Under current law, only borrowers with adjusted gross family income in excess of $30,000 must complete need analysis. This change would apply only to regular loans under the Guaranteed Student Loan (GSL) program, and not to loans made under the Auxiliary Loan component of the program authorized under section 428B of the Act. These amendments are intended to curtail unnecessary borrowing and to improve equity in student treatment, and to lower, somewhat, related Federal subsidy costs.

Section 213. Section 213 of the bill would modify the conditions under which statutory deferments of repayment would be provided for loans made on or after the effective date of this section. Current law provides twelve categorical deferments during which time principal need not be repaid by the borrower, and interest is paid by the Government. For new loans under the Federal Insured Student Loan (FISL, under section 427), the regular GSL program (under section 428), and the Auxiliary Loan program (PLUS, under section 428B) only four categorical deferments would be provided as follows:

(1) not in excess of five years, during which the borrower has resumed at least half-time study at an eligible institution;

(2) not less than six months, nor more than three years, during which the borrower is serving as a member of the Armed Forces of the United States;

(3) not in excess of three years during which the borrower is in service as a volunteer under the Peace Corps Act; or

(4) not in excess of three years during which the borrower demonstrates financial inability to repay the loan because of certain exceptional circumstances approved by the Secretary.

Existing deferment provisions are costly, complicated, difficult to administer, and are not necessarily related to financial hardship of the borrower. Under the amendments, many individuals who would qualify for a statutory deferment under current law would still be permitted to delay repayment on account of financial hardship. The provisions of the existing law tend to deter participation of lending institutions, particularly in the Auxiliary Loan program. Currently, borrowers may abuse the wide range of deferments causing expensive increases in Federal subsidy costs. These amendments would result in greater cost-effectiveness with additional administrative flexibility. Similar amendments are proposed in section 252 of the bill for deferments under the National Direct Student Loan program authorized under part E of title IV of the Act.

Section 214. Section 214 of the bill would provide that need analysis for students attending foreign schools would be made by the Secretary for FISL loans and by the guarantee agency for regular GSDL loans. Need analysis for students at foreign schools must be completed by those schools under current law. The amendment would eliminate the administrative burden on foreign schools which has impeded the availability of loans to eligible students attending schools abroad.

Section 215. Section 215 of the bill would clarify eligibility for maximum loan limits based on undergraduate student status. Current law provides $2,500 maximum loan limits per academic year and $12,500 in the aggregate for a student "who has not successfully program of undergraduate education." The amendments in this section would provide for undergraduate student status to be defined in regulations of the Secretary.

Section 216. Section 216 of the bill would require repayment of all Federal advances to guarantee reserve funds by October 1, 1985. Currently, about $100 million in "advances" (zero interest indefinite maturity Federal loans) are held by State and private nonprofit guarantee agencies. These funds and their investment earnings are one of the many sources of Federal support which allow these agencies to operate at no cost to the State. Retention of these advances is inconsistent with the proposed restoration of GSL cost-sharing between the States and the Federal Government. This section provides that repayments on the advances would be deposited in the student loan insurance fund established under section 431 of the Higher Education Act, thus reducing the need for new GSL appropriations. Currently, recoveries on certain older advances are deposited in the Treasury and do not reduce GSL costs.

Section 217. Section 217 of the bill would restore the flat 80 percent Federal reinsurance system which existed prior to 1976. Currently, guarantee agencies pay default claims filed by lenders and are then reimbursed for 100 percent of principal and interest by the Education Department. (One agency has chosen to remain at 80 percent reinsurance.) This section would restore the requirement that guarantee agencies meet 20 percent of all default costs (via State appropriations or otherwise). In addition to directly reducing Federal costs, this would encourage the State level guarantee agencies to require greater collection diligence on the part of lenders and to take other actions to reduce the incidence of default. This section would also repeal certain guarantee agency "reinsurance trigger" and FISL "insurance trigger" provisions of current law which are administratively cumbersome as well as ineffectual and inequitable.

Section 218. Section 218 of the bill would establish nationwide uniformity in certain important guarantee agency policies. All of the current policy requirements for 100 percent reinsurance would become conditions of the proposed flat 80 percent guarantee agency reinsurance agreement. For example, all guarantee agencies would be required to provide GSL insurance for both in-state residents attending school out-of-state and for out-of-state residents attending school within the State served by the agency; and all guarantee agencies would be required to provide loan limits identical to those available under the direct Federal insurance (FISL) component of GSL program ($2,500 per year for undergraduates, $5,000 for graduate students). In addition, all guarantee agencies would be required to provide insurance for all categories of eligible lenders established under section 435(g)(1) of the Higher Education Act.

Section 219. Section 219 of the bill would repeal the current authority for lenders making loans in multiple installments to receive interest benefit and special allowance payments based on the anticipated full loan amount for an academic year even though only a portion has been disbursed. Section 219(b) would repeal the current provision authorizing guarantee agencies to act as multiple disbursement "escrow agents," whereby the lender receives interest benefit and special allowance payments based on the annual loan amount and the guarantee agency is allowed to invest and retain "float" earnings on undisbursed loan amounts. In both cases, the Federal taxpayer should not be paying interest on funds which have not been disbursed to borrowers. Lenders, and guarantee agencies acting as their agents, would still be allowed to disburse GSLs in multiple installments. They would simply not be given an extra interest incentive for doing so.

Section 220. Section 220 of the bill would repeal several current provisions which impose administrative requirements and loan limitations on GSL loans which are made or "originated" by educational institutions. Currently, such loans may not be made to more than 50 percent of a school's undergraduates at one time; borrowers of such loan must obtain commerical lender refusal statements; such loans to freshmen may not exceed 50 percent of educational costs and may not exceed $1,500 unless disbursed under certain multiple disbursement rules. Repeal of these current legislative provisions would result in program simplification, elimination of unnecessary administrative burden, and improvement in loan access. Moreover, these provisions fail to address the main problems caused by "origination" relationships—the increased likelihood that unsophisticated borrowers will refuse to repay their loans if they are dissatisfied with the education they receive. This problem is adequately addressed by current regulations of the Secretary and the Federal Trade Commission and by common law agency principles.

Section 221. Section 221 of the bill would clarify the GSL lender eligibility of Rural Rehabilitation Corporations, and successor agencies, a category of participating lender. Their status has been made uncertain by changes over the last few years in section 434(g)(1) of the Higher Education Act. This section of the bill would also clarify the eligibility of State and Federal agencies to hold GSL notes as "assignees" of initial lenders. This change is necessary to clarify the ability of such agencies to assume ownership of GSL notes in cases of lender bankruptcy or reorganization by a State or Federal banking insurance agency.

Section 222. Section 222 of the bill would clarify the Secretary's authority to delegate any of his functions to officials and staff of the Department's regional offices. Numerous functions such as review of lenders, educational institutions, and guarantee agencies are more appropriately and cost-effectively handled by the regional offices.

Section 223. Section 223 of the bill would make a conforming amendment to eliminate disparate treatment under the Auxiliary Loan program of schools which use commissioned saleman to promote the availability of loans. Schools using commissioned salemen would be probibited from participating in either the regular GSL or Auxiliary Loan program.

Section 224. Section 224(a) of the bill would broaden eligibility for the Auxiliary Loan (PLUS) program authorized under section 428B of the Act to include parents and spouses of graduate students.

Auxiliary Loan eligibility is limited under current law to graduate and professional students, independent undergraduates, and parents of dependent undergraduate students. The current eligibility rules for undergraduates and their parents would not be changed. The proposed amendments would enhance the attractiveness and growth of this lower cost component of the GSL program by broadening the opportunity for borrowing under the Auxiliary Loan program.

Under the proposed changes, section 224(b) would provide that all borrowers would be limited to borrowing $3,000 per academic year, $15,000 in the aggregate, for a student. For example, if parents and the spouse of a graduate student were to borrow under the program, their combined loans would be limited to $3,000 per year for the student.

In addition, section 224(c) would provide for an initial in-school deferment of repayment of the principal of the loan for student borrowers until six months after the student ceases at least half-time enrollment at an eligible institution. Current law provides for deferment of repayment of principal for independent and graduate students as long as the student is enrolled full-time at an eligible institution. Loan principal, as well as interest, must be repaid if the student is enrolled less than full-time. Under the amendment, interest would continue to accrue and be payable regardless of enrollment status of the student. This amendment is designed to provide equity in student treatment, reduce the number of defaults on in-school principal repayments, and improve lender and borrower response to the Auxiliary Loan program.

Section 224(c)(3) would add new authority for lenders to charge up to $25 per loan (which may be deducted from the amount of the loan) to parent or spouse borrowers to defray the cost of verifying the creditworthiness of the borrower. While lenders may use, and guarantee agencies may require credit checks at present, no provision is made in current law for a fee to be charged.

Finally, this section would increase the maximum repayment period and change the method for its calculation for parents and spouses under the program. A ten-year repayment period is the limit placed on each loan made under the current program. The amendment would authorize lenders to provide a new ten-year repayment period each time a new loan is taken out and provide for repayment of loans under a single repayment schedule, provided that the total period not exceed 20 years from the date of the first included loan.

Section 225. Section 225 of the bill would clarify that a purpose of part B of title IV of the Act is to encourage participation in the Auxiliary Loan program.

Section 226. Section 226 of the bill would provide new authority for direct Federal insurance of Auxiliary Loans for lenders which do not have access to a single guarantee agency program for substantially all of the loans the lender intends to make under the program. This amendment would enable certain regional and nationwide lenders to offer Auxiliary Loans if no guarantee agency were available.

PART C—WORK-STUDY PROGRAM

Section 231. Section 231 of the bill would increase the authorization of appropriations for the Work-Study program from $830 million to $850 million in fiscal year 1985. The Department has requested an appropriation for this increased amount, which if approved and enacted would represent a 53 percent increase in funding over fiscal year 1984's funding of $555 million. This increased amount is necessary to support the wider range of discretionary activities that would be authorized by this bill for the Work-Study program and would ensure that students have employment-based assistance to meet self-help contributions to finance their postsecondary education.

Section 232. Section 232 of the bill would streamline the mechanics and distribution of Work-Study funds to institutions. This section, among other things, would eliminate maintenance of effort conditions, which are burdensome to institutions and no longer serve any meaningful utility, revise hold-harmless conditions with respect to apportionment of funds to States, and mandate a $2 million set-aside to certain territories.

Section 233. Section 233 of the bill would add a technical amendment which directs that determinations by institutions of the level of Work-Study assistance to students be done under a need analysis system approved by the Secretary, as is the case under currently applicable law. This condition is also proposed for the other campus-based (National Direct Student Loan and SEOG) programs.

Section 234. Section 234 of the bill would restore the eligibility of "area vocational schools" to participate in the Work-Study program. These schools were eligible to participate during the inception of the Work-Study program until the Education Amendments of 1980, which comprehensively revised the Higher Education Act of 1965. The omission of these schools in the 1980 Amendments was evidently inadvertent.

Section 235. Section 235 of the bill would greatly expand institutional flexibility in providing student employment opportunities funded under Work-Study programs. This section would increase the amount of Work-Study funds that an institution may expend on a Job Location and Development program for its students from the current maximum allotment of $25,000 to $100,000. This maximum amount could be used, as proposed under this section, for certain Cooperative Education or adult literacy activities, in addition to Job Location and Development activities. The authorization for Cooperative Education activities under the current Job Location Development program is intended to maximize the Impact of Federal funds for students who wish to receive employment-based, subsidized Federal financial assistance. The programs of Cooperative Education and Job Location and Development in essence would be telescoped under one funding scheme and would benefit by centralization of management over both programs. As discussed more fully below, the bill also proposes eliminating separate Cooperative Education programs funded under title VIII of the Higher Education Act of 1965.

Further, a new major activity would also be authorized with the maximum $100,000 allotment to institutions under the Work-Study program: institutions could establish adult literacy programs with such funds. Once these programs are in place at an institution students could receive Work-Study assistance to tutor adult illiterates. With such programs, a major step in eliminating adult illiteracy in this Nation might be achieved. College students, particularly those who wish to become elementary or secondary education teachers, would be ideal tutors for large segments of the adult illiteracy population.

Finally, the activities conducted by an institution with the maximum $100,000 allotment and the success the institution has had in affording students with employment-based, non-subsidized income would affect the amount of future allotments to an institution. Basically, this section of the bill would base the amount of a future allotment to an institution on its past performance. Institutions which have a successful program, based on past earnings of their students, would be entitled to the maximum $100,000 allotment in most cases.

Section 236. Section 236 of the bill would make two conforming amendments. Subsection (a) would repeal section 448 of the Higher Education Act of 1965, which (in connection with a separate administrative allowance) specifically authorizes the use of Work-Study for Community service-learning. Because institutions would be free to use Work-Study funds to promote "community service-learning" activities in various ways under these amendments (and are specifically encouraged to do so in regard to adult literacy training), both this provision and the current separate administrative allowance for Community service-learning Work-Study are unnecessary.

Subsection (b) would eliminate the authorization of appropriations for Cooperative Education programs under title VIII of the Act for fiscal year 1985. Because Cooperative Education activities would be funded through Work-Study funds to institutions, a separate authorization for such activities is not necessary.

PART D—SPECIAL PROGRAMS FOR THE DISADVANTAGED

Section 241. Section 241 of the bill would make a number of technical and conforming changes to section 417A of the Higher Education Act of 1965, the general statutory authority for the special programs. Most of these changes are necessary because of other amendments proposed for the five special programs for students from disadvantaged backgrounds authorized under title IV of the Act. Major amendments are proposed to improve and simplify the operations of the Talent Search, Upward Bound, and Special Services programs (collectively known as the TRIO programs). Services or activities provided under two other programs—Educational Opportunity Centers and Staff Developments Activities—would, under the bill, be phased-out or authorized under one or more of the TRIO programs.

Section 242. Section 242 of the bill proposes to consolidate the current Talent Search and Educational Opportunity Centers programs. This consolidation of activities or projects under these programs is symbolized by the new title proposed for this consolidated program: TALENT SEARCH AND ASSISTANCE. Consolidation is appropriate and desirable because it would eliminate duplication of services under the current programs which are similar in scope, would simplify application process and reporting burdens, and would ultimately effect a reduction in administrative costs borne by potential and actual grantees. In consolidating these programs, none of the current activities under each of these programs would be eliminated.

A second major thrust is to specify that the benefits of this consolidated program are available to students who are physically handicapped. The special population of physically handicapped students who wish to pursue a postsecondary education has seldom been given adequate attention in Federal postsecondary education assistance programs. Along with similar amendments to the remaining TRIO programs, physically handicapped students would be added as explicit beneficiaries of all the TRIO programs.

Finally, several new conditions are proposed for improving the manner in which institutions operate Talent Search and Assistance projects. First, grantees would be required to design a project in a geographical area where there is a substantial concentration of low-income or physically handicapped persons—the target populations of the program. Second, projects could not be duplicative of other services under the other TRIO programs and an applicant for a Talent Search and Assistance grant would have to demonstrate that it would not be duplicating such services. Third, consortia of eligible institutions would be able receive a grant under the program. Fourth, and finally, each recipient of a grant under the program would share in the overall cost of the project it carries out. To insure a satisfactory institutional commitment to projects, grantees would be required to finance 25 percent of the cost of any project.

Section 243. Section 243 of the bill would make several operational changes to the Upward Bound program. For example, physically handicapped students would also be beneficiaries of the program. Consortia of eligible institutions are proposed to be eligible grantees and each grantee would be required to finance 10 percent of the cost of any Upward Bound Project.

Section 244. Section 244 of the bill would make amendments to the Special Service program similar to those proposed for the Talent Search and Upward Bound programs. As physically handicapped students are under current law specified as beneficiaries of the Special Service program no change is proposed in their area. However, section 244 proposes that a number of funding conditions be imposed on grantee. These conditions would operate to phase-out gradually, Federal funding of Special Services projects for institutions which have previously received grants. Briefly stated, institutions which previously received Special Services grants for three or more years before October 1, 1984 would only receive additional Federal assistance up to three years with requirements that they match a percentage of the Federal assistance. For all other institutions, a five year maximum period of entitlement would be established with additional requirements that for four of those years they match a certain percentage of the Federal assistance. These conditions would ensure greater institutional commitment to Special Service projects—eventually resulting in institutional "graduation" away from Federal support for these activities. This would allow additional institutions to benefit from the limited Federal funds available for stimulation of institutional support for such student support services.

Section 245. Section 245 of the bill would repeal the authority for the Educational Opportunity Centers and Staff Development Activities programs. The Educational Opportunity Centers program would, under other amendments made by this bill, be consolidated as part of the new Talent Search and Assistance program. The authority for Staff Development Activities program would also be repealed. However, staff development activities could still be funded as part of Special Services projects.

PART E—NATIONAL DIRECT STUDENT LOANS

Section 251. Section 251 of the bill would make a few technical changes to statutory provisions governing applications from institutions and the need analysis calculation of loan amounts to students.

Section 252. Section 252 of the bill would modify the extent to which students may have loans under the National Direct Student Loan program deferred. These modifications are substantially similar to the deferment changes proposed for the Guaranteed Student Loan program under section 213 of the bill. Additionally, section 252 would provide that loans made on or after July 1, 1985 bear an interest rate of 8 percent (the GSL program interest rate). This would improve equity between the two need-based student loan programs, and it would improve the flow of funds available for new loans.

Section 253. Section 253 of the bill would decrease the Federal payments due to an institution on account of a loan cancellation from 100 to 10 percent of the amount cancelled. This 10 percent is equivalent to the amount the institution originally contributed to the loan. Each institution would be free to determine the appropriate use of these funds, instead of being required to use all returned funds for purposes of the NDSL program as is the case under current law.

PART F—GENERAL PROVISIONS AMENDMENTS

Section 261. Section 261 of the bill would substantially revise section 482 of the Higher Education Act of 1965. Current criteria for expected family contribution and cost of attendance in section 482 of the Act, both of which seldom operated because of superseding statutory enactments, would be eliminated. As is the case under currently applicable law, section 261 and other sections of the bill would separate the need analysis system of the Pell Self-Help Grant program (as proposed) from the systems used for the campus-based programs.

Section 482 of the Act, as proposed for revision by section 261 of the bill would solely contain authority for the Secretary to define what constitutes an "independent student" and would provide for verification and reporting requirements for determining the veracity of claims by students that they are independent students and, thus, entitled in most cases, to more generous Federal student financial assistance than other students who receive parental financial support. The Department has found that there is substantial program abuse by students falsely claiming independent student status. The verification and reporting requirements proposed would provide the Department and institutions of higher education, which perform a surrogate's role in administering the Federal campus-based programs, substantial authority to detect unfounded claims by students of their independent student status. Section 261 also proposes to provide a sanction against students who lie about their independency; such a student would be denied all forms of Higher Education Act student financial assistance during the academic year for which he lied about his independency. Students who receive financial aid and are subsequently found to have done so on such a fraudulent basis would be required to repay the assistance provided plus interest. This sanction would be in addition to the otherwise applicable civil and crimminal penalties for such misrepresentation.

Section 262. Section 262 of the bill would eliminate requirements that the Secretary develop a common Federal financial aid application form for the Pell Self-Help Grant (as proposed) and campus-based programs. These provisions under current law are inconsistent with the proposed continuation of the separtion of the need analysis systems for these programs.

Section 263. Section 263 of the bill would eliminate certain maintenance of effort requirements and authorize the Secretary to waive certain title IV participation requirements with respect to foreign schools, many of which are not authorized under their foreign laws to execute such agreements with another soveriegn power.

Section 264. Section 264 of the bill would authorize institutions participating in both the Work-Study and SEOG programs to transfer up to 50 percent of their Work-Study funds to their SEOG program. An institution would, thus, have discretion to use Work-Study funds for making SEOG awards.

Section 265. Section 265 of the bill would modify the current administrative expense allowances for institutions participating in the Pell Self-Help Grant program (as proposed). In addition, for reasons discussed earlier, funding provisions for the Community service-learning projects, which are currently authorized as part of the Work-Study program, would be eliminated. Community service-learning projects would be eliminated under section 236 of the bill.

TITLE III—CONSTRUCTION, RECONSTRUCTION, AND RENOVATION OF COLLEGE AND UNIVERSITY FACILITIES

Section 301. Section 301 of the bill would authorize to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1985 $18,775,000 to carry out the academic facilities annual interest grant program, and $14,194,000 to make payments to the Treasury out of the academic and facilities revolving fund. Section 301 would also prohibit the use of appropriations or other available funds for new loan commitments. These provisions would support the President's 1985 budget.

TITLE IV—FUND FOR THE IMPROVEMENT OF POSTSECONDARY EDUCATION

Section 401. Section 401 of the bill would amend the administrative provisions for the Fund for the Improvement of Postsecondary Education (FIPSE) by mandating that the Secretary require grantees to provide a matching share of 50 percent of project costs.

Section 402. Section 402 of the bill would authorize $11,710,000 to be appropriated for FIPSE for the fiscal year 1985.

Section 403. Section 403 of the bill would make a technical amendment to the Act by allowing the Secretary to enter into cooperative agreements (rather than contracts) with educational institutions. This change in terminology brings the FIPSE provisions into accord with the Federal Grant and Cooperative Agreement Act, which defines "contract" as an award instrument used for improvement, rather than assistance, purposes.

TITLE V—EFFECTIVE DATES

Section 501. Section 501 of the bill would provide for effective dates for the amendments made by this bill as folows:

(a) amendments made for Institutional Aid (title I), Academic Facilities (title III), FIPSE (title IV), and TRIO (part D of title II) would be effective October 1, 1984;

(b) amendments made for the Pell Self-Help (part A), Work-Study (part C), TRIO (part D), NDSL (part E) and general provisions for student aid programs (part F of title II) would be effective July 1, 1985; and

(c) most amendments for the GSL program (part B of title II) would be effective July 1, 1984 or 90 days after enactment of this Act, whichever is later, and shall apply to loans made to cover the cost of attendance for any period of enrollment beginning on or after such effective date.

By Mr. HATCH:

S. 2871. A bill to improve the operation of the chapter 1 program authorized under the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981, to improve the effectiveness of migrant education and programs, to provide for the use of the most recent decennial census information, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

CHAPTER I IMPROVEMENT AMENDMENTS

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill developed by the administration to make certain substantive and technical amendments to title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act [ESEA] incorporated into chapter I of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981.

The purposes of the bill are to: First, enable the Department to use consistently the most recent available census data in making chapter I formula allocations; and second, better target resources in the chapter I migrant program. I share the belief of the administration that these amendments are necessary to improve program effectiveness and to ensure the efficient operation of chapter I program.

Two of these amendments concern the data sources used in making allocations under the chapter I formula. First, the bill would amend ESEA by deleting any reference to use of survey of income and education [SIE] data, gathered by the Bureau of the Census in 1975, in allocating title I funds. The existing statute requires the Department to allocate, on the basis of SIE data, one-half of any funds appropriated for title I grants to local school districts that exceed the amount made available for that activity in fiscal year 1979. Deletion of this requirement would eliminate the anomaly of adjusting more recent 1980 census data to account for obsolete 1975 SIE data.

This bill would amend ESEA to allow the Department to utilize the criteria of poverty used by the Bureau of the Census in compiling the most recent—in this case 1980—decennial census, instead of the criteria used in the 1970 census, to make the chapter I formula allocation. Under the existing statute the Department can use data on the number of children from low-income families from the 1980 census but has had to adjust those data to reflect the poverty criteria established under the 1970 census. The amendment would enable the Department to use the criteria for poverty associated with the most recent census and thus provide a more accurate base on which to make the formula allocation.

Additional amendments concern the chapter I migrant education program. The bill would reduce from 5 years to 2 years the time a formerly migrant child can be deemed migratory for purposes of allocating funds and receiving services under the migrant education program. This proposal would be phased in over 2 years. Under the existing law, migrant children are counted for allocation purposes and are eligible to receive services for 5 years after they have migrated even if they have not moved during that period. Data collected by the migrant student record transfer system show that over half of all chapter I migrant students served and counted for allocation purposes are formerly migrant students who have not moved in the past year. Of this group slightly over half are in their third, fourth, or fifth year of eligibility as formerly migratory students and have remained in the same school district for at least 2 years. A report released by the General Accounting Office in May 1983 found that 60 percent of the migrant education participants in the sample studied were enrolled in only one school district during the period reviewed, which averaged 4.3 years. The amendment would enable the Department to focus limited migrant education funds on students who are actually migratory. Those formerly migratory students who are educationally deprived, and who were initially served by the program but were dropped from the migrant program as a result of the amendment would remain eligible for compensatory education services under the chapter I program for local educational agencies.

In addition, the bill would remove the $6 million, minimum set-aside requirement for coordination of migrant education activities. The 5-percent ceiling of the total appropriated for migrant education would remain as the maximum set-aside for coordination activities. This legislative change would give the Department needed flexibility in choosing whether to place more emphasis on assisting States to provide direct services or on coordination activities.

I would hope that this bill will receive prompt and favorable action. Passage would enable the Department of Education to carry out its obligations under the law with regard to allocating chapter I funds more efficiently and equitably and would increase its ability to focus limited program resources on those migrant children who are most in need.

Mr. President, I ask that the text of the bill along with a section-by-section analysis be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill and analysis were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2871

Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Chapter 1 Improvement Amendments of 1984".

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS

SEC. 2. Section 111(a)(3) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 2701 et seq.) (hereinafter in this Act referred to as "the Act") is amended by striking out subparagraphs (D) and (E).

CENSUS DATA

SEC. 3. (a) Section 111(c)(2) of the Act is amended by striking out "1970 decennial census" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "most recent available decennial census".

(b) Section 111(c)(2)(B) of the Act is amended by striking out "nonfarm".

MIGRANT EDUCATION PROGRAMS

SEC. 4. (a) Section 142(b) of the Act is amended by striking out "not in excess of five years," and inserting in lieu thereof "not in excess of three years for fiscal year 1985, and not in excess of two years thereafter,".

(b) Section 143(b) of the Act is amended by striking out "shall not be less than $6,000,000 nor more than 5 per centum" and inserting in lieu thereof "shall not be more than 5 per centum".

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 5. The amendments made by this Act shall affect funds appropriated for fiscal year 1985 and for subsequent fiscal years.

CHAPTER I IMPROVEMENT AMENDMENTS OF 1984

Section 2. Section 2 of the bill would amend the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (ESEA) by eliminating the requirement that the Secretary of Education allocate funds on the basis of Survey of Income and Education (SIE) data gathered by the Bureau of the Census in 1975. The Secretary would no longer allocate, on the basis of SIE data, one-half of any funds for chapter 1 grants made under the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981 (ECIA) to local educational agencies that exceed the funds made available for this activity in fiscal year 1979. Deletion of this requirement would eliminate the need to adjust more recent census data to account for outdated SIE data.

Section 3. Section 3(a) of the bill would authorize the Secretary to use the criteria of poverty from the most recent available decennial census, rather than from the 1970 census, for determining the amounts of payments under Chapter 1 of the ECIA.

Section 3(b) of the bill would make a related technical amendment, deleting the terms "nonfarm" in the current statutory reference to census data. This change is needed because the most recent census makes no distinction between the farm and nonfarm status of families.

Section 4. Section 4(a) of the bill would reduce from five years to two years the time a child of a migratory agriculture worker or migratory fisherman who no longer migrates is deemed migratory for purposes of allocating funds and receiving services under education programs operated for these children by State educational agencies. This change would be phased in over two years. The purpose of this amendment is to enable the Secretary to focus migrant education funds more effectively on students who are migratory.

Section 4(b) of the bill would remove the minimum $6 million set-aside requirement for coordination of activities under the migrant education programs. However, a maximum set-aside for coordination activities would remain at five percent of the total appropriation for these programs. This amendment would provide the Secretary needed flexibility in establishing priorities the migrant education appropriation level is reduced.

Section 5. Section 5 of the bill would provide that the amendments affect funds appropriated for fiscal year 1985 and subsequent fiscal years.

By Mr. GRASSLEY:

S. 2872. A bill to reform the Residential Conservation Service and to repeal the Commercial and Apartment Conservation Service, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

CONSERVATION SERVICE REFORM ACT

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to reform the Residential Conservation Service Program, and to repeal the Commercial and Apartment Conservation Service Program. This bill, which is the companion to H.R. 5946, addresses many of the most serious faults with the RCS Program. It is the result of painstaking deliberations in the House of Representatives, and I commend Congressman RALPH HALL and Congressman OTTINGER for their efforts.

I had previously introduced S. 2315 with Senator TRIBLE to repeal both the RCS and the CACS Programs. It is apparent that the RCS Program is not an effective conservation program. The program's intent was to provide energy users with an audit of their usage and follow up with suggestions on how to improve energy conservation. This service was to be provided by public utilities at a minimal cost and homeowners would be encouraged to take steps to achieve energy conservation. Special emphasis was to be placed on achieving savings for low-income homes.

The goals of the RCS Program are laudable. However, the actual implementation has fallen far short of meeting those goals. Instead of encouraging energy conservation among the lower income homeowners, the RCS Program has developed into a "seal of approval" for upper income homeowners who have already taken steps to improve energy efficiency.

The real costs of the audits are almost nine times as high as the allowed utility charge, yet the cost of the service is included in the rate base for all utility customers. As a result, nonparticipating low-income households are actually subsidizing the energy audits for their affluent neighbors.

One further point needs to be mentioned. The cost effectiveness of the RCS Program and the participation rate have been tremendously disappointing. The program has elicited response from only 3 percent of eligible participants despite extensive utility advertising, and has resulted in minimal energy savings. The cost of gas saved per MCF has been estimated to be as high as $82, which is equivalent to a per-barrel oil price of $492.

Clearly it is time to revise this program. The Conservation Service Reform Act will accomplish meaningful reform of the RCS program, and provides for repeal of the soon-to-be implemented CACS Program. Briefly, this legislation will allow States greater flexibility in implementing a program which is better designed to meet States' needs through an alternative plan exemption.

This bill is the result of laborious negotiations and much compromise. Like all compromises, this bill is not perfect. While I am introducing H.R. 5946 as reported by the House Energy and Commerce Committee, I feel it is necessary to pursue modifications in the bill. Specifically, the alternative plan section, and its requirements for annual participation and energy consumption reductions, need revision. I would also like to see more State and utility flexibility in designing conservation programs which can be targeted to local and State needs. It appears we may be overstepping our authority in mandating specific actions by the Governor. All too often, we at the Federal level feel we have the only solution to a problem and foist our position on the States. As long as the goals of increased participation and conservation are achieved, my preference is to leave the means to obtain those goals to the individual States in coordination with utilities. One final concern of mine is that we not place undue burdens on the States or public utility commissions through the reporting requirements and the section on administrative and judicial enforcement proceedings.

I would like to stress that I feel this bill is an excellent starting point for full Senate consideration and I look forward to working closely with Senators HATFIELD, WEICKER, and MCCLURE to secure reforms in the RCS Program. Given the limited amount of time remaining in this legislative schedule, prompt consideration and careful coordination among concerned Senators, Congressmen, and interest groups is necessary. We have the opportunity to take action yet this year, And I remain hopeful that with the introduction of this bill, the Senate can join the House of Representatives in actively pursuing changes in the current RCS Program.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill and a section-by-section summary be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill and analysis were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Conservation Service Reform Act of 1984".

TITLE I—RESIDENTIAL CONSERVATION SERVICE

SEC. 101. CHANGES IN CERTAIN PLAN REQUIREMENTS.

(a) INFORMATION REQUIREMENTS MADE APPLICABLE UNTIL JANUARY 1, 1990.—Sections 215 (a) and (d) and 217(a)(1) of the National Energy Conservation Policy Act (relating to utility programs and home heating supplier programs) are amended by striking out "January 1, 1985" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "January 1, 1990".

(b) ELIMINATION OF REQUIREMENTS THAT PUBLIC UTILITIES ARRANGE FOR INSTALLATION OF SUGGESTED MEASURES AND FOR RELATED LOANS; ELIMINATION OF LISTING REQUIREMENTS.—

(1) UTILITY PROGRAMS.—Section 215(b) of such Act (relating to project manager requirements) is amended—

(A) by striking out "Each utility program shall include" through "procedures" and inserting in lieu thereof "Each utility program shall include procedures";

(B) by striking out "to" through "inspect" and inserting in lieu thereof "to inspect"; and

(C) by striking out "inspection;" and all that follows and inserting in lieu thereof "inspection.".

(2) HOME HEATING SUPPLIER PROGRAMS.—Section 217(a)(2) of such Act (relating to home heating supplier programs) is amended—

(A) by striking out "will—" through "inspect" and inserting in lieu thereof "will inspect"; and

(B) by striking out "installing, suggested measures;" and all that follows and inserting in lieu thereof "installing, suggested measures.".

(3) STATE PLANS.—Section 213(a) of such Act (relating to general plan requirements) is amended—

(A) by striking out paragraphs (2) and (3); and

(B) by redesignating paragraphs (4) through (9) as paragraphs (2) through (7), respectively.

(c) RULES.—Section 212(b)(2) of such Act (relating to rules of the Secretary) is amended by striking out subparagraphs (E) and (F) and inserting "and" at the end of subparagraph (C).

(d) EFFECT OF 1984 AMENDMENTS ON APPROVED PLANS.—Section 219 of such Act (relating to Federal standby authority) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) PLANS APPROVED BEFORE 1984 AMENDMENTS.—For purposes of this section, any residential energy conservation plan which was approved by the Secretary before the effective date of the Conservation Service Reform Act of 1984 shall be treated as an approved plan which is adequately implemented if such plan is adequately implemented in accordance with the requirements of this Act as amended by the Conservation Service Reform Act of 1984.".

(e) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Paragraph (16) of section 210 of such Act is amended by striking out "215(b)(1)(A)" and inserting in lieu thereof "215(b)".

(2) Subparagraph (C) of section 212(b)(2) of such Act is amended by striking out "213(a)(4)" and inserting in lieu thereof "213(a)(2)".

(3) Subparagraph (A) of section 213(b)(2) of such Act is amended by striking out "215(b)(1)" and inserting in lieu thereof "215(b)".

(4) Subsection (b) of section 214 of such Act is amended by striking out "8" and inserting in lieu thereof "6".

(5) Section 215(a)(3) of such Act is amended by striking out "and the lists referred to in section 213(a) (2) and (3)".

(6) Subsection (d) of section 215 of such Act is amended by striking out ", the offer required under subsection (b)(1)(A)" and all that follows and by inserting in lieu thereof "and the offer required under subsection (b).".

(7) Section 215 of such Act is amended by striking out subsection (f) and by redesignating subsection (g) as subsection (f).

(8) Paragraph (1) of section 216(c) of such Act is amended by striking out subparagraph (A) and by redesignating subparagraphs (B) and (C) as subparagraphs (A) and (B), respectively.

(9) Subparagraph (C) of section 216(c)(2) of such Act is amended by striking out "on the list referred to in section 213(a)(2)".

(f) STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in the amendments made by subsections (b) through (e) shall prevent implementation of a plan or program pursuant to the National Energy Conservation Policy Act as in effect before the date of the enactment of this Act.

(g) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) RULES.—The Secretary of Energy shall, within the 90-day period referred to in paragraph (1), amend the rules promulgated under section 212 of the National Energy Conservation Policy Act to carry out the amendments made by this Act.

(3) SPECIAL REQUIREMENT FOR PLANS APPROVED BEFORE 1984 AMENDMENTS.—The Secretary of Energy shall, with respect to any residential energy conservation plan approved by the Secretary of Energy before the effective date (as described in paragraph (1)) of the amendments made by this section, require the appropriate official in charge of such plan to notify the Secretary of Energy, within 120 days of the date of enactment of this Act, that the amendments made by subsection (a) of this section shall be implemented for the duration of such plan.

SEC. 102. TIME LIMIT FOR ACTION ON APPLICATIONS FOR TEMPORARY PROGRAMS.

Any application for an exemption under section 218(a) of the National Energy Conservation Policy Act which is pending before the Secretary of Energy on the date of the enactment of this Act shall be deemed approved unless it is disapproved by the Secretary of Energy within 30 days after such date of enactment.

SEC. 103. ALTERNATIVE PLANS FOR RESIDENTIAL BUILDINGS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The National Energy Conservation Policy Act is amended by inserting the following new sections after section 225:

"SEC. 226. ALTERNATIVE STATE PLANS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—A Governor of any State or any State agency authorized to do so under State law may elect to formulate and certify an alternative State plan under this section.

"(b) CONSEQUENCES OF CERTIFICATION.—(1) Beginning with the date on which the certification of a plan is made with respect to a State under subsection (e) and ending with the date on which a plan is no longer in effect under this section with respect to such State—

"(A) sections 212(a) through (c)(3), 213 through 215, and sections 217 and 218 shall not apply with respect to—

"(i) regulated utilities in such State, and

"(ii) nonregulated utilities which are included in the plan;

"(B) section 219 shall apply to utilities described in subparagraph (A) only to the extent provided for in subsection (g); and

"(C) sections 212 through 219 shall apply to nonregulated utilities which are not included in the plan and which have not certified an alternative utility plan under section 227.

"(2) Except as provided in subsection (g), any State which certifies a plan under subsection (e) shall continue to have such plan in effect until the expiration of the 5-year period beginning on the date of such certification or until January 1, 1990, whichever occurs first.

"(c) FORMULATION OF PLAN.—In formulating any plan under this section, the Governor or State agency shall—

"(1) provide for advance notice to the public of proposed rulemaking for the purpose of formulating such plan;

"(2) publish a proposed rule on the content and implementation of the plan;

"(3) afford interested persons an opportunity to present oral and written comments on matters relating to such proposed rule; and

"(4) after taking such public comment into consideration, prescribe and make public a final rule setting forth the content and implementation of such plan.

"(d) CONTENT OF PLAN.—A plan certified pursuant to this section shall—

"(1) be designed to result in the dissemination of general energy conservation suggestions to all residential customers of utilities in the State;

"(2) be designed to result in—

"(A) specific energy conservation suggestions to each residential customer requesting such suggestions regarding the customer's residential building,

"(B) energy conservation improvements (which are included in such plan) to the customer's residential building, or

"(C) load management improvements (which are included in such plan) in the customer's residential building;

"(3) except as provided in subsection (k), for each year in which such plan is in effect, be designed to result in—

"(A)(i) in the case of a plan carried out solely by a State, benefits under paragraph (2) for a number of buildings equal to 5 percent or more of the residential buildings using natural gas or electric energy from utilities covered under section 211(a) in such State which did not, before such year, receive benefits under this Act (other than under paragraph (1) or section 227(d)(1)) or similar State law, and

"(ii) in the case of any other plan, benefits under paragraph (2) for a number of buildings equal to 5 percent or more of the residential buildings served by the utilities included in the plan which did not, before such year, receive benefits under this Act (other than paragraph (1) or section 227(d)(1)) or similar State law;

"(B) energy consumption reductions (as determined by the Governor by rule) of an average of 10 percent or more (as compared to the preceding year) in the residential buildings in such State which receive specific energy conservation suggestions or energy conservation improvements under paragraph (2) during the year for which the determination is made; and

"(C) maximum kilowatt demand reductions (as determined by the Governor by rule) of an average of 10 percent or more (as compared to the preceding year) in the residential buildings in such State which receive load management improvements under paragraph (2) during the year for which the determination is made;

"(4) be designed to benefit individuals, including but not limited to individuals with low or moderate incomes;

"(5) contain adequate procedures to assure that, if a public utility sypplies or installs residential energy conservation measures, such actions shall be consistent with section 216 and prices and rates of interest charged shall be fair and reasonable;

"(6) contain adequate procedures for preventing unfair, deceptive, or anticompetitive acts or practices affecting commerce which relate to the implementation of such plan;

"(7) be carried out by the State, by utilities within the State, or a combination of both;

"(8) be consistent with the rules under section 212(b)(2)(D);

"(9) contain rules consistent with the rules under section 215(c);

"(10) contain provisions to assure that any person who alleges any injury resulting from a violation of any plan provision shall be entitled to redress pursuant to State law or under such procedures as may be established by the Governor or State agency prior to the date on which the plan is certified under subsection (e); and

"(11) contain provisions described in section 213(b)(2)(B).

"(e) CERTIFICATION.—(1) A Governor or State agency which elects to certify a plan under this section shall certify, pursuant to a form to be prescribed by the Secretary (except as provided by paragraph (2)) to the Secretary that the plan—

"(A) has been formulated in accordance with subsection (c); and

"(B) will be adequately implemented.

"(2) If a form is not made available by the Secretary within 90 days after the date of the enactment of this section, the Governor or State agency may make such certification on a form prescribed by such Governor or State agency.

"(3) Any certification under this subsection shall include a detailed explanation of the manner in which the contents of the plan will be implemented.

"(f) ANNUAL REPORT.—(1) The State shall submit an annual report to the Secretary, within 60 days after the end of the 1-year period to which the report relates, describing the implementation of the plan and the results thereof.

"(2) Such report shall include—

"(A) a statement of the number of buildings receiving benefits under subsection (d)(2),

"(B) a statement of the energy savings resulting from the plan, including a statement of average energy consumption reductions in the case of residential buildings which receive energy conservation suggestions or energy conservation improvements under subsection (d)(2), and a statement of average maximum kilowatt demand reductions in the case of residential buildings which receive load management improvements under subsection (d)(2),

"(C) a statement of the proportion of individuals with low and moderate incomes who receive benefits under subsection (d)(2),

"(D) a detailed description of the benefits provided under the plan, and

"(E) the names of the entities carrying out the plan.

"(g) ADMINISTRATIVE AND JUDICIAL ENFORCEMENT PROCEEDINGS.—(1) At any time more than 1 year after an alternative State plan has been certified under subsection (e) with respect to a State, any resident of such State may petition the Secretary to conduct a public hearing to determine if the alternative State plan has been adequately implemented. A copy of such petition shall be transmitted to the Governor or the appropriate State agency on the same date it is transmitted to the Secretary. The Secretary shall have 90 days after the date on which such petition is received to make a determination on the matter.

"(2) Except as provided in paragraph (3), if the Secretary determines that the alternative State plan has not been adequately implemented, the Secretary shall, within the 90-day period described in paragraph (1), initiate standby authority under section 219 with respect to such State. If the Secretary does not initiate the standby authority within the 90-day period, the resident may bring a de novo action in the appropriate United States district court—

"(A) against the Secretary (with the State having the right to intervene) to require the Secretary to implement standby authority under section 219, or

"(B) against the State to require the State to adequately implement the alternative State plan certified under subsection (e).

If the court finds that the State has failed to adequately implement such plan, it shall order the remedy requested by the plaintiff under subparagraph (A) or (B). If an individual prevails in an action under subparagraph (A), the court shall award such individual reasonable fees and expenses of attorneys and costs.

"(3) If a State which had an approved plan in effect under section 212 on the day before the date on which certification was made under this section informs the Secretary in writing, within 30 days after receiving a copy of the petition described in paragraph (1), that it will no longer implement a plan certified under this section and that it will implement the approved plan which was in effect in the State on the day before certification of the alternative plan under this section—

"(A) the determinations and actions described in paragraph (2) may not be carried out; and

"(B) sections 212 through 219 shall apply in such State except to the extent an alternative utility plan under section 227 is implemented in such State.

"(4)(A) A resident may not petition the Secretary under paragraph (1) and may not bring an action under paragraph (2) if such petition or action is based solely on a failure to reach the results described in paragraph (3) of subsection (d) or subsection (k).

"(B) A court may not make a finding that a State has failed to adequately implement a plan under paragraph (2) if such finding is based solely on a failure to reach the results described in paragraph (3) of subsection (d) or subsection (k).

"(h) COVERAGE.—A plan certified under this section shall not apply to utilities other then utilities covered under section 211(a).

"(i) INCLUSION OF NONREGULATED UTILITIES.—No nonregulated utility may be included in a plan by a Governor or State agency under this section unless such inclusion is authorized under State law or the nonregulated utility agrees to such inclusion.

"(j) UTILITIES WITH RETAIL SERVICE TERRITORIES IN MORE THAN 1 STATE.—For purposes of this section, any utility with a retail service territory (as defined in section 227(d)) in more than one State shall be considered to be a separate utility with respect to each State in which its retail service territory is located.

"(k) ALTERNATIVE STANDARDS.—(1) If—

"(A) the Governor or State agency which certifies a plan under this section finds—

"(i) with respect to the first year in which the alternative State plan is to be in effect, that residential customers will not be adequately informed of the availability of benefits under such plan, or

"(ii) with respect to any year in which the alternative State plan is to be in effect, that—

"(I) the number of residential buildings which have received benefits described in subsection (d)(2) (regardless of whether included in a plan) prior to such year is so large that the results described in subsection (d)(3) are unlikely to be reached in the absence of a finding under this subsection, or

"(II) such alternative State plan (or substantial portions thereof) will primarily benefit individuals with low or moderate incomes, and

"(B) such finding is made after interested persons are afforded an opportunity to present oral and written comments thereon (which, with respect to the first year in which an alternative State plan is to be in effect, may be in combination with the opportunity afforded under subsection (c)(3)), the results described in subsection (d)(3)(A) shall be applied to such year by substituting for '5 percent' a percentage (determined by such Governor or State agency) which is less than 5 percent and greater than or equal to 3 percent.

"(2) A finding under this subsection may not be made more frequently than once a year and each such finding shall be applicable to the implementation of an alternative State plan for a period, beginning on the date specified in such finding, not to exceed 12 months. Such period shall not begin before the date of such finding.

"(l) CLASSIFICATION AS LOAD MANAGEMENT IMPROVEMENT OR ENERGY CONSERVATION IMPROVEMENT.—For purposes of this section, in the case of a technique or installation which may be classified as either a load management improvement or an energy conservation improvement, the Governor, by rule, shall determine whether to treat such technique or installation as a load management improvement, an energy conservation improvement, or both.

"SEC. 227. ALTERNATIVE UTILITY PLANS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—A regulated utility which is in a State in which an alternative State plan is not in effect under section 226 and a nonregulated utility which is not included in a plan submitted by a Governor or State agency as described in section 212(c) (if such inclusion is authorized under State law) or in a plan certified under section 226 may elect to certify an alternative utility plan under this section.

"(b) CONSEQUENCES OF CERTIFICATION.—(1) Beginning with the date on which the certification of a plan is made with respect to a utility under subsection (e) and ending with the date on which a plan is no longer in effect under this section with respect to such utility—

"(A) sections 212(a) through (c)(3), 213 through 215, and sections 217, 218, and 226 shall not apply with respect to such utility; and

"(B) section 219 shall apply to such utility only to the extent provided for in subsection (g).

"(2) Except as provided for in subsection (g), any utility which certifies a plan under subsection (e) shall continue to have such plan in effect until the expiration of the 5-year period beginning on the day of such certification or until January 1, 1990, whichever occurs first.

"(c) FORMULATION OF PLAN.—The Governor or State agency authorized to do so under State law shall formulate a plan under this section on behalf of any regulated utility which has elected to certify a plan under this section. In formulating any plan under this section, the nonregulated utility or the Governor or State agency in the case of a regulated utility shall—

"(1) provide for advance notice to the public of such plan;

"(2) publish a description of the proposed content and implementation of the plan;

"(3) afford interested persons an opportunity to present oral and written comments on matters relating to such proposed plan; and

"(4) after taking such public comment into consideration, prescribe and make public the content and implementation of such plan.

"(d) CONTENT OF PLAN.—Any plan certified pursuant to this section shall—

"(1) be designed to result in the dissemination of general energy conservation suggestions to all residential customers of such utility;

"(2) be designed to result in—

"(A) specific energy conservation suggestions to each residential customer requesting such suggestions regarding the customer's residential building,

"(B) energy conservation improvements (which are included in such plan) to the customer's residential building, or

"(C) load management improvements (which are included in such plan) in the customer's residential building;

"(3) except as provided in subsection (j), for each year in which such plan is in effect and with respect to the retail service territory of the utility, be designed to result in—

"(A) benefits under paragraph (2) for a number of buildings equal to 5 percent or more of the residential buildings using natural gas or electric energy from such utility which did not, before such year, receive benefits under this Act (other than under paragraph (1) or section 226(d)(1)) or similar State law;

"(B) energy consumption reductions (as determined by the Governor by rule) of an average of 10 percent or more (as compared to the preceding year) in the residential buildings in such territory which receive specific energy conservation suggestions or energy conservation improvements under paragraph (2) during the year for which the determination is made; and

"(C) maximum kilowatt demand reductions (as determined by the Governor by rule) of an average of 10 percent or more (as compared to the preceding year) in the residential buildings in such territory which receive load management improvements under paragraph (2) during the year for which the determination is made;

"(4) be designed to benefit individuals including but not limited to individuals with low or moderate incomes;

"(5) contain adequate procedures to assure that, if a public utility supplies or installs residential energy conservation measures, such actions shall be consistent with section 216 and prices and rates of interest charged shall be fair and reasonable;

"(6) contain adequate procedures for preventing unfair, deceptive, or anticompetitive acts or practices affecting commerce which relate to the implementation of such plan;

"(7) be consistent with the rules under section 212(b)(2)(D);

"(8) contain rules consistent with the rules under section 215(c);

"(9) contain provisions to assure that any person who alleges any injury resulting from a violation of any plan provision shall be entitled to redress—

"(A) in the case of an alleged violation by a regulated utility, pursuant to State law or under such procedures as may be established by the Governor or State agency prior to the date on which the plan is certified under subsection (e), or

"(B) in the case of an alleged violation by a nonregulated utility, under such procedures as are established by the nonregulated utility prior to the date on which the plan is certified under subsection (e); and

"(10) contain provisions described in section 213(b)(2)(B).

For purposes of this subsection, the term 'retail service territory' means the territory in a state in which a utility makes retail sales to residential customers.

"(e) CERTIFICATION.—(1) A utility which elects to certify a plan under this section shall certify, pursuant to a form to be prescribed by the Secretary (except as provided by paragraph (2)), to the Secretary that the plan—

"(A) has been formulated in accordance with subsection (c); and

"(B) will be adequately implemented.

"(2) If a form is not made available to a utility by the Secretary within 90 days after the date of the enactment of this section, the utility may make such certification on a form prescribed by such utility.

"(3) Any certification under this subsection shall include a detailed explanation of the manner in which the contents of the plan will be implemented, and, in the case of a regulated utility, shall include a statement of support from the Governor or the State agency of the State concerned.

"(f) ANNUAL REPORT.—(1) The utility shall submit an annual report to the Secretary, within 60 days after the end of the 1-year period to which the report relates, describing the implementation of the plan and the results thereof.

"(2) Such report shall include—

"(A) a statement of the number of buildings receiving benefits under subsection (d)(2),

"(B) a statement of the energy savings resulting from the plan, including a statement of average energy consumption reductions in the case of residential buildings which receive energy conservation suggestions or energy conservation improvements under subsection (d)(2), and a statement of average maximum kilowatt demand reductions in the case of residential buildings which receive load management improvements under subsection (d)(2),

"(C) a statement of the proportion of individuals with low and moderate incomes who receive benefits under subsection (d)(2),

"(D) a detailed description of the benefits provided under the plan, and

"(E) the names of the entities carrying out the plan.

"(g) ADMINISTRATIVE AND JUDICIAL ENFORCEMENT PROCEEDINGS.—(1) At any time more than 1 year after an alternative utility plan has been certified under subsection (e) with respect to a utility, any residential customer of such utility may petition the Secretary to conduct a public hearing to determine if the alternative utility plan has been adequately implemented. A copy of such petition shall be transmitted to the utility on the same date it is transmitted to the Secretary. The Secretary shall have 90 days after the date on which such petition is received to make a determination on the matter.

"(2) Except as provided in paragraph (3), if the Secretary determines that the alternative utility plan has not been adequately implemented, the Secretary shall, within the 90-day period described in paragraph (1), initiate standby authority under section 219 with respect to the utility concerned. If the Secretary does not initiate such standby authority within such 90-day period, such customer may bring a de novo action in the appropriate United States district court—

"(A) against the Secretary (with the utility having the right to intervene) to require the Secretary to implement standby authority under section 219 with respect to such utility, or

"(B) against the utility to require the utility to adequately implement the alternative utility plan certified under subsection (e).

If the court finds that the utility has failed to adequately implement such plan, it shall order the remedy requested by the plaintiff under subparagraph (A) or (B). If an individual prevails in an action under subparagraph (A), the court shall award such individual reasonable fees and expenses of attorneys and costs.

"(3) If a utility which was within an approved State plan under section 212 on the day before the date on which certification was made under this section informs the Secretary in writing, within 30 days after receiving a copy of a petition described in paragraph (1), that it will no longer implement a plan certified under this section and that it will carry out a program in accordance with the State plan in effect under this part in the State—

"(A) the determinations and actions described in paragraph (2) may not be carried out; and

"(B) sections 212 through 219 shall apply to such utility unless it voluntarily or pursuant to State law becomes part of a State alternative plan implemented in the State under section 226.

"(4) For purposes of implementing section 219(a)(2) to a regulated utility as a result of this subsection, the term 'each regulated utility in the State' in such section shall be deemed to mean only the utility with respect to which action is taken under this subsection.

"(5)(A) A residential customer may not petition the Secretary under paragraph (1) and may not bring an action under paragraph (2) if such petition or action is based solely on a failure to reach the results described in paragraph (3) of subsection (d) or subsection (j).

"(B) A court may not make a finding that a utility has failed to adequately implement a plan under paragraph (2) if such finding is based solely on a failure to reach the results described in paragraph (3) of subsection (d) or subsection (j).

"(h) COVERAGE.—A plan certified under this section shall not apply to utilities other than utilities covered under section 211(a).

"(i) UTILITIES WITH RETAIL SERVICE TERRITORIES IN MORE THAN 1 STATE.—For purposes of this section, any utility with a retail service territory (as defined in subsection (d)) in more than one State shall be considered to be a separate utility with respect to each State in which its retail service territory is located.

"(j) ALTERNATIVE STANDARDS.)—(1) If—

"(A) the Governor of a State which includes a retail service territory (as defined in subsection (d)) of a utility which certifies a plan under this section finds, for such retail service territory—

"(i) with respect to the first year in which the alternative utility plan is to be in effect, that residential customers will not be adequately informed of the availability of benefits under such plan, or

"(ii) with respect to any year in which the alternative utility plan is to be in effect, that—

"(I) the number of residential buildings which have received benefits described in subsection (d)(2) (regardless of whether included in a plan) prior to such year is so large that the requirements of subsection (d)(3) are unlikely to be met in the absence of a finding under this subsection, or

"(II) such alternative utility plan (or substantial portions thereof) will primarily benefit individuals with low or moderate incomes, and

"(B) such finding is made after interested persons are afforded an opportunity to present oral and written comments thereon (which, with respect to the first year in which an alternative utility plan is to be in effect, may be in combination with the opportunity afforded under subsection (c)(3)).

the requirements of subsection (d)(3)(A) shall be applied to such retail service territory for such year by substituting for '5 percent' a percentage (determined by such Governor) which is less than 5 percent and greater than or equal to 3 percent.

"(2) A finding under this subsection may not be made more frequently than once a year and each such finding shall be applicable to the implementation of an alternative utility plan for a period, beginning on the date specified in such finding, not to exceed 12 months. Such period shall not begin before the date of such finding.

"(k) CLASSIFICATION AS LOAD MANAGEMENT IMPROVEMENT OR ENERGY CONSERVATION IMPROVEMENT.—For purposes of this section, in the case of a technique or installation which may be classified as either a load management improvement or an energy conservation improvement, the Governor, by rule, shall determine whether to treat such technique or installation as a load management improvement, an energy conservation improvement, or both.".

(b) TVA AUTHORITY.—Paragraph (4) of section 212(c) is amended by inserting ", section 210(21), section 226, or section 227" after "this section,".

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—

(1) Subsection (e) of section 218 of such Act is amended by striking out the period at the end of the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "or a plan in effect under section 226 or section 227 which is applicable to such utility.".

(2) Subsection (a) of section 219 of such Act is amended by striking out "If" and inserting in lieu thereof "Except as provided in sections 226 and 227, if".

(3) Subsection (b) of section 219 of such Act is amended by striking out "If" and inserting in lieu thereof "Except as provided in sections 226 and 227, if".

(d) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of contents for such Act is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 225 the following new items:

"Sec. 226. Alternative State plans.
"Sec. 227. Alternative utility plans.".

SEC. 104. REPORTS AND DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 225 of the National Energy Conservation Policy Act (relating to FTC study and report submitted before January 1, 1982) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 225. REPORTS AND DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION.

"(a) GENERAL REPORT.—(1)(A) No later than January 1, 1986, the Secretary shall submit a report to the chairman of the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and the chairman of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate relating to the operation of this part.

"(B) Not later than January 1 of every other year after 1986, the Secretary shall submit a report to the Chairman of the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and the Chairman of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate relating to the operation of this part during the preceding 2-year period.

"(2) Each such report shall include—

"(A) a comparison of actual and predicted energy savings resulting from plans under this part,

"(B) identification of the most effective plans (or portions thereof),

"(C) an analysis, based on completed audits and other relevant data, of the energy saving potential of the installation of additional residential conservation measures, and

"(D) an analysis of economic, technical, behavioral, and other factors considered relevant to energy consumption by the Secretary.

Nothing in this paragraph shall require a survey of each residential building in which a residential energy conservation measure has been installed under this part.

"(b) SUMMARY OF ALTERNATIVE PLAN REPORTS.—No later than January 1, 1986, and no later than January 1 of each year thereafter, the Secretary shall submit a report to the Chairman of the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and the Chairman of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate summarizing the annual reports the Secretary received under section 226(f) and section 227(f) during the 12-month period ending on the preceding July 1.

"(c) DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION.—(1)(A) The Secretary shall at least annually, in fiscal years beginning after September 30, 1984, disseminate to the States and public utilities information providing technical assistance (including assistance in making calculations under sections 226(d)(3)(B) and 227(d)(3)(B)) and relating to the most cost-effective energy conservation procedures and devices (including residential energy conservation measures) and the most successful plans (or portions thereof) under this part.

"(B) The Secretary shall make the information described in subparagraph (A) available to the public.

"(2) The Secretary shall conduct seminars in various regions of the United States to disseminate information described in paragraph (1).".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of contents of such Act is amended by striking out the item relating to section 225 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 225. Reports and dissemination of information.".

SEC. 105. LOAD MANAGEMENT IMPROVEMENT DEFINED.

Section 210 of the National Energy Conservation Policy Act (relating to definitions) is amended by inserting after paragraph (20) the following new paragraph:

"(21) The term 'load management improvements' means—

"(A) as determined by the Secretary—

"(i) load management techniques (other than time-of-day or seasonal rates), and

"(ii) the installation of energy-efficient electric appliances or any other devices which reduce kilowatt demand, and

"(B) as determined by the Governor of a State, any other improvements in such State which are described in clause (i) or (ii) of subparagraph (A).".

SEC. 106. LIMITATION ON SUPPLY AND INSTALLATION BY PUBLIC UTILITIES.

(a) ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENTS FOR WAIVER.—Section 216(e) of the National Energy Conservation Policy Act (relating to waiver of prohibition against supply and installation of residential energy conservation measures by public utilities) is amended—

(1) by striking out "The" and inserting in lieu thereof "(1) The",

(2) by striking out "charged and" and inserting in lieu thereof "charged, there will be no unfair competitive advantages to the utility (with respect to competitors such as small businesses) in carrying out such activities, and", and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2) The Governor may not support the petition of a regulated utility under paragraph (1) before—

"(A) the Governor—

"(i) provides advance notice to the public of such waiver petition,

"(ii) affords interested persons an opportunity to present oral and written comments on the waiver petition, and

"(iii) makes the determinations and findings which the Secretary is required to make in order to grant a waiver under paragraph (1), and sets forth, in writing, such findings and the reasons for such determinations and findings; and

"(B) the utility makes all relevant documents and records requested by the Governor available to the Governor.".

(b) CONTRACTING EXEMPTION.—Subsection (c) of such section is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) This subsection shall not apply to the supply or installation of residential energy conservation measures other than specific measures which the Secretary determines—

"(A) were being installed or supplied by a public utility on the date of the enactment of the Conservation Service Reform Act of 1984, or

"(B) were broadly advertised on or before such date of enactment.".

(c) GENERAL EXEMPTION.—Subsection (d) of such section is amended—

(1) by striking out "The" and inserting in lieu thereof: "(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the",

(2) by redesignating paragraphs (1) through (3) as subparagraphs (A) through (C), respectively, and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2) Effective July 1, 1986, subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (1) shall not apply to the supply or installation of residential energy conservation measures other than measures which the Secretary determines were being installed or supplied by a public utility during the 12-month period ending June 1, 1984.

"(3)(A) If any person requests review of an exemption under paragraph (1) (A) or (B) by the Governor of the State in which the exemption applies, and such request includes adequate documentation, the Governor shall review such exemption under subparagraph (B).

"(B) If, after notice and opportunity for a public hearing, the Governor determines that with respect to an activity which is the subject of a request under subparagraph (A)—

"(i) the utility is not charging fair and reasonable prices and rates of interest,

"(ii) there are unfair competitive advantages to the utility (with respect to competitors such as small businesses),

"(iii) such activity is inconsistent with the prevention of unfair methods of competition or the prevention of unfair or deceptive acts or practices, or

"(iv) the utility has not provided the Governor with all documents and records he determines necessary to make the determination under clauses (i) through (iii), and sets forth, in writing, such determination and the reasons for such determination, such exemption shall not apply to the activity which is the subject of such request.

"(C) Notwithstanding any findings of the Governor under subparagraph (B), the Governor may allow an exemption under paragraph (1) (A) or (B) if the utility establishes to the satisfaction of the Governor that it will provide appropriate competitive safeguards.".

TITLE II—REPEAL OF PROVISIONS REGARDING COMMERCIAL BUILDINGS AND MULTIFAMILY DWELLINGS

SEC. 201. (a) IN GENERAL.—Title VII of the National Energy Conservation Policy Act (relating to energy conservation for commercial buildings and multifamily dwellings) is hereby repealed.

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of contents for such Act is amended by striking out the items relating to title VII.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE: CONSERVATION SERVICE REFORM ACT OF 1984

Title I—Residential Conservation Service

Section 101—Changes in Certain Plan Requirements—This section makes changes in certain plan requirements under the existing RCS program.

Extension of Announcement Date—The bill would extend from January 1, 1985, to January 1, 1990, the last date on which utilities and participating home heating suppliers are required to issue announcements of the RCS program to their customers.

Elimination of Arranging and Listing Requirements—The bill would eliminate the requirements that covered utilities and home heating suppliers arrange for the installation and financing of conservation measures and provide a list of suppliers, contractors and financial institutions to residential customers. (However, the bill would not prohibit such activities by a utility.)

If a Governor or public utility wishes to revise a previously approved residential energy conservation plan to reflect this legislation's elimination of requirements relating to arranging and listing, this section explicitly permits such a change without requiring that a plan amendment be submitted to the Secretary of Energy.

In the case of states or public utilities that elect to continue a residential energy conservation plan approved by DOE prior to enactment of this legislation, the appropriate official in charge of such plan must notify the Secretary in writing that the announcement date requirement shall be extended to January 1, 1990, as required by this section. The Committee intends that a letter from the appropriate official in charge of the plan to the Secretary should satisfy this requirement.

Section 102—Temporary Programs—The Secretary of Energy must approve or disapprove any pending applications for temporary programs under section 218(a) of the National Energy Conservation Policy Act (NECPA) no later than 30 days after enactment. If the Secretary takes no action within 30 days, the temporary program shall be deemed approved.

Section 103—Alternative Plans for Residential Buildings—The bill allows an exemption from the requirements of the RCS program for states adopting an "alternative plan." This section would add new sections 226 and 227 to NECPA. Section 226 allows states to adopt an alternative plan, while section 227 allows utilities to develop alternative plans in states that choose to continue their existing RCS programs.

Alternative State Plans (new section 226)—A Governor of any state or any state agency authorized under state law may certify to the Department of Energy that the state will carry out an alternative plan. Under section 226(b), the Governor may make his certification as soon as DOE has prescribed a form for such certification or, if no such form is available, as early as 90 days after enactment. This provision is intended to insure a minimum of delay in enactment of the alternative program once the state has met the procedural requirement under the formulation of the plan.

Approval of the Secretary is not required at the time of certification. Any state which certifies an alternative plan shall continue to have such plan in effect for the five-year period after certification or until January 1, 1990, whichever occurs first. This new section 266 does not contain a requirement that, under an alternative plan, program announcements be sent to eligible customers.

Formulation of the Plan—In formulating an alternative plan, the Governor must hold a public hearing with opportunity for oral comments prior to certification.

Content of the Plan—In formulating an alternative plan, the Governor should be guided by the items set out under "Content of Plan," in section 226(d). The content of the plan is described below.

(1) The plan shall be designed to result in the dissemination of general energy conservation suggestions to all residential customers of utilities in the state. This is a minimal requirement of the plan to insure that general conservation information is available to all residential utility customers. Such a program could include, for example, utility bill inserts listing the most cost-effective conservation items for the region or a state- or utility-operated telephone "hot-line" to answer questions from residents about energy conservation.

(2) In addition, the plan shall be designed to include result-oriented energy conservation programs. It is intended that the state should have maximum flexibility in designing this class of program, keeping in mind that it should be designed to reach the targets set out in section 226(d)(3). Three broad types of approaches are named under this class of program. An alternative plan may include items from any of the three categories or a combination of these categories. The categories follow:

(a) Specific energy conservation suggestions regarding a customer's residential building. A home energy audit providing specific suggestions about conservation improvements appropriate to the residence would qualify under this description.

(b) Programs designed to result in energy conservation improvements to the customer's residence. This is a broad class of programs that could include, for example, low-interest financing of conservation measures, rebates for the purchase of energy-efficient equipment, or the purchase of predicted or actual kilowatt hours saved through conservation improvements, such as under the RECAP program conducted by General Public Utilities. The Committee intends to encourage innovative programs to induce residential customers to make cost-effective conservation investments. This list of possible programs should not be considered all-inclusive. This provision is not intended to require that the program pay the entire cost of weatherizing residential buildings participating in the plan, although a state may decide to do so and include such a program in its plan.

(c) Programs designed to result in load management improvements in the customer's residential building. Such programs would be aimed at reducing electricity use by an individual customer at times of peak electricity use during the day or during the year. Effective programs in this area have included rebates for the purchase of efficient replacement equipment and devices to turn off such equipment as water heaters during peak energy use. This bill is not intended to encourage, as load management improvements, the replacement of home appliances with appliances powered by a fuel different from that used in the original appliance. Merely switching the fuel for an appliance should not, under the definition in this legislation, be considered in and of itself as a load management improvement.

Programs to reduce peak energy use generally benefit all ratepayers by reducing the need for additional power at the most expensive periods of time. Under this section, it is intended that any load management programs included in the alternative plan should also result in a benefit to the individual residence in reduced peak energy use.

(3) The plan shall be designed to result in annual participation in the alternative program by at least 5 percent of the residential buildings served by natural gas or electric utilities included in the state plan. In the case of an alternative plan carried out by the state only, without utility involvement, the plan should be designed to reach at least 5 percent of the residential customers served by utilities covered under NECPA. The Committee intends the 5 percent number to be a target. This target may be exceeded or may not be met, but should be used by the State in formulating an alternative program. For those states that have conducted RCS programs or similar conservation programs under state law, the 5 percent applies to the remaining number of residents that have not yet been served. Since the 5 percent target applies to the alternative plan as a whole, the state may decide to allocate responsibility for reaching that target in varying degrees among programs or utility participants. For example, the state program could be designed to reach more than five percent of the customers in a utility service area where dense population or other factors made a high level of participation likely, but less than 5 percent where a lower level of participation was expected.

Section 226 also requires that the plan be designed to result in annual energy consumption reductions of at least 10 percent per household for buildings that participate in the energy conservation programs designed under section 226(d)(2). The Governor of the state shall define by rule the term "energy consumption reductions." The Committee intends that the 10 percent reduction target apply to energy savings that are attributable to the home served by the program, sometimes described as "gross" savings. It is not intended that the savings target be attributable solely to the program as compared to savings that might have occurred in the absence of the program. In calculating the energy reductions, the Governor should adjust for variations in weather from year to year, for population changes, for structural changes in the home or other factors that could distort an assessment of the energy savings achieved.

In the case of load management improvements included in the alternative program, the plan shall be designed to result in annual peak electricity demand reductions of an average of at least 10 percent in residential buildings served by such programs.

(4) The alternative plan shall be designed to benefit individuals with low or moderate incomes, as well as other individuals. This provision is not intended to limit the program to any one income class, but rather to insure that low- or moderate-income individuals would benefit under the design of the program, in addition to those with higher incomes.

(5) The plan shall contain adequate procedures to assure that, if a public utility supplies or installs residential energy conservation measures, such actions shall be carried out in accordance with Section 216 of NECPA and at fair and reasonable prices and rates of interest.

(6) The plan shall contain adequate procedures for preventing unfair, deceptive or anti-competitive acts or practices.

(7) The plan shall be carried out by the state, by utilities within the state or a combination of both. In formulating the alternative state plan, the Governor has several options for determining what entities shall carry out the programs under the plan:

The state may elect to carry out all the programs itself without any utility involvement. Under this option the state could operate the program directly under the designated state agency in charge of the residential conservation service program. Alternatively, the lead state agency could enter into a cooperative agreement with other state agencies or non-governmental entities, such as non-profit community organizations, to carry out or assist in carrying out the program.

The state may elect to have the plan carried out by utilities within the state. Under this section, the state has the option of including all or some of the utilities covered under the RCS program by NECPA.

The state may elect to carry out the plan in combination with the utilities. This option could include, for example, a combination of the cooperative agreement mentioned in the first option and a role for the utilities as well.

(8) The plan shall be consistent with DOE rules developed under NECPA in consultation with the Federal Trade Commission concerning unfair, deceptive or anticompetitive practices.

(9) The plan shall contain rules consistent with the rules under section 215(c) of NECPA concerning the accounting and payment of costs for the program.

(10) The plan shall contain provisions to assure that any person who alleges injury resulting from inadequate implementation shall be entitled to redress under state law or procedures established by the Governor, or appropriate state agency. This provision is consistent with existing law governing the RCS program.

(11) The plan shall contain provisions described in section 213(b)(2)b of NECPA to insure that a utility will not inspect a furnace which uses a source of energy other than that provided by the utility unless the residential customer requests such inspection in writing. This provision is consistent with existing law governing the RCS program.

Annual Report—The state shall submit an annual report to DOE describing implementation of its alternative plan and reporting on the number of buildings reached and energy savings achieved within 60 days after the end of the one-year period to which the report applies.

In requiring a statement of the proportion of low- and moderate-income individuals participating in the alternative plan, it is recognized that utilities might not have access to information about the income of persons involved. An estimate of the number of such individuals would satisfy the requirement.

Administrative and Judicial Enforcement Proceedings—A resident of any state in which an alternative plan has been certified may, no sooner than one year after the program's certification, petition DOE to conduct a public hearing to determine if the alternative state plan has been adequately implemented. At the time that such a petition is filed, the state may opt to implement its previously approved RCS plan and thus halt the DOE hearing process.

If the Secretary finds that the program has not been adequately implemented, he shall initiate Federal standby authority (implementing the regular RCS program) within 90 days after the petition is filed.

If the Secretary does not initiate Federal standby authority within 90 days, the petitioner may bring an action in U.S. District Court to require the Secretary to implement standby authority or require the state to adequately implement the alternative state plan.

Under this section, a petitioner could challenge the implementation of the plan in court unless the Secretary initiates standby authority within the time period specified. Thus, the petitioner would have standing in U.S. District Court even if the Secretary upheld the plan as adequately implemented.

An individual who prevails in court in an action against the Secretary shall be awarded reasonable attorneys' fees and costs.

A state resident may not petition DOE or bring a court action solely on the grounds that the state has failed to reach the participation and energy-saving results described in the content of the plan. Similarly, a court may not make a finding that a state has failed to implement a plan adequately solely on the basis of a failure to reach the above-described results.

If a petition to DOE or a court action is brought on other grounds, however, the petitioner's complaint could still include as an issue the state's failure to meet one or more of the numerical results. Similarly, this provision would not preclude the Department of Energy or a judge from considering a failure to meet these results as part of the overall consideration of whether an alternative plan had been adequately implemented.

In general, the Committee intends that in deciding whether a plan has been adequately implemented, the Department or a judge should look at the entirety of the plan, including the formulation of the plan, its content, and its implementation.

Alternative Standards—Under this provision, the Governor or appropriate state agency may establish an alternative standard to the annual participation rate of 5 percent under the alternative plan. Following a public hearing, the target may be reduced to no lower than 3 percent, if the state finds that any of three conditions exist: (1) customers will not be adequately informed of the program in the first year, (2) such a large number of eligible buildings is already equipped with conservation or load management improvements as to make it unlikely that the alternative program could achieve the bill's targets of 5 percent annual participation and 10 percent average annual energy savings, or (3) if the alternative program will primarily benefit low- or moderate-income individuals.

The first finding may be made only with respect to the first year of the alternative plan, if the Governor finds that the programs under the alternative plan are sufficiently new and unfamiliar as to require extra efforts at making their availability known to customers in their stand-up phase.

The second finding is intended to apply to a state in which such a large amount of energy conservation or load management improvements has already been achieved in eligible customers' homes as to make the energy savings and participation rate goals of the plan infeasible. This could apply to areas in which Federal, state or utility programs have already achieved major improvements in customers' homes. It may also apply to areas in which, for example, the climate or the price of energy has already induced major conservation/load management improvements in the majority of potential participants' homes.

Alternative Utility Plans: Regulated Utilities (New Section 227)—In a state which does not have an alternative plan, an individual regulated utility may certify that it will carry out an alternative program if supported by the Governor.

Th^ provisions applying to an alternative utility plan are similar to those governing an alternative state plan in formulation of the plan, content of the plan, annual report, and administrative and judicial enforcement proceedings.

Non-Regulated Utilities—A non-regulated utility may be included in a state alternative plan only if the Governor has legal authority to include it or the non-regulated utility elects to be included in the state plan. A non-regulated utility may certify to DOE that it will carry out an alternative plan if the Governor does not include the utility in the state plan.

Section 104—Reports and Dissemination of Information—No later than January 1, 1986, and every two years thereafter, DOE shall submit a report to the House Committee on Energy and Commerce and the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, comparing predicted energy savings with actual savings achieved under both the RCS and alternative plans and identifying the most successful programs. The Committee intends this report to be an evaluation of the RCS and alternative plan based on selective studies or samples of buildings, rather than an exhaustive building-by-building report. DOE shall compile a summary of annual reports on alternative plans to be delivered annually to Congress.

Dissemination of Information by DOE—At least annually, the Secretary shall provide information to states and utilities, including technical assistance for calculating energy consumption reductions and information about the most effective programs. This technical assistance would include examples of several professionally accepted methods for calculating energy consumption reductions in the residential sector.

Section 105—Load Management Improvement Defined—Load management improvements are defined as those load management techniques included under the existing RCS program, plus the installation of any devices which reduce electricity demand during peak periods. The Governor of a state may add load management devices to those approved by DOE. In determining allowable load management improvements, neither the Secretary nor a Governor should regard the mere replacement of equipment powered by one source of energy with equipment powered by another as a load management improvement.

Section 106—Limitation on Supply and Installation by Public Utilities—NECPA prohibits utilities from directly installing or supplying conservation measures, as defined by NECPA for purposes of the RCS program. The existing law provides three types of exemptions from these prohibitions.

(1) A utility may, with the support of the Governor, petition DOE for a waiver from the prohibition. DOE may grant the waiver after making certain findings aimed at preventing anti-competitive activity.

(2) A utility may contract with an independent contractor to supply or install conservation measures. Under current law, no waiver is required for this exemption.

(3) A utility that supplied or installed conservation measures, or made substantial preparations to do so, may receive a "grandfather exemption" from DOE to continue such activity.

This section would amend existing law to provide an opportunity for a public review of potential competitive abuses in each of the three types of exemptions named above. Because of the regulated monopoly position of utilities and because of the potential for such utilities to subsidize unregulated installation or supply activities with revenues derived from their regulated activities, the Committee believes that the entry of utilities into unregulated conservation markets deserves very careful public scrutiny.

Additional Requirements for Waiver—In granting a waiver to a utility from the prohibition on supply and installation of energy conservation measures, the Secretary of Energy must make an additional finding that there will be no unfair competitive advantages to the utility in carrying out such activities.

The Governor may not support the petition of a regulated utility for a waiver to DOE unless the Governor provides advance notice of the waiver petition and opportunity for a public hearing. In order to support the petition, the Governor must make the same findings required of the Secretary in granting the waiver petition. The utility must make available to the Governor all relevant documents and records requested by the Governor.

Contracting Exemption—Utilities which installed, supplied or advertised residential conservation measures through contractors on the date of enactment of this Act may continue to supply and install those same measures without applying for a waiver.

New utility contracting programs, started after the date of enactment of this legislation, are subject to the amended waiver process.

General Exemption (Grandfather Provision)—No change is made in the grandfather provision under Subsection d(3) of Section 216 of NECPA, which exempts utilities from installation and supply prohibitions in states where a state law or regulation requires or permits such supply or installation.

However, the grandfather provision is narrowed for those utilities that received a grandfather exemption pursuant to subsection d(1) or d(2) of section 216. These provisions provide a grandfather exemption to utilities that supplied, installed, advertised, or prepared for such programs prior to the enactment of the 1978 National Energy Conservation Policy Act. Starting July 1, 1986, the grandfather exemption would remain in effect only for those utilities which, during the 12-month period prior to June 1, 1984, were installing and supplying those specific measures for which they had received the grandfather exemption.

State Hearing for Grandfathered Utility—If any person requests review of a grandfathered utility and includes adequate documentation of anti-competitive activity by the utility, the Governor shall review the grandfather exemption in a public hearing.

The exemption shall continue for a grandfathered utility if the Governor, following a public hearing, makes any of the following findings:

(1) The utility is not charging fair and reasonable prices and rates of interest.

(2) There are unfair competitive advantages to the utility.

(3) Such activity is inconsistent with the prevention of unfair methods of competition or the prevention of unfair or deceptive acts or practices.

(4) The utility has not provided the Governor with all the documents he determines necessary to make the above findings.

Regardless of whether the Governor makes any of the above findings, the Governor may condition the continuation of the grandfathered activity on the provision of appropriate competitive safeguards by the utility in carrying out the activity.

To ensure that DOE will remain the central repository of information about utilities with grandfather exemptions, the Committee expects that a state in which a grandfather exemption has been removed as a result of the public hearing provided under this section would notify the Department of any change in the exemption status.

Title II—Repeal of Provisions Regarding Commercial Buildings and Multifamily Dwellings

The Commercial and Apartment Conservation Service is repealed.●

By Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself, Mr. HART, and Mr. BRADLEY):

S. 2873. A bill to provide that there will be a cost-of-living increase in Social Security and SSI benefits for 1985 without regard to whether the 3-percent threshold is met; to the Committee on Finance.

COST-OF-LIVING INCREASE FOR SOCIAL SECURITY AND SUPPLEMENTAL SECURITY INCOME RECIPIENTS

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to offer legislation that would ensure a cost-of-living increase in January 1985 for the Nation's Social Security and supplemental security income beneficiaries.

The Social Security Act provides for an automatic benefit increase in any year when the cost of living rises by 3 percent or more. Inflation, of late, has slowed markedly, and in most respects this is a welcome and happy event. But for aged and disabled Americans, lower inflation is a mixed blessing. Current projections for the increase in the Consumer Price Index from the third quarter of 1983 to the third quarter of 1984 are hovering just below 3 percent. While this may mean only slightly higher prices for the goods our elderly and disabled citizens must purchase, it also appears that, barring the change I am proposing, Social Security and SSI recipients will receive no cost-of-living increase.

The fact is, we are in a position to provide for this increase, because the trust funds are in satisfactory condition.

On January 15, 1983, the National Commission on Social Security Reform, on which I served, agreed to a set of recommendations to put Social Security on a firm financial footing. Our proposals became law 3 months later, and optimism about their efficacy has been vindicated. On April 5 of this year, the trustees of the Social Security trust funds—Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan, Labor Secretary Raymond J. Donovan, and Health and Human Services Secretary Margaret M. Heckler—reported that benefits to be provided under these programs can be paid well into the next century.

This 1984 trustees report assumed that in January 1985, benefits would increase 4.7 percent—that being the projected rise in the CPI. In 1985, that increase would cost the Social Security system $8.3 billion in benefit payments. If benefits were adjusted in January of next year based on a 2.9-percent CPI increase, the cost to the OASDI funds would be about $5 billion—roughly $3.3 billion less than is now incorporated in the trust fund projections.

Let me also note that over 2 years, this legislation will not cost the trust fund any substantial additional moneys. Under the provisions of the Social Security Amendments of 1983, if recipients forfeit their COLA because the CPI rises less than 3 percent, the COLA for the following year would be based on the increase in the CPI over the previous 2 years. With this legislation, then, we simply would ensure that our elderly and disabled citizens receive their COLA's when they need it—when the CPI rises, without waiting an additional year. And let me mention another happy fact. The OASDI trust funds are in even sounder condition today than the 1984 trustees' report had estimated. That report predicted a trust fund balance in January 1985 of $27.7 billion. According to Social Security actuaries, the military adjustment payment to the trust funds will exceed the trustees' expectations by some $2.6 billion. Moreover, the current recovery is increasing revenues into the fund at a faster rate than expected. A timely COLA of just under 3 percent would leave the trust funds in a fine and healthy condition.

President Reagan now supports this increase in Social Security benefits.

This week, the President joined in the view of the trustees of the Social Security funds. The President's remarks are a happy, though somewhat belated, expression of confidence in the solvency of the Social Security funds. In effect, he acknowledged that the trust funds are healthy enough to provide benefit increases beyond those required by present law. Perhaps now, at last, the constant harping we have heard about the failings and possible demise of the Social Security system is at an end.

Single Americans on Social Security receive an average benefit of $425 a month, an annual income of just $5,100. This increase of roughly 3 percent will mean about $12 more each month, or $144 a year. The average benefit for aged couples on Social Security, about $700 a month, would be increased by roughly $21 per month. That means $252 more a year for a couple living now on just $8,400. Among the most poor aged—those receiving SSI—this increase will mean $108 more per year for an individual now living on less than $3,800, and $168 more per year for a couple now receiving less than $5,700 in annual support.

These certainly are small sums for individuals, but they maintain the buying power of their current incomes. These increases just keep pace with actual inflation, inflation which elderly and disabled Americans cannot offset, like some of the rest of us, by working harder.

This increase of about 3 percent will keep almost a half million elderly and disabled Americans above the poverty line, according to estimates by the American Association of Retired Persons. Can we do otherwise? Can we sit by and watch a half million of our elderly and disabled citizens slip below the poverty line? They deserve—indeed, have earned—this cost-of-living adjustment.

I invite my colleagues to join me in this effort to grant a cost-of-living adjustment to the millions of elderly, blind, and disabled Americans who receive Social Security and supplemental security income.

Mr. President, I am introducing this legislation with my good friends and colleagues Senators BRADLEY, HART, and SASSER. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2873

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) in determining whether the base quarter ending on September 30, 1984 is a cost-of-living computation quarter for purposes of the cost-of-living increases under sections 215(i) and 1617 of the Social Security Act, the phrase "is 3 percent or more" appearing in section 215(i)(1)(B) of such Act shall be deemed to read "is greater than zero".

(b) For purposes of section 215(i) of such Act, the provisions of subsection (a) shall not constitute a "general benefit increase".●

By Mr. PACKWOOD:

S. 2874. A bill to amend title 49, United States Code, to reduce regulation of surface freight forwarders, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

SURFACE FREIGHT FORWARDER DEREGULATION ACT

● Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation which would eliminate economic regulation of the surface freight forwarding industry in the United States. This bill, the Surface Freight Forwarder Deregulation Act of 1984, would remove Interstate Commerce Commission [ICC] regulations governing the operation of surface freight forwarders.

The freight forwarding industry plays a crucial role in our freight transportation system. Freight forwarders assemble small shipments for consolidation, then dispatch these shipments in full truckloads or rail carloads. By arranging for the transportation of these small shipments as part of larger loads, freight forwarders historically have been able to offer lower rates for small shipments than the rates the individual shippers could have obtained from trucking companies or railroads.

There is healthy competition in the freight forwarding industry as well as vigorous competition between freight forwarders and trucking companies, unregulated shipper associations, and railroads. Because of this degree of competition, continued regulation of freight forwarders is not necessary. In fact, many freight forwarders are eager to be deregulated because they believe they are currently at a competitive disadvantage with the trucking and rail industries. In 1980, legislation providing significant regulatory reform of the trucking industry and railroads was enacted. These two pieces of legislation provided greater pricing flexibility for carriers and also brought increased competition to the trucking and rail industries. As a result, these industries can now much more effectively compete with freight forwarders for small shipments traffic than they could in the past.

Mr. President, the time has come to remove the needless regulations which hamper the operations of surface freight forwarders. The bill I am introducing today eliminates ICC entry and rate regulation over freight forwarders and eliminates antitrust immunity for collective ratemaking activities in the freight forwarding industry. The reforms in this bill will strengthen the freight forwarder industry and will lead to more effective competition between freight forwarders and the trucking and rail industries.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the Surface Freight Forwarder Deregulation Act of 1984 and a section-by-section analysis of this legislation be included in the RECORD in their entirety.

There being no objection, the bill and analysis were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2874

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Surface Freight Forwarder Deregulation Act of 1984".

PURPOSE

SEC. 2. This Act is part of the continuing effort by Congress to reduce burdensome and unnecessary government regulations and to ensure the competitiveness and efficacy of transportation services of surface freight forwarders in the United States.

FINDINGS

SEC. 3. The Congress finds that—

(1) a safe, sound and competitive surface freight forwarder industry is important to the national transportation system;

(2) the statutes governing Federal regulation of the freight forwarder industry are outdated and must be revised to reflect present and future transportation needs and realities;

(3) protective regulation has resulted in anticompetitive pricing and has restricted the range of price and service options available to shippers;

(4) in order to reduce the uncertainty experienced by the Nation's transportation industries, the Interstate Commerce Commission's remaining responsibilities for the regulation of surface freight forwarders should be eliminated by Act of Congress; and

(5) legislative and resulting changes should be implemented with the least amount of disruption consistent with achieving the reforms enacted.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 14. This Act shall become effective on July 1, 1985.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS—THE "SURFACE FREIGHT FORWARDER DEREGULATION ACT OF 1984"

SECTION 2—PURPOSE OF THE ACT

This section states that the purpose of this Act is to reduce unnecessary and burdensome government regulations and to insure the competitiveness and efficacy of the freight forwarder industry in the United States.

SECTION 3—CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS

This section states the following Congressional findings:

1. That a safe, sound, and competitive surface freight forwarder industry is important to the national transportation system;

2. That the statutes governing Federal regulation of freight forwarders are outdated;

3. That protective regulations has resulted in anticompetitive pricing and has restricted price and service options available to shippers;

4. That the Interstate Commerce Commission's (ICC) remaining responsibilities for the regulation of surface freight forwarders should be legislatively eliminated; and

5. That legislative and resulting changes should be implemented with the least amount of disruption, consistent with achieving the reforms enacted.

SECTION 4—DEFINITIONS

This section amends the definition of "freight forwarder" in section 10102 of title 49, U.S. Code, to remove the requirement that freight forwarders hold themselves out to serve the general public.

SECTION 5—INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION ADMINISTRATION

Subsection (a) of this section amends section 10328 of title 49, U.S.C., which allows the ICC to provide special notice procedures in lieu of Federal Register publication for operating authority applications, by eliminating reference to freight forwarders since freight forwarders would be removed from ICC jurisdiction under this Act.

Subsection (b) of this section amends section 10329 of title 49, U.S.C., by deleting the requirement for designation of agents by freight forwarders, which will no longer be subject to ICC jurisdiction, as well as requirements for service of notice to those parties regarding Commission proceedings.

SECTION 6—JURISDICTION

Subsection (a) of this section amends section 10521 of title 49, U.S.C., by removing Interstate Commerce Commission jurisdiction over the procurement of motor carrier transportation by freight forwarders.

Subsection (b) of this section amends section 10523 of title 49, U.S.C., provides a conforming change, by removing freight forwarders from the exemption from Interstate Commerce Commission jurisdiction over motor vehicle transportation in terminal areas.

Subsection (c), (d), and (e) repeal section 10561, "General Jurisdiction", and section 10562, "Exempt freight forwarder service", of title 49, U.S.C. This removes all transportation by freight forwarders from ICC jurisdiction.

SECTION 7—RATES, TARIFFS AND VALUATIONS

Subsection (a) of this section amends section 10701 of title 49, U.S.C., by eliminating standards for rates, classifications, through routes, rules and practices of freight forwarders.

Subsection (b) of this section amends section 10704 of title 49, U.S.C., by removing Interstate Commerce Commission authority to describe rates, classification, rules, or practices to be followed by freight forwarders.

Subsection (c) amends section 10706 of title 49, U.S.C., by removing freight forwarders from the class of carriers who are entitled to receive antitrust immunity from the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Subsection (d) amends section 10708 of title 49, U.S.C. by removing Interstate Commerce Commission jurisdiction to investigate, suspend, revise or revoke any rate of a freight forwarder on the grounds that such rate is unreasonably high or low. The zone of rate freedom established by the Motor Carrier Act of 1980 will remain applicable only to motor carriers of property.

Subsection (e) amends section 10722 of title 49, U.S.C., "Special Passenger Rates", by removing freight forwarders from the special property rate provisions of this section.

Subsection (f) repeals section 10725 of title 49, U.S.C., "Special freight forwarder rates".

Subsection (g) amends section 10730 of title 49, U.S.C., by removing the Interstate Commerce Commission's jurisdiction to require or authorize freight forwarders to establish rates for transportation of property under which the liability of the freight forwarder for that property is limited to a value established by written declaration of the shipper or by written agreement. Freight forwarders will be subject to the common law, and the Uniform Commercial Code (Section 7-309(2) and State variants), which allows a freight forwarder to declare a limit to its liability as long as the consignor is afforded an opportunity to declare a higher value.

Subsection (h) amends section 10741 of title 49, U.S.C., by removing the general prohibition of rail, motor carrier, and motor discrimination against freight forwarder services. The effect of this amendment is to allow the general anti-discrimination provisions of the anti-trust laws to apply to freight forwarders.

Subsection (i) amends section 10743 of title 49, U.S.C., "Payment of rates," by deleting the reference to freight forwarders.

Subsection (j) amends section 10749 of title 49, U.S.C., by deleting limitations on the exchange of services and use of common carriers by freight forwarders.

Subsection (k) amends section 10762 of title 49, U.S.C., by removing the requirement that freight forwarders publish, file, and keep tariffs open for public inspection.

Subsection (l) amends section 10766 of title 49, U.S.C., "Freight forwarder traffic agreements". This subsection removes the requirement to file contracts between freight forwarders and motor carriers with the Commission, removes requirements that such contracts establish reasonable conditions and compensation, and also removes Commission authority to prescribe such conditions and compensation when it finds them unreasonable.

SECTION 8—LICENSING

Subsection (a) of this section amends section 10923 of title 49, U.S.C., by striking the language concerning entry requirements for freight forwarders.

Subsection (b) amends section 10925 of title 49, U.S.C., by removing language dealing with the effective periods and the conditions governing the operating authorities freight forwarders.

Subsection (c) amends section 10926 of title 49, U.S.C., by deleting requirements concerning transfers of certificates for freight forwarders.

Subsection (d) amends section 10927 of title 49, U.S.C., by removing the language dealing with security and insurance requirements for freight forwarders.

Subsection (e) amends section 10930 of title 49, U.S.C., by deleting the specified limits on who may simultaneously hold certificates and permits to provide freight forwarder transportation and rail, motor carrier, or water transportation.

Subsection (f) repeals section 10933 of title 49, U.S.C., "Authorizing abandonment of freight forwarder service".

SECTION 9—OPERATIONS OF CARRIERS

Subsection (a) of this section amends section 11101 of title 49, U.S.C., by removing the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission to prescribe requirements for continuous and adequate transportation service by freight forwarders, i.e., "common carrier obligation".

Subsection (b) repeals section 11127 of title 49, U.S.C., "Service of freight forwarders". This deals with authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission to suspend service requirements for freight forwarders during emergencies, and to establish terms of compensation for freight forwarder service during such periods.

Subsection (c) amends section 11141 of title 49, U.S.C., by making conforming changes by definitions.

Subsection (d) amends section 11142 of title 49, U.S.C., by removing Interstate Commerce Commission power to prescribe uniform accounting systems for freight forwarders.

SECTION 10—FINANCE

This section repeals section 11323 of title 49, U.S.C., "Limitation on ownership of other carriers by freight forwarders", thereby removing the prohibition against freight forwarders owning or controlling motor carriers or rail carriers.

SECTION 11—FEDERAL-STATE RELATIONS

Subsection (a) of this section amends section 11501 of title 49, U.S.C., by removing the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to prescribe rates, rules, classifications and practices of freight forwarders involved in both intrastate and interstate commerce, when it finds that State regulation is causing either unreasonable discrimination or is imposing an unreasonable burden on interstate commerce. This subsection also adds a new subsection (f) which prevents State and other political agencies from enacting or enforcing any regulations concerning interstate rates, routes or services that were subject to ICC jurisdiction prior to enactment of this Act. This subsection is intended to prevent states and other local governments from exercising regulatory authority over areas of interstate commerce that are being vacated by the Interstate Commerce Commission under this legislation.

Subsection (b) of this section amends section 11502 of title 49, U.S.C., by removing Interstate Commerce Commission power to confer and hold joint hearings with State authorities concerning freight forwarder matters.

Subsection (c) amends section 11505 of title 49, U.S.C., by removing the power of a State regulatory authority to bring civil action to enjoin the abandonment of service by a freight forwarder.

SECTION 12—ENFORCEMENT: INVESTIGATIONS, RIGHTS, AND REMEDIES

Subsection (a) amends section 11702 of title 49, U.S.C., by eliminating Interstate Commerce Commission's power to enforce regulations against freight forwarders.

Subsection (b) repeals section 11704 of title 49, U.S.C., "Action by a private person to enjoin abandonment of service". This pertains to freight forwarders, controlled by or under common control with common carriers by rail, motor or water.

Subsection (c) amends section 11705 of title 49, U.S.C., by rescinding the rights of private parties to relief and damages sustained by them as a result of an act or omission of freight forwarders in violation of the Interstate Commerce Act. This will not reduce rights of private parties to sue carriers under State contract or tort law.

Subsection (d) amends section 11707 of title 49, U.S.C., which provides the legal standards of liability of common carriers under receipts and bills of lading. Common carriers no longer subject to ICC jurisdiction will be subject to standards of liability under State law, including applicable sections of the Uniform Commercial Code.

Subsection (e) amends section 11708 of title 49, U.S.C., by deleting the reference to freight forwarders in private enforcement actions.

SECTION 13—CIVIL AND CRIMINAL PENALTIES

Subsection (a) of this section amends section 11904 of title 49, U.S.C., by removing provisions for penalties against freight forwarders for rate and discrimination violations of the Interstate Commerce Act.

Subsection (b) repeals section 11908 of title 49, U.S.C., "Abandonment of Service by Freight Forwarder". This section provides penalties against freight forwarders controlled by or under common control with common carriers by rail, motor and water who abandon service in violation of Interstate Commerce Commission public interest findings.

Subsection (c) amends section 11909 of title 49, U.S.C., by removing freight forwarders from the provisions of this section which provide penalties for failure to make reports required by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Subsection (d) amends section 11910 of title 49, U.S.C., by removing freight forwarders from the provisions of this section which provide penalties for unlawful disclosure of information.

Subsection (e) amends section 11914 of title 49, U.S.C., by removing freight forwarders from the general penalties section of the Interstate Commerce Act.

SECTION 14—EFFECTIVE DATE

This section provides that this Act shall take effect on July 1, 1985.●

By Mr. HOLLINGS (for himself, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. WEICKER, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. METZENBAUM, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. SASSER, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. FORD, Mr. SARBANES, and Mr. TSONGAS):

S. 2875. A bill to establish qualifications for individuals appointed to the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1985, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON OCEANS AND ATMOSPHERE ACT

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, today I introduce legislation to create a new National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere (NACOA) by requiring that members be subject to the advice and consent of the Senate and by providing for 13 members, a reduction from the 18 members on the current NACOA.

During the past two decades, Americans have shown increasingly how much they care about their natural resources. Poll after poll confirm the notion that Americans place great priority on environmental issues. They care greatly about the quality of their air and water. They worry about the destruction of wildlife and natural areas. And they demand that proper consideration be given to our environment in the quest for technological and economic progress in the years to come.

These concerns were reflected in the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere Act of 1971, the law which established NACOA and one which I authored. The act was one of three direct results of the Stratton Commission, which was established by Congress to examine all aspects of marine science and to develop an overall strategy which would provide the Nation with a well-integrated and centrally coordinated program in this area. The other results of the Stratton Commission's 1969 report were the creation of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration by Executive order, and legislation establishing the Coastal Zone Management Program, which I am proud to say I also authored.

The original NACOA, consisting of 25 members, was established with three purposes in mind. First, it would facilitate communication between the Federal Government and the oceanic and atmospheric communities. Second, it would provide Congress and the President with an honest source of information and advice concerning oceanic and atmospheric policies and programs. Finally, it was intended to bring about innovative policy leadership and new ideas regarding oceanic and atmospheric affairs.

In drafting this legislation, I took special care to emphasize the importance of experience and diversity among NACOA's membership. Let me read to you from the Senate report on the original legislation:

• • • members of the Advisory Committee shall be appointed by the President for staggered terms and shall be drawn from State and local government, industry, science, and other appropriate areas. It is intended that the membership should be broadly based both in terms of interest and geography in order to accomplish its primary advisory function. Recognizing the national concern for environmental quality, it is anticipated that the President will appoint a number of individuals to the Advisory Committee who are trained or experienced in conservation, ecology, and related fields concerned with the quality of the oceanic and atmospheric environment.

By 1977, it became clear that this language was not sufficient to prevent NACOA from falling prey to predominantly political appointments. So, in that year, Congress passed a bill I authored which abolished the existing committee and created a new 18-member NACOA. This time, I attempted to further clarify what Congress expected of the Presidential appointments to the committee. I quote the Senate report on that legislation:

These qualifications are included to make explicit the Committee's original intent that NACOA's members be experts or others very experienced in marine and atmospheric affairs or related fields. . . . the Committee does intend that most members be individuals with great expertise and knowledge in marine and atmospheric affairs. Such individuals are vital if NACOA is to provide the expert, useful, and timely assistance that the Advisory Committee was created to provide.

When this law was passed, I assumed that the language was clear. I took it for granted that Presidents would honor and respect the intent of Congress that the committee reflect varied interests and a high degree of expertise and integrity.

For a number of years, that faith was well rewarded. NACOA has seen numerous dedicated individuals who have served the committee and this Nation with great distinction. In recent years, the committee has produced some exceptionally fine commentary on oceanic and atmospheric matters.

For example, NACOA's study of the National Weather Service acted as a timely counterweight to a NOAA study which called for the Weather Service to be reduced to its most basic missions. The committee's assessment of the need for exclusive economic zone legislation has made a significant contribution to ocean policymaking with respect to the Nation's 200-mile offshore zone.

In addition, I admire the Committee's willingness to tackle the issue of ocean dumping of nuclear wastes, even though I strongly disagree with the April 1984, conclusion calling for a revision in the current U.S. policy of a moratorium on such dumping. In light of all the budget cuts in the research arms of EPA and NOAA, now is a very poor time to start revising that policy. Until we can prove without a doubt that dumping is not harmful, I see no reason why it should be allowed.

Under EPA in 1982, the Reagan administration was considering a radical loosening of restrictions on low-level nuclear dumping, and it took Congress to pass a 2-year moratorium on dumping. When you read the April NACOA report, it is not difficult to see how the Committee's objectivity is being distorted by the new appointments. The text of the report supports an evaluation of the scientific evidence to determine if low-level nuclear dumping can be done safely. However, the Committee's principal recommendation—which was added after the preparation of the text—is to revise the current ban. As I understand it, the writing of the text and the in-depth investigation of the issue were carried out by John Knauss and other highly regarded NACOA members who were held over while President Reagan was deciding whether to fill vacancies. The recommendation to revise the ban on dumping was made subsequently by the full NACOA panel which was dominated by the Reagan administration appointees.

In order for NACOA to continue its record of informed and independent review of our oceanic and atmospheric policies, it is important that qualifications for Committee membership—clearly described by Congress in 1971 and 1977—be respected by the President.

With his latest round of appointments, President Reagan has demonstrated that he has no intention of honoring the spirit of the law. The new Reagan NACOA is heavily weighted with members who are involved in offshore mineral exploration and development. There are no environmentalists, atmospheric experts, or commercial fishermen. And worst of all, the Committee Chairman is Anne Gorsuch Burford.

I was amazed by President Reagan's decision to appoint his former Environmental Protection Agency Administrator as NACOA Chairman. As the author of the NACOA legislation and one who takes a great deal of interest in ensuring the Committee's continued quality and integrity, I find this action reprehensible. I never thought it would be necessary to require that the Committee's members be subject to Senate confirmation. I always presumed the President would treat these kinds of appointments seriously and not use the appointment process as a device for the rehabilitation of someone like Anne Burford.

Maybe I should have expected it. When Mrs. Burford resigned as head of the EPA in the spring of 1983, Time magazine reported that the President told her he would eventually give her a part-time job on a Federal board or commission. Perhaps I was hoping for the best—maybe an appointment to the Citizens' Stamp Advisory Committee or something of the kind. A few weeks ago, right here on the floor during debate on the appropriations bill for State, Justice, and Commerce, we talked about the International Office on Epizootics. I'm still not quite certain what that is—I believe it has something to do with animal disease—but maybe we can get Mrs. Burford an appointment to that. Is that possible? Or what about the President's Council on Integrity and Efficiency? Maybe she could learn something there.

During her 22 month tenure as EPA Administrator, Anne Burford did a great deal to ruin the integrity of that Agency. Enforcement of antipollution laws became a joke. The conduct of science fell to its lowest level ever. And during this time there were numerous allegations that the Agency's leadership was acting in concert with some of the Nation's major polluters in a policy of nonintervention and nonenforcement.

One example of this occurred in my own State of South Carolina early last year. In an official letter, Mrs. Burford said that the EPA agreed with the Energy Department that restarting a major nuclear reactor in the State would not significantly affect the environment and thus no environmental impact statement was required. This position was directly contrary to that taken by the Agency's field staff, including its lawyers, who spoke of ground water contamination and other serious problems. Yet, in order to toe the Reagan administration's party line, Mrs. Burford suppressed the scientific and legal findings of the EPA's own experts.

I am nonplussed by the President's failure to consult with his own top environmental officials before choosing Mrs. Burford for this post. Even Bill Ruckelshaus was shocked when he heard about it. Now Bill is a gentleman of the highest integrity, and he commands a great deal of respect from both sides of the aisle in this body—that's why the President appointed him to straighten out the EPA after the Burford disaster. He has admitted that Mrs. Burford is not a good choice. The fact that he wasn't consulted about it demonstrates to me that his appointment to EPA was more cosmetic than anything else.

It is downright frightening to think of Anne Burford as Chairman of NACOA. She has the worst record on the environment of any administrator that we have ever had here in Washington. Like Ronald Reagan, she is a dismantler. The President couldn't eliminate the EPA outright, so he sent Mrs. Burford there to accomplish the job from within. I suspect that since the Reagan administration has proposed the elimination of funding for NACOA, her mission there may be a similar one.

So this appointment may not be just an easy political payoff to Mrs. Burford after all. We can view it as a blatant attempt by the President to accomplish a political objective in an area that Congress has tried in the past to remove from the political realm. It is a further manifestation of the Reagan creed that the fox should guard the chicken coop on environmental matters.

My legislation would stop this from happening at NACOA by requiring that all committee members pass Senate muster. If I had foreseen the events of today, I would have included advice and consent in the original authorizing legislation. But I exercised faith that subsequent Presidents would honor the intent of the law that the NACOA membership reflect a high caliber of expertise and integrity. Obviously, faith is not enough for this President. He has violated the clearly stated intent of the selection qualifications for this committee. For this reason, I urge my colleagues to give swift approval to this legislation.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I am pleased to join the ranking Democratic member of the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, Mr. HOLLINGS, in introducing legislation to reconstitute and authorize funding for the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere.

The legislation would convert NACOA from an 18-member body, appointed by the President without advice and consent of the Senate, into a 13-member body whose appointments would be subject to Senate approval. The duties of the Committee, and the legislated qualifications of its members would remain essentially the same as they have been. NACOA would be charged with providing objective advice to the Congress, the President, and the Department of Commerce on national policy on the ocean and the atmosphere.

In the past, NACOA has fulfilled this function admirably. On many occasions, it has come before the Commerce Committee to testify about oceans and atmospheric programs of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. NACOA has rightfully condemned the administration's efforts to gut critical ocean and atmospheric programs of NOAA. Of particular concern to me, I might add, has been NACOA's continuing interest in furthering research into ocean dumping, which so threatens the shore of New Jersey.

Mr. President, NACOA's role as an effective, independent, and expert voice on matters pertaining to the atmosphere and the oceans has been seriously undermined by the President's appointment of Anne Burford as NACOA chairperson. During Mrs. Burford's tenure as head of the Environmental Protection Agency, the protection of our environment was sacrificed while the Agency entered into sweetheart deals with industry and put politics above pollution control.

The membership of NACOA, by law, is reserved for those with particular expertise in the marine and atmospheric sciences and in local governmental functions in the field. Mrs. Burford's predecessor, Dr. John Knauss, is a distinguished scientist. His qualifications are typical of the people who have served on NACOA. It is just such qualifications that Mrs. Burford lacks.

Mr. President, this legislation is made necessary by the President's utter disregard for the appropriate role of NACOA. This week, by an overwhelming vote, the Senate expressed its view that the appointment of Mrs. Burford should be withdrawn. The President has refused. I am sorry, but I am not surprised. In the past, the administration has sought to deny NACOA funding. Now, with the appointment of Anne Burford, the President would disable the committee in a different way.

By allowing the Senate to review and reject appointees like Anne Burford, this legislation would ensure the continued independence of NACOA, and its contribution to ocean and atmospheric policymaking of our Nation. I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I am pleased to be an original cosponsor of the bill being introduced today by Senator HOLLINGS which would reestablish and provide authorizations for the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere [NACOA].

This bill would ensure that this important advisory body is not misused in the future and, in my judgment, its introduction is long overdue.

It reduces the size of NACOA from 18 members to 13 members on the assumption that a smaller group will be able to be more active in advising the President on environmental matters concerning the oceans and atmosphere.

It explicitly requires that those persons chosen by the President for NACOA have background relating to oceanic and atmospheric policy and are "eminently qualified" in one or more of the following disciplines and fields: Marine science and technology; marine industry; marine-related State and local governmental functions; coastal zone management; atmospheric science; or atmospheric-related State and local governmental functions.

Most importantly—given events of the last several weeks—the bill requires that members appointed to a newly reconstituted NACOA will be subject to the advice and consent of the U.S. Senate. It also requires that NACOA submit an annual report to the President and to the Congress setting forth an assessment of the status of the Nation's marine and atmospheric activities. A total of $630,000 is authorized for appropriation for NACOA for fiscal year 1985.

The need for this legislation became clear earlier this month when President Reagan appointed Anne Burford as Chairperson of the Committee.

The President's appointment of Mrs. Burford to this position of responsibility was a step backward not only for the cause of environmental protection but for Mr. Reagan's own credibility on the issue.

Mrs. Burford resigned just over a year ago as head of the Environmental Protection Agency under heavy criticism for her management of that important institution. In returning her to a position of influence in the same field, the President greatly strengthened doubts about his commitment to safeguarding the environment and applying the laws designed for that purpose.

31-059 O-87-38 (Pt. 15)

In the eyes of the American public, which for well over a decade has overwhelmingly supported protection of the environment and legislation to achieve that goal, Mrs. Burford had no credentials and no place in such an effort. Her appointment was a repudiation of the clear intent of the Congress and the people of this country on a matter of primary importance.

As Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, Mrs. Burford showed little respect for the responsibilities entrusted to her under law. Under her leadership, enforcement of environmental statutes decreased drastically, as did funding for the implementation of EPA's legally mandated duties. According to sworn testimony of two career officials, the EPA pursued a deliberate policy not to implement the Superfund law aggressively during the Burford tenure.

For over a decade the National Advisory Committee on Oceans and Atmosphere has played an important role in shaping future environmental policy. Past board members have had considerable expertise in the marine and atmospheric sciences and have maintained a nonpartisan approach to environmental issues. The appointment of Mrs. Burford to the Committee is inappropriate based on her past performance in the field of environmental policy and the qualifications of past members of the Board; her designation as Chairperson adds insult to injury.

National advisory committees can result in the formulation of sound national policies if they are responsibly constituted, and if policymakers consult with them and heed their advice.

National advisory committees which become the dumping ground for former Government officials lacking competence and sound policies gives all government a bad name.

The bill being introduced today will ensure that NACOA serves the public good, not the ends of those wishing to resurrect their squandered reputations.

I urge my colleagues to give it their full support.

By Mr. PERCY:

S. 2876. A bill to amend title 18, United States Code, to improve collection and administration of criminal fines, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CRIMINAL FINE ENFORCEMENT ACT

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, today I introduce a bill substantially similar to the Criminal Fine Collection Act, S. 1976, which I introduced last year and whose terms were incorporated in S. 1762 when it passed the Senate. At that time, S. 1976 had 32 cosponsors.

This new bill is identical to one approved by the House Judiciary Committee, and which soon should be approved by the entire House. I would like to congratulate the outstanding Congresswoman from Illinois, LYNN MARTIN, and Congressmen CONYERS and BOUCHER, for their success to date in moving this legislation.

As soon as this bill is enacted by the House, I will ask that it be given immediate attention here. With crime—especially narcotics crime—as serious a problem as it is, and with so many criminal fines going uncollected, we must get this bill to the President's desk without delay.

By Mr. BRADLEY:

S. 2877. A bill relating to the tariff treatment of certain canned mushrooms; to the Committee on Finance.

TARIFF TREATMENT OF CERTAIN CANNED MUSHROOMS

● Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a bill which will insure that importers which have products in transit when tariffs are changed under an administrative action are able to receive the tariff in effect when the contract to ship was signed. The impetus for this bill comes from the increase in the tariff on certain canned mushrooms in 1980.

This bill in intended to allow all similarly situated U.S. importers to receive the tariff treatment contemplated when fixed priced contracts were made. This bill will allow such importers to be fairly treated by not charging them with customs duties they could not have contemplated, and will not harm domestic producing interests. The conditions imposed were suggested by the administration in a letter from the U.S. Trade Representative to Senator RUSSELL LONG on March 22, 1982. This bill will cover entries numbered 81-118906-8, 81-1-00118528, 81-113856-9, 81-116071-5, 81-1-00277381, 81-00118817, 81-00276882, 81-113659, 81-118604-5, 81-1-00534169, 81-1728076, 81-1-00118627, and 81-1-0018814—covering canned mushrooms.●

By Mr. HATCH (for himself and Mr. QUAYLE):

S. 2878. A bill to amend the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act to establish conditions for the export of drugs; by unanimous consent, referred to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

PHARMACEUTICAL EXPORT AMENDMENTS

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce today the Pharmaceutical Export Reform Act of 1984.

Under current U.S. law, new drugs and other important pharmaceuticals may not be exported for sale abroad unless they have already received approval for marketing in the United States by the Food and Drug Administration. This restriction applies even though the particular drug is already approved in the country to which it would be exported. The current policy also prohibits the export of drugs which may be vital in treating foreign diseases which do not exist here, and for which no manufacturer would have reason to request FDA approval for use in the United States.

The only manner in which a U.S. firm may sell its new product in those foreign countries where it is approved is by establishing manufacturing facilities abroad. In many cases, U.S. approval of a drug does not come until a few months, a year or longer after the company has already set up an overseas factory to produce the drug.

As a result, this limitation on exports has had a significant adverse impact upon the U.S. economy and on the international competitive position of American firms. It results in the loss of American jobs and domestic capital investment. It also results in an undesirable flow of American research and manufacturing technology overseas and has a negative impact upon U.S. balance of trade. Our current policy does not prohibit foreign consumers from gaining access to these drugs—it simply locks the United States out of competition for jobs and revenues. This is pointless public policy.

This damage to the U.S. economy is not a speculative one. Our loss is very real. At the end of my remarks, I ask unanimous consent to have printed a statement that describes several specific examples of the adverse impact of current drug export restrictions.

The Pharmaceutical Export Reform Act would rectify this anomalous situation. It would permit the export of new drugs not yet approved in the United States, subject in most cases to ongoing FDA review and under restrictions that protect against any danger to the health and safety of either Americans or foreign citizens. Indeed, in allowing production facilities to be located in this country, where they will be subject to FDA's good manufacturing practices, the bill in many cases assures foreign consumers of a better quality product than if the facility had been located in their own country.

This bill is particularly necessary in the new area of biotechnology. It will allow the technology and jobs to remain in the United States by permitting manufacturers to export products, under carefully limited circumstances, prior to the Food and Drug Administration's approval for domestic use.

The bill is the negotiated product of lengthy deliberations among Members of Congress and industry with diverse points of view and I believe it fairly meets the traditional objections to the export of unapproved drugs. It imposes sufficient conditions and provides adequate safeguards to protect the health and safety of both American and foreign citizens by limiting exports of drugs to those that have been approved by the regulatory authorities of a developed country requiring adequate proof of safety and effectiveness.

The bill in draft form was the subject of a hearing in the Labor and Human Resources Committee on June 28, 1984. As a result of that hearing, and particularly in response to the testimony of Dr. Phillee, the bill as introduced contains several changes.

First, it now provides that the prohibition on exports where a drug has been affirmatively banned includes adverse actions by other coutries with responsible FDA-like regulatory agencies, as well as by our own FDA.

Second, the exception for export of banned drugs under particular foreign circumstances now requires a finding by the Secretary of HHS or of Agriculture that export is justified to promote the public health of the importing country. Language is added making explicit the agency's authority to rescind such a finding if new information subsequently changes the agency's assessment. Third, it provides that drugs exported to unlisted nations must not only be the subject of an investigation new drug exemption they must have completed the pharmacological testing phase of the process. Fourth, notice of intent to export to unlisted countries must not only be filed with the Department of HHS or Agriculture, but the appropriate agency is required to publish the notice in the Federal Register.

Fifth, the bill in a new section 3 specifies eight countries which are deemed to meet the criteria for listing under the bill, unless FDA within 90 days makes a finding that one or more should not qualify. The Agency will then proceed to consider the addition of other nations to the list as the bill provides. The nations named in section 3 are those whose regulatory agencies are highly regarded by experts in the field. However, the exclusion of a country's name from section 3 is not meant to indicate that it should not be added thereafter following review by FDA of the particular regulatory structure and operation. It is simply felt that scrutiny is advisable for nations not named in section 3 before adding them to the list.

The bill will undoubtedly undergo additional refinement as it moves through Congress. I feel it is good bill, and I encourage my fellow Senators to join in the debate on the important issues it raises.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill, and an explanatory statement and analysis be inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks, as well as the statement I mentioned earlier on the adverse impact of existing law.

There being not objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2878

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Pharmaceutical Export Amendments of 1984."

SEC. 2. Section 801 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 381) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e)(1) A drug (including a biological product) intended for human or animal use which—

"(A) requires approval by the Secretary under section 505 or section 512, or

"(B) requires licensing by the Secretary under section 351 of the Public Health Service Act or the Secretary of Agriculture under the Act of March 4, 1913 (known as the Virus Serum Toxin Act), before it may be shipped in interstate commerce for export to a foreign country and which does not have such approval or license may, notwithstanding such section or Act, be shipped for export to a foreign country described in paragraph (2) if the drug meets the requirements of paragraph (3).

"(2)(A) A foreign country to which a drug may be exported under paragraph (1) is a foreign country—

"(i) included in the list established by the Secretary under subparagraph (B); or

"(ii) any other foreign country if—

"(I) the drug meets the requirements of subparagraph (C); and

"(II) the government of the other foreign country has provided documentation that the drug may be lawfully offered for sale in such country.

"(B)(i) The Secretary shall establish and keep current a list of foreign countries to which drugs may be shipped for export under subparagraph (A)(i). In establishing and keeping current such list, the Secretary may, in his discretion, consult with experts in the field of drug regulation. The first list of foreign countries to which such shipment for export is permitted shall include these foreign countries which are determined by the Secretary to have an adequate governmental health authority to approve drugs and shall be established before the expiration of the ninety-day period beginning on the date of enactment of this subsection. The Secretary shall provide a reasonable opportunity for public comment before the list is published.

"(ii) The Secretary shall add a foreign country to the list established under clause (i) if the Secretary determines the foreign country has an adequate governmental health authority to approve drugs, and the Secretary shall remove a foreign country from such list if the Secretary determines that the foreign country does not have an adequate governmental health authority to approve drugs. Any addition to or removal from the list shall be promulgated after an opportunity for public comment.

"(C) A drug may be shipped for export under subparagraph (A)(ii) to a foreign country which is not included in the list established under subparagraph (B) only if—

"(i) the drug is approved or licensed in a foreign country included in the list established under subparagraph (B), and the labeling for such drug which is approved or licensed by such listed foreign country is to be used in such other foreign county except for translation or other changes made to meet legal requirements of such other foreign country respecting information not related to the safety or effectiveness of the drug;

"(ii) an exemption from the approval or licensing requirements described in paragraph (1) exists for investigational use of the drug in the United States or an application for such approval or licensing has been submitted or approved for the drug and has not been the subject of final action by the Secretary or the Secretary of Agriculture denying, withdrawing, or suspending approval or licensing on the basis of safety or effectiveness or otherwise banning the drug, or the Secretary has issued a notice of a determination that the diseases or health conditions for which the drug is intended exist in such other foreign country but not in the United States and such notice of determination has not been withdrawn;

"(iii) with respect to any drug intended for human use, sufficient Phase I clinical investigation has been completed to permit the initiation of Phase II or Phase III clinical studies, as those phases are defined by regulations promulgated by the Secretary; and

"(iv) the drug is not the subject of a notice by the Secretary or the Secretary of Agriculture, issued within 60 days after the notice of intent to ship for export the drug to that foreign country is received under paragraph (3)(H) (which time may be extended an additional 60 days by written notice by the Secretary or the Secretary of Agriculture), of a determination that the sale of the drug in that foreign country is contrary to its public health and safety.

"(3) A drug may be shipped for export to a foreign country under paragraph (1) only if, in addition to the applicable requirements of paragraph (2)—

"(A) it is not the subject of final action by the Secretary or the Secretary of Agriculture denying, withdrawing, or suspending approval or licensing on the basis of safety or effectiveness or otherwise banning the drug or, if it is the subject of such action, the Secretary or the Secretary of Agriculture has issued a notice of a determination that the export of such drug is justified to promote the public health in the country of import because of particular diseases or health conditions in the country of import that do not exist in the United States and such notice of determination has not been withdrawn;

"(B) it is not the subject of a notice by the Secretary or the Secretary of Agriculture of a determination that the manufacture of the drug in the United States for export is contrary to public health and safety in the United States;

"(C) it is not the subject of final action by the governmental health authority responsible for approving drugs in a foreign country which is included in the list established under paragraph (2)(B) determining that the drug is unsafe or ineffective or, if it is the subject of such action, the Secretary or the Secretary of Agriculture has issued a notice of a determination that the export of such drug is justified to promote the public health in the country of import because of particular diseases or health conditions in the country of import that do not exist in the country which made the determination that the drug is unsafe or ineffective and such notice of determination has not been withdrawn;

"(D) it accords to the specifications of the foreign purchaser;

"(E) it is not in conflict with the laws of the country to which it is intended for export;

"(F) it is labeled on the outside of the shipping package that it is intended for export and is not approved for commercial marketing in the United States;

"(G) it has not been or is not introduced or offered for introduction into domestic commerce; and

"(H) the manufacturer or distributor of the drug has submitted at least 60 days prior to the date of first export of the drug to each foreign country, to the Secretary or the Secretary of Agriculture a notice of intent to export which—

"(i) describes the drug, identifies the establishment where it is manufactured for export, and states that the drug is not in conflict with the laws of the country to which it is intended for export; and—

"(ii) in the case of a drug to be exported to a foreign country not included in the list established under paragraph (2)(B), includes a copy of the labeling specified in paragraph (2)(C)(i) which is approved or licensed in a foreign country included in such list and a copy of the documentation specified in paragraph (2)(A)(ii)(II) that the drug may be lawfully offered for sale in such country.

Within 30 days of the receipt of any such notice of intent to export to a foreign country not included in the list established under paragraph (2)(B), the Secretary or the Secretary of Agriculture shall publish in the Federal Register a notice of such receipt which shall describe the drug, state the country to which the drug is intended for export, and specify where the notice of intent to export may be examined.

"(4) A change in the labeling of a drug which has been approved or licensed as described in paragraph (1) will not prevent its export to a foreign country if the change is a translation or other change made to meet the legal requirements of such country respecting information which does not relate to the safety or effectiveness of the drug.

"(5) The Secretary shall establish procedures for—

"(A) periodically informing foreign governments of significant regulatory decisions, actions, and information respecting drugs in the United States;

"(B) periodically sending to foreign governments the required labeling for drugs approved or licensed by the Secretary or the Secretary of Agriculture; and

"(C) responding promptly to requests from foreign governments for available information on any drug imported from the United States.

Under such procedures no foreign government shall be furnished any information which is not available for public disclosure in the United States."

SEC. 3. The first list of foreign countries established by the Secretary of Health and Human Services under section 801(e)(2)(B)(i) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, as added by section 2 of the Pharmaceutical Export Amendments of 1984, shall include the following foreign countries unless such Secretary determines that one or more of such foreign countries does not have an adequate governmental health authority to approve drugs: Australia, Canada, Federal Republic of Germany, France, Japan, Sweden, Switzerland, and United Kingdom.

PHARMACEUTICAL EXPORT AMENDMENTS OF 1984—EXPLANATORY STATEMENT

These amendments are designed to address an anomaly in current law, which prohibits United States manufacturers from producing important pharmaceutical products in this country for export prior to their approval for marketing in this country by the Secretary of Health and Human Services (HHS) (who has delegated this authority to the Food and Drug Administration (FDA)) or the United States Department of Agriculture (USDA). American companies must therefore produce these drugs abroad for distribution to worldwide markets where they are already permitted to be marketed. This results in the needless export of American technology and jobs, without any corresponding public health benefits, at a time of increasing worldwide competition.

The need for these amendments is particularly acute in the emerging new area of biotechnology. Important drugs produced through recombinant DNA and other new biotechnology techniques must be manufactured abroad for sale throughout the world until they are approved by FDA or USDA. This amendment would allow the technology and jobs to remain in the United States by permitting manufacturers to export such products, under carefully limited circumstances, prior to FDA or USDA approval for domestic use.

STATUTE AMENDED

These provisions amend section 801 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, 21 U.S.C. 381, which relates to the effect of that statute on other existing laws.

CURRENT LAW ON APPROVAL OR LICENSING REQUIREMENTS FOR DRUGS

Under current law, three separate statutes are involved in the regulation and approval of drugs in the United States. Drugs for human and animal use are regulated under the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act of 1938 (the FD&C Act), 21 U.S.C. 321 et seq. Human biological products are regulated under the Public Health Service Act (the PHS Act), 42 U.S.C. 262. Animal biological products that move in interstate commerce are regulated under the Act of Congress of March 4, 1913, relating to virus, serum, toxin, and analogous products for domestic animals (the VS&T Act), 21 U.S.C. 151 et seq. The FD&C Act and the PHS Act are administered by HHS, which has delegated that authority to FDA. The VS&T Act is administered by USDA.

Accordingly, throughout the amendments reference is made to both HHS and USDA. Each would retain current departmental jurisdiction over the respective drug products involved.

CURRENT LAW ON EXPORT OF DRUGS NOT APPROVED FOR DOMESTIC USE

Under section 801(d) (1) of the FD&C Act, 21 U.S.C. 381(d)(1), a new drug or new animal drug may not be exported from the United States until it has been approved or licensed by FDA or USDA for use in the United States. In contrast, antibiotic drugs for human use not approved for domestic use adulterated or misbranded drugs, and drug intermediates may be exported to foreign countries where they are permitted to be marketed if they meet the specifications of the foreign purchaser, do not conflict with the foreign law, are labeled for export, and are not sold in domestic commerce.

SCOPE OF PRODUCTS COVERED BY THE EXPORT PROVISIONS OF THE AMENDMENTS

The amendments are limited specifically to those drugs which, under current law, are prohibited from export because they have not been approved or licensed for interstate distribution. This includes two types of products. First, it includes those products which have been approved under specific conditions and with specific labeling in the United States, but which are shipped in a different form, or are translated or labeled for other uses or in different ways, for distribution abroad. For example, it would apply to a new drug approved in the United States, whose labeling is translated into a foreign language and otherwise is changed to meet the regulatory requirements and conditions of a foreign country before it is exported. It would also apply to a new drug approved in final dosage form in the United States, but which is shipped abroad in any unfinished form which FDA regards as an unapproved new drug, where it is to be further processed or packaged before it is put into final dosage form. Second, it also includes those products which are not yet approved under any conditions in the United States, and which are thus not used at all in this country or are used only for investigational purposes in this country. For example, it would apply to a new drug exported to England, in partially processed, bulk, or finished dosage form, for investigational or approved uses there but not yet approved for any use in the United States and thus not used at all in this country or limited to investigational use in this country.

The amendments apply to drugs for both human and animal uses, in partially processed, bulk, or finished dosage form. They include biological products as well as nonbiological products. The amendments do not apply, however, to antibiotic drugs for human use, to drug intermediates, or to any other drugs that are presently allowed to be exported under section 801(d)(1) of the FD&C Act. All of these products remain subject to the current provisions in section 801(d)(1) of the FD&C Act, already described above.

EXPORT OF DRUGS WITH INSIGNIFICANT LABELING CHANGES FOR EXISTING UNITED STATES APPROVALS

In order to market drugs internationally in an economical way after they are approved or licensed in the United States, United States manufacturers need to ship them abroad with labeling that meets the requirements of the country of import. The labeling approved or licensed in the United States must be translated before it can be used in any foreign country where foreign languages are used. Foreign customs requirements and other foreign laws and regulations also frequently require additional minor changes in labeling. For example, a foreign country may require the addition of a registration number, a foreign address, or other information relating uniquely to that country.

All of these labeling changes involve variations from the existing United States approval for the drug and thus technically make the drug illegal and ineligible for export under current law. None of these labeling changes results in the drug being unsafe or ineffective, however, nor would it be wise to spend scarce FDA or USDA resources on approving each minor labeling change of this nature before a drug may be exported.

Accordingly, the amendments provide that a drug which has an existing United States approval or license may be exported where the only change relates to the use of labeling which is translated and otherwise is changed only to comply with legal requirements of the foreign country involved respecting information not relating to the safety or effectiveness of the drug. Only labeling changes that are required by the foreign country as a condition before importation is permitted would be allowed under this provision. In order to qualify for the exemption established under this provision, such labeling changes may not involve the addition of indications or other claims not permitted in the United States, or the deletion or revision of warnings, contraindications, and adverse reactions that are required in the United States, or any other change relating to safety and effectiveness. Under this provision, it is intended that the basic nature of the labeling approved in the United States will remain unchanged when it is used abroad.

The amendments thus assure that, when this provision is invoked, the drug and its labeling abroad will be the same as the drug and its labeling as approved in the United States. Under these very limited circumstances, the drugs may be exported with the translated and revised labeling without any further regulatory requirements. Because the foreign labeling remains the same as the United States labeling in all respects relating to safety and effectiveness, there is no need for the notification requirements and other regulatory controls, described below, that are imposed under these amendments on the export of drugs not subject to United States approvals or with significant changes from United States approvals.

EXPORT OF DRUGS NOT SUBJECT TO UNITED STATES APPROVALS OR WITH SIGNIFICANT CHANGES FROM UNITED STATES APPROVALS

Not all drugs exported from the United States are or can be shipped in a form or with labeling that in all pertinent respects follows an existing approval in the United States. For some, there is no final action in the United States either approving or disapproving the drug. For others, the United States approval is different than the approvals granted in major foreign countries which have their own sophisticated drug approval process. For still others, the drug must be shipped abroad in an unfinished form that is regarded by FDA as an unapproved new drug, for further processing and packaging. In all of these instances, greater regulatory control is needed to provide adequate assurance that unsafe and ineffective drugs are not exported. The remainder of the amendments is devoted to providing that assurance.

Countries to which export is permitted under this provision: The amendments do not permit indiscriminate export of such unapproved drugs to all foreign countries. Export of these drugs is carefully limited. The conditions which must be satisfied before such a drug may be exported differ for two different categories of foreign countries. All of the applicable conditions must be satisfied before export is permitted.

First, export is permitted to a foreign country included on a list established and kept current by HHS of foreign countries which have an adequate governmental health authority to approve drugs. In compiling the initial list and in later determining whether to add countries to it or to delete countries from it. HHS may, in its discretion, obtain the recommendations of experts on foreign drug regulation.

In developing the initial list, it is expected that HHS will first give attention to major nations which are known by FDA to have well-established drug approval processes. To expedite the establishment of the initial list, the amendments specify eight foreign countries that have been identified by experts in the field of drug regulation as generally recognized as having sound drug regulatory systems. These eight countries are to be included in the initial list unless HHS determines that one or more of them does not meet the criteria for such listing. This initial list can thus be established rather quickly.

No such list could be expected to be complete or to remain static. Accordingly, the legislation authorizes HHS to amend the list from time to time after it is established, either to add countries to it or to remove countries from it, depending upon an HHS determination of the adequacy of government health authorities in foreign counties to approve drugs. It is intended that HHS will exercise independent judgment as to the adequacy of government health authorities in each nation.

The amendments purposely do not establish rigid criteria for determining what foreign health authorities should be considered adequate to approve drugs. It is intended that those authorities be concerned with public health and safety, rather than with licensing for purposes of revenue and that they have the capacity to review significant issues involving the safety and effectiveness of drugs. To be listed, a foreign country must have in place both regulatory procedures sufficient to assure adequate scientific review of the preclinical and clinical studies relating to the safety and effectiveness of drugs before they are approved for marketing, and trained personnel with sufficient scientific knowledge and experience to implement those procedures. It is not intended that, to be listed, a foreign country must have regulatory authority identical to FDA, because the regulatory laws and administrative requirements even in sophisticated countries throughout the world differ widely. FDA's extensive experience with foreign regulatory agencies, assisted by the recommendation of experts where appropriate, will enable HHS to exercise sound discretion in establishing and revising the list.

In order to assure that the amendments will go into effect promptly, they provide that the initial list must be established by HHS within 90 days after the date of enactment. It is expected that HHS can readily meet this deadline for a number of major foreign countries, including the eight countries specified in the legislation, and that those which require a slightly longer period can be acted upon a short while later. To make certain that there are no unnecessarily lengthy and complicated procedures for establishing the initial list, the amendment allows HHS to adopt whatever procedures it concludes to be appropriate for this purpose. It is required only that HHS provide a reasonable opportunity for public comment prior to establishing the inital list. For example, HHS might publish a notice giving interested persons an opportunity to comment on the eight countries specified in the legislation and to suggest other appropriate foreign countries for inclusion on the initial list. Thereafter, any amendment of the list must be done by informal notice-and-comment rulemaking under 5 U.S.C. 553.

In the event that any person wishes to contest the inclusion or exclusion of a particular foreign country, a declaratory judgment action will be available under the Administrative Procedure Act. HHS must be prepared to show that its action was not arbitrary or capricious, based on the administrative record it has created on the matter. Current FDA procedural regulations properly recognize that any person is affected by, and thus has standing to obtain judicial review of, final Agency action of this nature.

Second, there will be a large number of foreign countries not included on the list established by HHS but to which export of such drugs may well be justified. Because these countries have not been determined to have their own adequate governmental health authority to regulate such drugs, the amendments impose five additional requirements for export to such countries. These requirements are cumulative, and all must be satisfied before export is permitted to an unlisted foreign country.

The first requirement is that the drug, including its labeling, must be approved or licensed in at least one of the foreign countries that is on the HHS list, thus assuring that at least one adequate foreign regulatory agency has reviewed and approved it. Although the labeling could be translated into another language and otherwise changed to meet local legal requirements, contraindications, warnings, and adverse reactions could not be deleted, and indications or other claims could not be added, because it would then become a different product than was approved or licensed by that foreign regulatory agency.

Under well-established judicial precedent, the term "labeling" has very broad scope, and includes all promotional material in any way accompanying or disseminated with the drug. The courts and FDA have determined that labeling need not be attached to or shipped with the drug, as long as it is associated with the drug when the drug is prescribed, purchased, or used. For example, any submission made by a pharmaceutical company to a compilation of drug information for use by physicians and other health professionals, comparable to the Physicians Desk Reference in this country, would be considered labeling for a drug. It is intended that a broad interpretation of labeling apply to the provisions of this legislation.

Prior to United States approval of a drug, it can be shipped from the United States to an unlisted foreign country only with labeling approved in a particular listed foreign country. The drug company cannot pick and choose among various portions of labeling approved in different listed foreign countries. The company must decide on the labeling approved in a particular listed foreign country and follow that labeling completely (except for translation and any changes required by local law) for the drug shipped to a specific unlisted foreign country.

After United States approval of a drug, it can be shipped from the United States to an unlisted foreign country in one of two different ways. First, it can be shipped with the labeling approved in the United States (except for translation and any changes required by local law). Second, it can be shipped with the same type of labeling that could be used if there were no United States approval, i.e., the labeling approved in a particular listed foreign country.

Thus, shipment of a drug from the United States to an unlisted foreign country is carefully controlled. In no instance can labeling be used that is not approved either in the United States or in a foreign country with an adequate governmental health authority to approve drugs.

The second requirement is that the drug may not be exported to any country not on the HHS list of countries with an adequate drug regulatory system, unless the drug is the subject of an investigational exemption for testing being conducted in the United States during the time the drug is being exported, or an application has been submitted for United States approval or licensing, or HHS has determined that the drug may nonetheless be exported because of particular diseases or health conditions, in the specific countries to which the drug is intended for export, that do not exist in the United States. This provision, which is in addition to the requirement that the drug be approved by a listed foreign country, provides further assurance that unsafe or ineffective drugs will not be exported to foreign countries that do not have their own adequate drug approval system. For example, if an IND exists for a human drug, under which clinical testing is being conducted in the United States, FDA is already exercising regulatory surveillance over the drug and is in a position to suspend the IND (thus also automatically suspending further export to unlisted countries), ban export of the drug to unlisted foreign countries, or provide relevant information on the drug to unlisted foreign countries, under appropriate circumstances. Similarly, if an NDA has been submitted or approved in the United States for one use and the drug has been approved for other uses in a listed foreign country, the existence of the United States NDA is sufficient to assure adequate knowledge and control by FDA for purposes of preventing improper exports under this amendment.

The IND or NDA must cover the United States use, but need not cover the foreign shipments as well. Nor is it necessary that the uses covered by the IND or NDA in the United States specifically involve every aspect of the uses of the drug abroad. The general requirement of a United States IND or NDA is sufficient to assure that adequate FDA regulatory surveillance is maintained over the drug for the broad purpose of preventing unwarranted shipments of unsafe or ineffective products to unlisted foreign countries. The IND or NDA must remain in effect, and not be suspended, revoked, withdrawn or otherwise become inactive, to satisfy this requirement.

On occasion, drugs will be useful in foreign countries but are not needed in this country. Major tropical diseases still afflict millions abroad but have no counterpart here and thus drugs for their control would not be subject to an IND or NDA in the United States. Under these circumstances, HHS may make a determination that export is permitted to specified unlisted foreign countries, even though there is no IND or NDA here, because of the unique foreign diseases or health conditions that justify a different benefit/risk ratio in those particular countries. That determination may be withdrawn, which would result in an immediate ban on export.

The third requirement is that, before a human drug may be exported to an unlisted foreign country, sufficient Phase I clinical investigation must be completed to permit initiation of Phase II of Phase III clinical studies. Current and proposed new FDA regulations define these phases and thus no additional regulations will be needed under this provision.

The required Phase I investigation may be undertaken anywhere in the world, as long as it is of sufficient quantity and quality to permit the initiation of Phase II or Phase III studies under FDA requirements. The provision does not require that all Phase I investigation be completed, however, because clinical investigation is an ongoing process and some aspects of Phase I testing might be continued or reinstituted long after Phase II or Phase III testing is permitted or begun. Where an IND for Phase II or Phase III has become effective, of course, or where an NDA had been submitted, this requirement would clearly be met.

The fourth requirement is that the drug may not be exported to any country not on the HHS list of countries with an adequate drug regulatory system if FDA or USDA determines that the sale of the drug in that country is contrary to its public health and safety. Any such determination relating to particular unlisted foreign countries to which export is prohibited must be made by FDA or USDA within 60 days after receipt of the required notice of intent to export to that country, but either agency may extend that time period for an additional 60 days by written notice if further time is needed to review the matter and make a decision. A drug that is acceptable for marketing in more sophisticated countries might present a risk to public health and safety in underdeveloped countries. For example, a drug in powder form, which required mixing with water just prior to administration, could present a hazard in those specific countries where the local water is contaminated. This provision assures that FDA and USDA can prevent exportation to particular foreign countries not included on the HHS list where marketing is determined to be contrary to the public health and safety in those countries.

The fifth requirement is that a responsible official of the government of the unlisted foreign country to which the drug is exported must provide written documentation that the drug may lawfully be offered for sale in the country. The exporter must submit this documentation to FDA or USDA as part of its notice of intent to export the drug.

These provisions, together with the limitations on the types of drugs permitted to be exported, will assure that indiscriminate exportation of inappropriate products cannot occur.

Limitations on drugs permitted to be exported under this provision: The amendments impose eight separate limitations upon the drugs that are permitted to be exported, in order to protect foreign countries against the importation of unsafe or ineffective products and to protect the United States against diversion of unapproved products into domestic channels or significant domestic health and safety problems. These limitations incorporate and expand upon the limitations already contained in Section 801(d)(1) of the FD&C Act. These limitations are cumulative, and all must be satisfied before export is permitted to any foreign country.

First, no such drug may be exported if it is banned in the United States (i.e., if approval or licensing is denied, withdrawn, or suspended, or the drug is otherwise banned), unless FDA or USDA determines that it is nonetheless eligible for export to promote the public health in the countries of import because of particular diseases or health conditions abroad that do not exist in the United States. Final action by FDA removing a new drug from the market in the United States on the ground that it is unsafe or ineffective will, for example, preclude its export.

Under the legislation, a drug never marketed or used for investigational purposes in this country may be made here and exported to a country on the HHS list, but not to an unlisted country unless HHS made a special determination that unique conditions in particular foreign countries justify such export on public health grounds. Moreover, if FDA or USDA were to determine that such a drug presented a health hazard in a country on the HHS list, they could take action under this amendment to assure that the residents of those foreign countries are protected as well. EDA or USDA could request that export voluntarily stop and could fully inform the relevant foreign regulatory agencies so that those agencies could take their own appropriate action. In an emergency, FDA or USDA could immediately issue a regulation banning the product in the United States, even if it were not marketed or used for investigational purposes here, in which case the product could no longer be exported from the United States even to a listed foreign country. Thus, the amendment provides adequate authority for the United States to satisfy its ethical obligations to foreign countries without unnecessarily obstructing foreign commerce.

In some instances, FDA may allow a manufacturer to withdraw a pending NDA for a drug rather than make a formal determination denying the NDA, or may allow a manufacturer to withdraw a marketed drug from distribution rather than make a formal determination withdrawing the NDA. These administrative short-cuts have the desired consequences of preventing or stopping marketing in this country, and should have the same consequences abroad. It is intended that FDA pay particular attention to the consequence of such voluntary withdrawals when the drug is also being exported under this legislation. It is not intended that manufacturers be permitted to evade the conditions of this legislation by voluntary withdrawal where the drug poses a threat to health and safety. FDA should consider appropriate steps (including seeking voluntary suspension of export, or action formally to deny, withdraw, or suspend approval) in such a case. Of course, the requirement of an effective IND (or FDA action waiving that requirement) would continue to apply even where the manufacturer voluntarily withdrew a pending NDA.

During the course of FDA and USDA review of new drugs, applications and petitions are frequently declared incomplete and additional testing is rountinely required. Drug approval in this country is, in short, a continuous process of negotiation. Only a final action by FDA or USDA determining a drug to be unsafe or ineffective would be sufficient to trigger the ban against exportation.

Similarly, FDA and USDA routinely impose numerous restrictions on the approval or licensing of such drugs. For example, many of these drugs are limited to prescription sale, and all are limited to sale with the specific labeling, in English, approved by the regulatory agencies in this country. Many of these restrictions are inappropriate for foreign distribution, and thus none is sufficient to trigger an automatic ban of export under the amendment.

Even where a drug is banned in the United States, it may nonetheless be useful abroad. Medical and agricultural conditions in many countries are different from those in the United States. Accordingly, the amendment authorizes FDA and USDA to permit exportation where they determine that a particular drug is useful to promote the public health in foreign countries even though not in this country.

In most situations, a drug found to be unsafe or ineffective by FDA would similarly be unsafe or ineffective abroad. The authority of FDA or USDA to permit export in spite of a United States ban is intended to cover only those instances where different medical conditions abroad justify the use of drugs not needed in the United States. For example, drugs for tropical diseases that do not exist in the United States cannot be approved as safe and effective for use here but are urgently needed in many other parts of the world, and particularly in the developing countries. This provision will assure that such drugs can be made available without at the same time permitting the export of drugs that would not be safe and effective abroad. If FDA or USDA initially permits export under this exception and then later withdraws that permission, export will be required to cease immediately.

Second, no such drug may be exported if FDA or USDA determines that the manufacture of the drug in the United States for export is contrary to public health and safety in this country. Such a drug could, for example, threaten the health of workers. Similarly, if it were subject to abuse and substantial quantities were diverted into illegitimate trade in domestic commerce, or if FDA or USDA determined that United States residents were in any other way threatened with a risk to health and safety, manufacture of or export could be prohibited under the amendment.

Third, no such drug may be exported if it is banned in one of the listed foreign countries (i.e., if the govermental health authority responsible for approving drugs in the listed foreign country issues a final determination that the drug is unsafe or ineffective), unless FDA or USDA determines that it is nonetheless eligible for export to promote the public health in other foreign countries because of particular diseases or health conditions in those other foreign countries that do not exist in the particular listed country that made the adverse determination. This provision is consistent with the first limitation on drugs permitted to be exported under the legislation, which forbids export of any drug banned in the United States. It is intended to be interpreted and applied in the same way.

In some foreign countries, however, drug regulatory decisions are made, under the controlling statutes, on grounds other than simple safety and effectiveness. Some laws provide, for example, that no drug may be approved unless it has been shown to be safer or more effective than already-marketed drugs. Denial of approval on these grounds would not invoke this provision. This limitation is intended to apply only where a determination is made that the drug, in and of itself, is either unsafe or ineffective.

Fourth, any such drug must meet the specifications of the foreign purchaser. This is currently a requirement under the FD&C Act, and is retained without change. By assuring compliance with foreign specifications, compliance with all foreign laws and regulations is facilitated.

Fifth, any such drug must not conflict with the laws of the country to which it is intended for export. This is also currently a requirement under the FD&C Act, and is retained without change. It assures that drugs may not be dumped abroad in violation of foreign law.

Sixth, any such drug must be labeled on the outside of the shipping package that it is intended for export and that it is not approved for commercial marketing in the United States. This expands upon the provision in current law, which requires that the shipping package be labeled that it is intended for export. It assures that drugs to be exported will not be confused with domestic products and thus will not inadvertently enter domestic trade. If drugs intended for export are shipped between United States facilities prior to export, this provision will apply throughout their processing in this country to make certain that their final destination is made clear. It also advises foreign customs officials and purchasers about the status of the drug in the United States.

Seventh, the specific drugs being exported may not have been, and may not be, introduced or offered for introduction into domestic commerce. This is also a requirement of current law, and is retained without change. All of the drugs subject to this amendment are, by definition, not approved or licensed for domestic commerce and thus may not be distributed interstate in this country except for investigational purposes.

Eighth, every such drug must, at least 60 days prior to the first export to a particular foreign country, be the subject of a notice of intent to export, submitted by the manufacturer or distributor to FDA or USDA. The notice must describe the drug, identify the establishment where it is manufactured, and state that the drug does not conflict with the laws of the country to which it is intended for export.

This will assure FDA and USDA prior notification that a particular drug is being exported to a particular foreign country. Those agencies will then have an opportunity to inspect the manufacturing establishment, if there is any reason to do so, and to take any other action that might be appropriate. If either agency concluded, for example, that the manufacture of the drug for export presented a significant risk to the health and safety of residents of the United States or of foreign countries not on the HHS list, export could be prohibited. If either agency had information about the drug that would be useful to foreign countries for purposes of regulation, FDA would have an opportunity to disseminate that information abroad in accordance with the provisions described below.

This provision dovetails with the existing notification requirements of the Drug Listing Act of 1972, codified in section 510 of the FD&C Act, 21 U.S.C. 360. Every drug manufacturer is presently required to be registered with FDA even if it engages solely in intrastate commerce. USDA licensing satisfies this requirement for products subject to the VS&T Act. Every registered manufacturer is also required to list with FDA each drug introduced for commercial distribution. Such lists are required to be updated twice each year. The listing must contain a reference to the authority for the marketing of the product and a copy of all labeling. The existing provision does not distinguish between products marketed in domestic or in foreign commerce, and thus would apply to any drug shipped abroad for commercial distribution under this amendment.

These existing provisions require drug listing to be updated only every six months, and do not apply to drugs solely for investigational use. Thus, the notification provision in this amendment assures that exported drugs will not fall between the cracks. FDA and USDA will be able to coordinate the new notification procedures for exported drugs with the existing notification procedures for all other drugs.

For exports to an unlisted country, the notice must include the approved labeling from a listed foreign country on which the labeling in the unlisted country must be based, and a copy of the documentation that the drug may be lawfully marketed in the unlisted country. This will provide additional assurance that exports to unlisted countries are in full compliance with the strict limitations imposed by the amendment.

Within 30 days after receiving a notice of intent to export to an unlisted country, FDA or USDA must publish in the Federal Register a notice of such receipt. That Federal Register notice must describe the drug, state the country of import, and specify where the notice of intent to export may be examined. Thus, the notice will be required to contain only very brief information, but it will be sufficient to provide public notification of the export of unapproved drugs to unlisted countries.

This public notification provides an important opportunity for broad public participation in the scrutiny of the export of such drugs. The public notification must occur at least 30 days before the time expires for FDA or USDA to exercise its veto authority to prohibit the export of a drug to an unlisted foreign country as contrary to its public health and safety. Any individual would thus have at least 30 days to request FDA or USDA to exercise that authority or to extend the time for consideration by another 60 days. In addition, unlisted foreign countries may rely on the Federal Register notifications to keep apprised of United States exports of unapproved drugs. This public process will greatly facilitate the proper implementation and enforcement of the amendments and prevent their abuse or violation.

Notifications under this amendment may, in some instances, contain confidential commercial information about drugs. The confidentiality of any such information will be governed by the existing provisions regarding public disclosure under current law.

ENFORCEMENT OF THE AMENDMENTS

Under existing law, FDA has inspection authority to investigate compliance with the FD&C Act and enforcement authority to bring seizure or injunction actions, or to institute criminal prosecution, for any violation of the FD&C Act. USDA has comparable criminal authority. This amendment permits export of drugs as an exception to the requirements for domestic drugs. If all of the conditions established by these amendments for export of particular drugs are not met, the exemption for export would be inapplicable and any export would automatically represent a violation of the existing drug provisions of the FD&C Act and thus would be subject to the existing civil and criminal penalties under the FD&C Act. If, for example, a drug that is subject to these amendments were exported to a foreign country that did not meet the conditions of these amendments, or if a product that is not eligible for export (because, for example, it was banned in the United States, or it was not the subject of the required notice of intent to export, or improper labeling was used) were nonetheless exported, FDA could determine the violation through its customary inspection of drug manufacturers (which is required by current law to occur at least once every two years), through compliants, or in other ways. The responsible individuals would be subject to criminal prosecution, the company and individuals would be subject to an injunction, and any drug intended for illegal export would be subject to seizure. Thus, no independent inspection or enforcement provisions are required to assure adequate compliance with these amendments. The current FD&C Act enforcement provisions automatically apply.

NEW REQUIREMENTS FOR DISSEMINATION OF IMPORTANT REGULATORY INFORMATION

Cooperation among regulatory agencies responsible for drugs throughout the world has increased substantially in the past 10 years. The World Health Organization has established a drug certification scheme. The United Nations has circulated a list of drugs withdrawn from use throughout the world since 1963. FDA meets regularly with its counterpart agencies in England and Canada, and has sponsored a meeting with all foreign counterpart agencies to discuss cooperative efforts. These amendments recognize and reinforce, such efforts directed at drug information dissemination and cooperation.

Under the amendments, HHS (which would undoubtedly delegate the authority to FDA) is required to establish procedures to accomplish three objectives in this area.

First, FDA must periodically inform foreign governments of significant regulatory decisions, actions, and information respecting drugs. it is intended that such reports be sent immediately when there is an emergency or other urgent need for communication as well as on a regular schedule for more routine information. If, for example, FDA were to discover a major new adverse reaction or side effect caused by a drug which raised significant safety concerns and took appropriate regulatory action in the United States, it would immediately notify foreign governments so that any appropriate regulatory action could also be taken by them.

Where appropriate, rather than sending drug regulatory information directly to each foreign country, the FDA procedures could provide for its dissemination through programs established by the World Health Organization (WHO) for distributing important drug information throughout the world, in order to coordinate American information with broader international educational and regulatory efforts. If, for example, FDA were to conclude that a drug is unsafe or ineffective for one indication and took appropriate regulatory action in the United States, although it remained safe and effective for another indication and therefore should not be banned, the Agency might conclude to make that information available abroad through the WHO. Communications of this type will allow foreign countries to consider regulatory action designed to protect their own citizens, regardless of where the drug is manufactured.

Second, FDA must periodically send to foreign governments the required labeling for drugs approved or licensed in this country following enactment of this legislation. This official labeling establishes all the restrictions and limitations imposed by FDA and USDA for the products involved. By referring to this labeling, foreign governments will have available the latest determinations by the official United States agencies relating to safety and effectiveness of these products. They can then compare this information with the labeling on drugs marketed in their own country, regardless of where they are manufactured, and take any appropriate action they may conclude to be warranted under the circumstances.

For prescription drugs, this requirement would be satisfied by furnishing the package insert approved by FDA. It is necessary to send only the piece of approved labeling that forms the basis of the FDA or USDA approval, not related labeling that may also be used for the drug. Changes in labeling need be sent only if they are significant. The official labeling for drugs approved prior to this legislation is already easily available to foreign countries through compilations such as the Physicians Desk Reference and thus is not required to be sent under this provision. As with the dissemination of other drug regulatory information, the FDA procedures may provide for the use of established WHO programs to distribute labeling information, rather than sending it directly to each foreign country, where that is appropriate.

Third, FDA must respond promptly to requests from foreign governments for information about any drug imported from the United States. FDA may, for example, have in its possession information that would help foreign countries make better regulatory determinations about such products.

The amendments make clear that information which is protected from public disclosure in the United States may not be furnished either orally or in writing to foreign governments. It is important to assure that American technology is protected, and is not given away to foreign competitors. Only information that could be made publicly available in the United States can be disclosed to foreign governments.

Unlike the export provisions of the amendments, which apply only to those drugs that are presently prohibited from export because they are not approved or licensed in the United States, the information dissemination provisions apply broadly to all drugs. Thus, they provide a major new effort at international regulatory cooperation and dissemination of information.

EFFECTIVE DATE

The amendments would be effective upon enactment. The export provisions of the amendments would be effective 90 days after enactment, the date by which the list of foreign countries must be established by HHS.

PHARMACEUTICAL EXPORT AMENDMENTS OF 1984—ANALYSIS

This bill amends section 801 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, 21 U.S.C. 381, which relates to the effect of that statute on exports. It adds a new subsection (e), designed to allow the export of drugs permitted by foreign countries to be marketed abroad but not approved for use in the United States, without allowing the dumping of unsafe or ineffective products on foreign countries.

Paragraph (e)(1) provides that any drug required to be approved or licensed by the Secretary of Health and Human Services (HHS) or the Secretary of Agriculture (USDA) prior to export, but not so approved or licensed, may be exported to a foreign country described in paragraph (2) if the drug meets the requirements of paragraph (3).

Paragraph (e)(2) describes the two categories of foreign countries to which export of such drugs is permitted.

Subparagraph (2)(A) provides that any such drug may be exported to a foreign country listed by HHS under subparagraph (B) as a country which has an adequate governmental health authority to approve such drugs, or to any other foreign country if the drug meets the requirements of subparagraph (C) and the government of the country of import has provided documentation that the drug may be lawfully offered for sale in such country.

Subparagraph (2)(B) provides that the initial list of foreign countries with an adequate drug regulatory system must be established within 90 days of the enactment of the legislation, and may subsequently be amended to add or delete countries.

Subparagraph (2)(C) provides that any such drug may be exported to an unlisted foreign country if each of the following four conditions is met.

First, the drug must be approved or licensed in at least one of the listed foreign countries, and the approved or licensed labeling must not be changed except for translation and other changes that are required to be made to meet local legal requirements in the nonlisted country respecting information not related to the safety or effectiveness of the drug.

Second, the drug must be the subject of an exemption for investigational use or an application for approval or licensing must be submitted or approved in the United States, or HHS must determine that the drug is nonetheless eligible for export because of particular diseases or health conditions in the countries to which it is exported that do not exist in the United States.

Third, for any human drug sufficient Phase I clinical investigation must be completed to permit the initiation of Phase II or Phase III clinical studies.

Fourth, the drug must not be the subject of a notice by HHS or USDA determining that the sale of the drug in that country is contrary to its public health and safety. Any such notice prohibiting export to particular countries not on the HHS list must be issued by HHS or USDA within 60 days after the notice of intent to export the drug to that country is received by HHS or USDA, but this time period may be extended an additional 60 days by written notice by HHS or USDA.

Paragraph (e)(3) sets forth eight conditions which any such drug must meet before it may be exported to a listed or unlisted foreign country.

First, the drug must not be banned in the United States or, if it is banned, the Secretary must have determined that it is nonetheless eligible for export to promote the public health in the countries to which it is exported because of particular diseases or health conditions in the countries to which it is exported that do not exist in the United States.

Second, the drug must not be the subject of a notice by HHS or USDA determining that manufacture of the drug in the United States for export presents a significant risk to the public and safety in the United States.

Third, the drug must not be banned as unsafe of ineffective in a listed foreign country or, if it is banned, the Secretary must have determined that it is nonetheless eligible for export to promote the public health in the countries to which it is exported because of particular diseases or health conditions in the countries to which it is exported that do not exist in the country in which it is banned.

Fourth, the drug must be in accord with the specifications of the foreign purchaser.

Fifth, the drug must not be in conflict with the laws of the country to which it is intended for export.

Sixth, the drug must be labeled on the outside of the shipping package that it is intended for export and is not approved for commercial marketing in the United States.

Seventh, the drug must not have been, and is not, introduced or offered for introduction into domestic commerce.

Eighth, the drug must be the subject of a notice of intent to export submitted to HHS or USDA at least 60 days prior to the date of first export to each foreign country. The notice must describe the drug, identify the establishment where it is manufactured for export, and state that the drug does not conflict with the laws of the country to which it is intended for export. For exports to an unlisted foreign country, the notice must also contain the labeling approved in a listed foreign country which, after translation and any other changes necessary to meet local legal requirements, will be used in the unlisted country, and a copy of the documentation that the drug may be lawfully marketed in the unlisted country. Within 30 days of receiving any notice of intent to export to an unlisted country, HHS or USDA must publish a notice in the Federal Register describing the drug, stating the county of import, and specifying where the notice of intent to export may be examined.

Paragraph (e)(4) provides that a change in the approved labeling for a drug which has been approved or licensed by FDA or USDA will not prevent its export to a foreign country if the change involves only translation into a foreign language or other changes made to meet the legal requirements of such country respecting information which does not relate to the safety or effectiveness of the drug.

Paragraph (e)(5) requires HHS to establish procedures for the dissemination of important regulatory information about all drugs to foreign countries throughout the world, in order to facilitate adequate regulatory control of these drugs among all nations.

Subparagraph (5)(A) requires HHS periodically to inform foreign governments about significant regulatory decisions, actions, and information respecting drugs in the United States.

Subparagraph (5)(B) requires HHS periodically to send to foreign governments the required labeling for drugs approved or licensed or in the United States, to permit these countries to determine the conditions imposed for United States marketing.

Subparagraph (5)(C) requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services to respond promptly to requests from foreign governments for available information on any drug imported from the United States.

Each of these three provisions is limited by the requirement that no foreign government shall be furnished any information which is not available for public disclosure in the United States, in order to assure that American technology and other confidential information is not improperly revealed to foreign competitors.

To expedite the development of the first list of countries with adequate drug regulatory systems, the bill specifies eight countries which shall be included on that list unless HHS determines this to be inappropriate.

STATEMENT ON IMPACT OF DRUG EXPORT RESTRICTIONS

Because of the U.S. export restrictions, American Cyanamid Company, in 1975, undertook an $11 million expansion of its pharmaceutical plant in Gosport, England, in order to manufacture new drugs for overseas markets which had not yet been approved by the United States. The plant, now in operation, generates $28 million in annual sales as well as additional new drugs from research. Two of the drugs manufactured at Gosport were subsequently approved by the FDA. Although one of the drugs has not yet received approval in the U.S., nearly 30 other countries have approved it. If and when the product is approved by the FDA, Cyanamid will be faced with importing it into the United States from Great Britain. The plant could and should have been built at Bound Brook, New Jersey or Pearl River, New York for about $5 million rather than $11 million, and the cost of operating it would have been significantly lower. Unfortunately, the restriction on drug export precluded that choice.

Merck's Dolobid was first approved for marketing in the United Kingdom in 1977 but not in the United States until 1982. Because of export restrictions, production in the United States was limited to intermediates which could move in interstate commerce. In 1976 when production of the intermediates was begun in Virginia, Merck had sufficient manufacturing capacity to meet its international requirements and, without the export prohibition, had as well, existing underutilized capacity to supply its foreign markets with the finished bulk drug during the 5-year period preceding FDA approval. Instead, the decision was made to construct a dedicated chemical plant at Ponders End, England to supply international markets at a capital investment of $20 million. While there were other benefits to making such an investment in the United Kingdom, the fact remains that export restrictions imposed by the United States on its own manufacturer precluded even the consideration of supplying the international markets from domestic facilities. In contrast, Merck's Mefoxin, an antibiotic not subject to a pre-approval export prohibition, was approved in Portugal in early 1977 but not in the U.S. until late 1978. Because now F.D.A approved antibiotics, unlike other drugs, may be freely exported under Section 801(d) of the Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, Merck, in its long-range planning could consider supplying foreign markets from a domestic facility. In fact, Mefoxin production was put into the United States with knowledge that is could anticipate full utilization of constructed plant capacity even if FDA approval was inordinately delayed. Merck's plant in Elkton, Virginia now supplies all of its international and domestic requirements.

American Cyanamid Company wanted to manufacture the braid for its Dexon synthetic absorbable sutures in Danbury, Connecticut, and export it to England for finishing and packaging to serve the continent. However, because of the additional time required for its approval by FDA, Cyanamid was forced to put a large part of the manufacturing operation in England. Even though FDA has now approved it, Cyanamid most likely will not bring the basic manufacturing back to the U.S. because of the economics involved.

Abbott Laboratories was forced to invest in overseas manufacturing facilities for Ethrane, an anesthetic because it was approved abroad before being approved in the U.S. Abbott now has approximately $4 million invested in two facilities in England and Italy, with a total of 50 people working on the product.

In addition to adversely affecting larger, research intensive pharmaceutical companies, the export restrictions cause irreparable harm to smaller, biotechnology—based companies if it is not corrected. For example, Genentech is a company whose principal activities involve the development of genetic engineering technology for the production of drugs and biologicals, as well as industrial and agricultural chemicals. Its continued success is dependent on research contracts and licensing agreements with foreign partners for the conduct of clinical studies in their countries, and eventual product sales in those countries. Present law prevents commercial exports to its foreign partners of bulk, intermediate drug and biological materials; its contractual arrangements with them could force the transfer to foreign countries of its recombinant DNA technology and unique isolation and purification methods used to prepare its products.

One of American Cyanamid's most important new drug compounds under development is its new anti-cancer agent, mitoxantrone. Because of the export ban, experimental quantities of mitoxantrone are now being produced by Cyanamid of Great Britain at its Gosport plant rather than at one of Cyanamid's plants in the United States. Cyanamid expects that mitoxantrone will be approved overseas within the next year or so, a year or two before it will be approved in this country. This will put the company in the additional difficult position cited earlier of having to install expensive production facilities in Europe or the U.K. or contracting with a West German firm to produce enough commercial quantities for both overseas needs and for needs in the United States.

Similarly, Merck is now investing substantial capital in the modification of existing facilities and construction of new facilities for the manufacture of a new antibiotic for which approval is anticipated overseas at least one year before approval in the United States. This is an investment Merck could not have considered making domestically without full knowledge that even if FDA approval is delayed substantially, these facilities will not be idle because of an export restriction.

A major pharmaceutical marketing firm in the U.K. approached KV Pharmaceutical Co. to enter into a Research and Development/Marketing Agreement to put a new cardiovascular drug into a KV once-a-day delivery system/dose form. A series of negotiating conferences between the two firms led to agreement in principle which included: Subsidy payments for KV's Research & Development efforts; front cash payments on registration of the completed product; KV manufacture for worldwide demand for the product; a royalty on the U.K. company's sales of the product; and KV rights to market the product in the U.S. (since the U.K. company does not have a strong U.S. presence).

Partly due to the problem created by the United States law regarding drug exports, the U.K. company decided not to proceed with KV. Instead, an arrangement has been made with another company (probably European) providing for manufacture in the U.K.

Tangible losses to KV included: Over $800,000 in Research and Development and license income; manufacturing income estimated at $3.0 million per year; royalty income estimated at $1.5 million per year; marketing/sales revenues in the U.S. of $7 to $12 million per year; and commensurate employment in Research and Development, sale and marketing jobs.

Merrell Dow launched a product called Terfenadine in Europe in 1981. Between then and now it has been marketed in most countries around the world. The U.S. NDA was submitted in February, 1983. It has not yet been approved. Because of existing FDA regulations it was not possible to manufacture this product in the United States. If the U.S. was now exporting this product to other global markets, the U.S. would have realized approximately $22 million in exports in 1984. Projections indicate that by 1993 these exports would amount to approximately $60 million (stated in 1984 dollars).

Product B: This is a new product which is still in the R & D pipeline. Launch is anticipated in late 1986 or early 1987 in Europe. If the existing restrictions are not removed, the U.S. plant will be unable to manufacture and export these active ingredients to global markets. It is anticipated that export of this product by 1993 will amount to approximately $90 million (stated in 1984 dollars).

Product C: This product is also in the R&D pipeline with launch anticipated in late '86 or early '87. It is anticipated that by 1993 exports of this product will amount to approximately $20 million (stated in 1984 dollars).

Merrell Dow is now in the process of conducting engineering studies to determine whether it should build, upgrade and expand an active ingredient plant overseas or whether major investments should be made here in the U.S. It normally takes from 2 to 2½ years from the time a decision is made to build an active ingredient plant to the time when the first commercial scale production is available. In the first year of this 2 to 2½ year period, while it is not critical, it is preferred that the actual location site be known. As you near the end of the first year period it becomes necessary to be site specific. In August/September of this year, engineering studies must start to key in on a particular location. The question is quite simple—do we make these products in the U.S. or in a foreign plant? As things stand now, there is little choice but to select a foreign location.

Merrell Dow would clearly prefer to manufacture in the U.S. in all three of the above instances. Note that most production of Terfenadine will remain abroad. However, the firm would like to have some Terfenadine production in the U.S. as well as 100 percent of the active ingredient production for products B and C in this country.

By Mr. DENTON (for himself, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. DOLE, Mr. EAST, Mr. GLENN, Mr. GOLDWATER, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. HART, Mr. HATCH, Mrs. HAWKINS, Mr. HEFLIN, Mr. HELMS, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. JEPSEN, Mr. LAXALT, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. METZENBAUM, Mr. RANDOLPH, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. SYMMS, and Mr. TRIBLE):

S.J. Res. 336. Joint resolution to proclaim October 23, 1984, as "A Time of Remembrance" for all victims of terrorism throughout the world; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

TIME OF REMEMBRANCE FOR VICTIMS OF TERRORISM

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, I join with my distinguished colleagues Senators LEAHY, THURMOND, BIDEN, BAUCUS, D'AMATO, DECONCINI, DOLE, EAST, GLENN, GOLDWATER, GRASSLEY, HART, HATCH, HAWKINS, HEFLIN, HELMS, INOUYE, JEPSEN, LAXALT, LUGAR, METZENBAUM, RANDOLPH, SPECTER, SYMMS, and TRIBLE to introduce a joint resolution to proclaim October 23, 1984, as "A Time of Remembrance" for all victims of terrorism throughout the world.

October 23, 1983, as I am sure we all recall, was the day on which 241 American servicemen were killed in a single act of terrorism in Beirut, Lebanon.

The organization that is the driving force behind "A Time of Remembrance" is No Greater Love, a nonprofit, nonpolitical, humanitarian organization founded in 1971 to provide programs for children whose fathers were killed, missing, or imprisoned in Vietnam. As my colleagues know, that is a subject that is very near and dear to my heart. No Greater Love continues year after year to show those children that they are not forgotten.

Several of my colleagues, on both sides of the aisle, serve on the national advisory council of the organization, including Senators THURMOND, DOLE, GOLDWATER, HART, INOUYE, KENNEDY, LAXALT, LUGAR, and RANDOLPH.

Where appropriate, No Greater Love steps in to offer friendship and care to the families of men and women killed or endangered while serving their country. In 1980, No Greater Love promoted and coordinated the free the hostages yellow ribbon campaign during the hostage crisis in Iran.

Unfortunately, recent events in Lebanon and elsewhere around the world have expanded the ranks of children who deserve the attention of No Greater Love, children who need to know that many Americans care about their loss and remember the ultimate sacrifice made by their parents.

The purpose of "A Time of Remembrance" is to remember all victims of terrorism and to demonstrate to their families and friends that the American people care and will not forget. The theme of the program is "Let Peace Take Root," and the symbol of the program is the purple ribbon. The color purple has symbolized loyalty, dignity, and the love of truth, and was considered fitting for "A Time for Remembrance."

One part of "A Time of Remembrance" will be a very special tree dedication ceremony conducted by children whose parents were killed by terrorists. On October 23, 1984, a tree will be dedicated at Arlington National Cemetery in memory of all victims of terrorism throughout the world. Through the ceremony, the children will be remembering their parents and will be helping to increase world awareness of the consequences of terrorism and of the need for people of all nations to work together for world peace.

Elementary schools, B'nai Brith youth organizations, Camp Fire Girls and Boys, Girl Scouts, and U.S. schools overseas are among the organizations whose children will participate in "A Time of Remembrance" by wearing homemade purple ribbons and by holding ceremonies in memory of all victims of terrorism.

In addition to the joint resolution that I am introducing today, the President, Governors, mayors, and the United Nations will be asked to proclaim October 23, 1984, as "A Time of Remembrance" and will be sent purple ribbons to wear. Governors will be sent a flag that flew at the U.S. Embassy in Beirut and will be asked to fly it at halfstaff over their State capitol buildings on October 23. No Greater Love will send purple ribbons to U.S. Embassy officials throughout the world and ask them to wear the ribbons and fly their flags at halfstaff on October 23. Church and synagogue leaders will be asked to offer prayers for victims of terrorism. National Football League teams playing home games on October 21 will be asked to have a moment of silence, before the national anthem, in memory of all victims of terrorism. Radio and television stations will be asked to broadcast public service announcements and editorials about "A Time of Remembrance."

Mr. President, I urge all my colleagues to support the joint resolution and to join as cosponsors.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 336

Whereas the problem of terrorism has become an international concern that knows no boundaries—religious, racial, political, or national;

Whereas thousands of men, women, and children have died at the hands of terrorists in nations around the world, and today terrorism continues to claim the lives of many peace-loving individuals;

Whereas October 23, 1983, is the date on which the largest number of Americans were killed in a single act of terrorism—the bombing of the United States compound in Beirut, Lebanon, in which two hundred and forty-one United States servicemen lost their lives;

Whereas many of these victims died defending ideals of peace and freedom; and

Whereas it is appropriate to honor all victims of terrorism, and in America to console the families of victims, and to cherish the freedom that their sacrifices make possible for all Americans: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That October 23, 1984, be proclaimed as "A Time of Remembrance", to urge all Americans to take time to reflect on the sacrifices that have been made in the pursuit of peace and freedom, and to promote active participation by the American people through the wearing of a purple ribbon, a symbol of patriotism, dignity, loyalty, and martyrdom. The President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the departments and agencies of the United States and interested organizations, groups, and individuals to fly United States flags at half staff throughout the world in the hope that the desire for peace and freedom take firm root in every person and every nation.

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

S. 1003

At the request of Mr. DENTON, the names of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE], the Senator from California [Mr. CRANSTON], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. JEPSEN], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HUMPHREY], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTEN], and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. GOLDWATER] were added as cosponsors of S. 1003, a bill to extend and revise the provisions of the Civil Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act and the Child Abuse Prevention Treatment and Adoption Reform Act of 1978.

S. 1531

At the request of Mr. RIEGLE, the name of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1951, a bill to encourage the use of public school facilities before and after school hours for care of school-age children and for other purposes.

S. 1623

At the request of Mr. DOLE, the name of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ZORINSKY] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1623, a bill to establish a National Commission on Neurofibromatosis.

S. 1680

At the request of Mr. SASSER, his name was added as a cosponsor of S. 1680, a bill to clarify the circumstances under which territorial provisions in licenses to distribute and sell trademarked malt beverage products are lawful under the antitrust laws.

S. 2272

At the request of Mr. GOLDWATER, the name of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] was added as a cosponsor of S. 2272, a bill to authorize the Smithsonian Institution to plan and construct facilities for certain science activities of the Institution, and for other purposes.

S. 2437

At the request of Mr. GOLDWATER, the name of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. COCHRAN] was added as a cosponsor for S. 2437, a bill to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to clarify the policies regarding the right to view satellite-transmitted television programming.

S. 2509

At the request of Mr. INOUYE, the names of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL], and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. DECONCINI] were added as cosponsors of S. 2509, a bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to regulate political advertising in campaigns for Federal elective office.

S. 2563

At the request of Mr. D'AMATO, the name of the Senator from California [Mr. WILSON] was added as a cosponsor of S. 2563, a bill to amend section 1201 of the National Housing Act to extend the crime insurance program.

S. 2726

At the request of Mr. MELCHER, the name of the Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS] was added as a cosponsor of S. 2726, a bill to promote the development of Native American culture and art.

S. 2743

At the request of Mr. GRASSLEY, the name of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. NICKLES] was added as a cosponsor of S. 2743, a bill to designate a portion of 16th Street NW., Washington, DC, on which the Embassy of the Union of Soviet Socialists Republics is located, as "Andrei Sakharov Avenue."

S. 2768

At the request of Mr. MATHIAS, the names of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. PRYOR], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH], and the Senator from California [Mr. CRANSTON] were added as cosponsors of S. 2768, a bill to provide for the education in the United States of certain students of limited financial means from developing countries.

S. 2774

At the request of Mrs. KASSEBAUM, the names of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DURENBERGER], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. LAXALT], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. MATTINGLY], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIXON], the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. STAFFORD], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. LUGAR] were added as cosponsors of S. 2774, a bill to grant a Federal charter to the National Society, Daughters of the American Colonists.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 254

At the request of Mr. LUGAR, the name of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL] was added as a cosponsor of S.J. Res. 254, a joint resolution to designate the month of October, 1984 as "National Down's Syndrome Month".

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 272

At the request of Mr. MURKOWSKI, the name of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS] was added as a cosponsor of S.J. Res. 272, a joint resolution recognizing the anniversaries of the Warsaw Uprising and the Polish resistance to the invasion of Poland during World War II.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 305

At the request of Mrs. HAWKINS, the name of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ARMSTRONG] was added as a cosponsor of S.J. Res. 305, a joint resolution to designate the week of September 10, 1984, through September 16, 1984, as "Teenage Alcohol Abuse Awareness Week".

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 322

At the request of Mr. QUAYLE, the names of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BOSCHWITZ], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DURENBERGER] were added as cosponsors of S.J. Res. 322, a joint resolution designating the week beginning on October 7, 1984, as "Mental Illness Awareness Week".

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 323

At the request of Mr. MURKOWSKI, the names of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HART], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBERG], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BOSCHWITZ], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. TRIBLE], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. ROTH], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. TSONGAS] were added as cosponsors of S.J. Res. 323, a joint resolution designating August 1984 as "Polish American Heritage Month".

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 327

At the request of Mr. KASTEN, the names of the Senator from California [Mr. CRANSTON], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS] were added as cosponsors of S.J. Res. 327, a joint resolution to designate the week beginning September 2, 1984 as "Youth of America Week".

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 333

At the request of Mr. HELMS, the names of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN], the Senator from Florida [Mrs. HAWKINS], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD], the Senator from Montana [Mr. BAUCUS], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. GLENN], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. LEAHY], the Senator from Texas [Mr. TOWER], and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. MATTINGLY] were added as cosponsors of S.J. Res. 333, a joint resolution to designate September 21, 1984, as "World War I Aces and Aviators Day".

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 334

At the request of Mr. DOLE, the names of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY], the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. MATSUNAGA], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. COCHRAN] were added as cosponsors of S.J. Res. 334, a joint resolution to provide for the designation of the month of November 1984, as "National Hospice Month".

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 109

At the request of Mr. HOLLINGS, the name of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. COCHRAN] was added as a cosponsor of S. Con. Res. 109, a concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that the Federal Government take immediate steps to support a National Storm Program.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 118

At the request of Mr. GRASSLEY, the name of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. NICKLES] was added as a cosponsor of S. Con. Res. 118, a concurrent resolution expressing the sense of Congress that the portion of the street in the District of Columbia on which is located the Embassy of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and the portion of any street in any other city in the United States on which is located a consular office or mission of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, should be named "Andrei Sakharov Avenue."

SENATE RESOLUTION 415

At the request of Mr. D'AMATO, the names of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. HEINZ], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WEICKER], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL], the Senator from Texas [Mr. TOWER], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK] were added as cosponsors of S. Res. 415, a resolution commemorating the 20 years of Federal support of mass transportation.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

HOOVER POWER PLANT ACT OF 1984

METZENBAUM AMENDMENTS NOS. 3418 AND 3419

Mr. METZENBAUM proposed two amendments to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 268) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct, operate, and maintain hydroelectric powerplants at various existing water projects, and for other purposes; as follows:

AMENDMENT 3418

At the end of the House amendment, add: Notwithstanding any other provision, no contract authorized in this bill shall prescribe terms and conditions for the renewal of contracts for electrical energy generated at Hoover Dam beyond the period ending December 31, 1988.

AMENDMENT 3419

At the end of the House amendment, add: Notwithstanding any other provision of this bill shall become effective upon date of enactment;

Provided, however, That no section of this bill or the Boulder Canyon Project Act of 1928 regarding the price of power generated at Hoover Dam shall be effective after May 31, 1987.

CHILD ABUSE PREVENTION AND TREATMENT AND ADOPTION REFORM ACT AMENDMENTS

STEVENS (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 3420

Mr. HATCH (for Mr. STEVENS, for himself, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. DODD, Mrs. HAWKINS, Mr. BOSCHWITZ, Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. COHEN, Mr. RANDOLPH, Mr. MATSUNAGA, and Mr. COCHRAN) proposed an amendment to the bill (S. 1003) to extend and revise the provisions of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act and the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act of 1978; as follows:

On page 22, after line 20, add the following new title:

TITLE III—FAMILY VIOLENCE PREVENTION PROGRAM

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 301. This title may be cited as the "Family Violence Prevention Act".

COORDINATION OF PROGRAMS

SEC. 302. The Secretary shall coordinate all programs within the Department of Health and Human Services, and seek to coordinate all other Federal programs, which involve the prevention of incidents of family violence and the provision of assistance for victims and potential victims of family violence and their dependents.

DEMONSTRATION GRANTS AUTHORIZED

SEC. 303. (a) The Secretary is authorized to make demonstration grants to public agencies and private nonprofit organizations (including religious and charitable organizations and voluntary associations) in any State that have the capacity to administer, or are administering, family violence prevention programs. Such grants shall be made on the basis of applications submitted under subsection (b) and approved by the Secretary for the cost of programs designed to carry out one or more of the following purposes:

(1) To prevent incidents of family violence, including the provision of immediate shelter and related assistance to victims of family violence and their dependents.

(2) To conduct research into the causes of family violence, and into the prevention, identification, and treatment thereof, including research into the effectiveness of (A) involving law enforcement personnel in responding to incidents of family violence, (B) State procedures for the removal from the household of the abusing spouse, (C) arrest of the abusing spouse, and (D) referral to drug and alcohol treatment programs or other therapy programs for the abusing spouse.

(3) To train personnel in the conduct of programs for the prevention and treatment of family violence.

(4) To prepare local and State law enforcement personnel for the handling of incidents of family violence.

(b) No demonstration grant may be made under this section unless the public agency or private nonprofit organization submits an application to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing or accompanied by such matter as the Secretary determines reasonably necessary.

(c) In approving applications submitted under subsection (b) of this section, the Secretary shall—

(1) assure that there is an equitable distribution of assistance both with respect to States and between rural and urban areas;

(2) give priority to applications from applicants in communities currently without family violence prevention programs or which can demonstrate that current services or programs are inadequate to meet the needs of the community;

(3) assure the confidentiality of records pertaining to any individual provided family violence prevention or treatment services by any program assisted under this title, and assure that the address or location of any shelter-facility assisted under this title is not made public except by written authorization of the person or persons responsible for the operation of such shelter; and

(4) not make a grant under this section in any fiscal year to any single entity for an amount in excess of $50,000 unless the Secretary, in exceptional circumstances, determines that a grant in a greater amount is necessary.

(d) Nothing in this title shall be construed to supersede the application of State or local requirements for the reporting of incidents of suspected child abuse to the appropriate State authorities.

NATIONAL CLEARINGHOUSE ON FAMILY VIOLENCE PREVENTION

SEC. 304. (a) The Secretary shall operate a national information and research clearinghouse on the prevention of family violence (including the abuse of elderly persons) in order to—

(1) collect, prepare, analyze, and disseminate information and statistics and analyses thereof relating to the incidence and prevention of family violence (particularly the prevention of repeated incidents of violence) and the provision of immediate shelter and related assistance to victims of family violence and their dependents; and

(2) provide information about alternative sources of assistance available with respect to the prevention of incidents of family violence and the provision of immediate shelter and related assistance to victims of family violence and their dependents.

(b) The Secretary shall assure that the activities of the national information and research clearinghouse operated under subsection (a) are coordinated with the information clearinghouse maintained by the National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect under section 2 of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act.

PAYMENTS

SEC. 305. (a)(1) From the amounts appropriated and available for demonstration grants under section 308, the Secretary shall pay, in accordance with the provisions of this title, the Federal share of the costs of programs described in the applications approved under section 303.

(2) The Federal share shall be—

(A) 65 percent in fiscal year 1985,

(B) 45 percent in fiscal year 1986, and

(C) 35 percent in fiscal year 1987.

(3) The non-Federal share of demonstration grants under this title may be in cash or in kind, fairly evaluated, including but not limited to planning expenses, plant, equipment, and services.

(b) Demonstration grants made under section 303 may be paid in installments, as in advance or by way of reimbursement, with necessary adjustments on account of overpayments or underpayments, as the Secretary may determine.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

SEC. 306. (a) The Secretary shall appoint an employee of the Department of Health and Human Services to carry out the provisions of this Act. The individual appointed under this subsection shall, prior to such appointment, have had expertise in the field of family violence prevention and services.

(b) In order to carry out the provisions of this title, the Secretary is authorized to—

(1) appoint and fix the compensation of such personnel as are necessary;

(2) procure, to the extent authorized by section 3109 of title 5, United States Code, such temporary and intermittent services of experts and consultants as are necessary;

(3) prescribed such regulations as are necessary; and

(4) enter into contracts, grants, or other arrangements, or modifications thereof that are necessary to carry out the provisions of this title.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 307. As used in this title—

(1) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Health and Human Services;

(2) the term "State" means each of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Northern Mariana Islands;

(3) the term "related assistance"—

(A) includes counseling and self-help services to abusers, victims, and dependents in family violence situations (which shall include counseling of all family members to the extent feasible) and referrals for appropriate health-care services (including alcohol and drug abuse treatment), and

(B) may include food, clothing, child care, transportation, and emergency services (but not reimbursement for any health-care services) for victims of family violence and their dependents; and

(4) the term "shelter" means the provision of temporary refuge and related assistance in compliance with applicable State law and regulation governing the provision, on a regular basis, of shelter, safe homes, meals, and related assistance to victims of family violence and their dependents.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 308. There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this title $5,000,000 for fiscal year 1985, $15,000,000 for fiscal year 1986, and $15,000,000 for fiscal year 1987. Of the amounts appropriated pursuant to this section for each such year, not less than 50 percent shall be available for demonstration grants made under section 303(a)(1) in such year.

HATCH (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 3421

Mr. HATCH (for himself, Mr. DODD, Mr. DENTON, and Mr. CRANSTON) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 1003, supra; as follows:

On page 11, beginning with line 11, strike out all through line 2 on page 12.

On page 12, line 3, strike out "(C)" the first time it appears and insert in lieu thereof "(b)".

On page 12, line 8, strike out "SEXUAL ABUSE".

On page 12, lines 10 and 11, strike out "title" and insert in lieu thereof "Act" in both places.

On page 12, lines 14 and 15, strike out "comma and the word 'and' " and insert in lieu thereof "semicolon".

On page 12, line 24, strike out the end quotation marks and the period the second time it appears and insert in lieu thereof a semicolon and "and".

On page 12, after time 24, insert the following:

"(3) the term 'withholding of medically indicated treatment' means the failure to respond to the infant's life-threatening conditions by providing treatment (including appropriate nutrition, hydration, and medication) which, in the treating physician's or physicians' reasonable medical judgment, will be most likely to be effective in ameliorating or correcting all such conditions, except that the term does not include the failure to provide treatment (other than appropriate nutrition, hydration, or medication) to an infant when, in the treating physician's or physicians' reasonable medical judgment, (A) the infant is chronically and irreversibly comatose; (B) the provision of such treatment would (i) merely prolong dying, (ii) not be effective in ameliorating or correcting all of the infant's life-threatening conditions, or (iii) otherwise be futile in terms of the survival of the infant; or (C) the provision of such treatment would be virtually futile in terms of the survival of the infant and the treatment itself under such circumstances would be inhumane.".

On page 13, strike out line 10 through line 17 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$32,500,000 for fiscal year 1984, $39,000,000 for fiscal year 1985, $40,500,000 for fiscal year 1986, and $42,080,000 for fiscal year 1987 to carry out the provisions of this Act. Of the sums appropriated for each fiscal year, $9,500,000 shall be available in each fiscal year to carry out the provisions of section 4(b)(1) of this Act, relating to State grants, $4,000,000 shall be available in each such year for identification, treatment, and prevention of sexual abuse, and $5,000,000 shall be available in each such year for the purpose of making additional grants to the States to carry out the provisions of section 4(c) of this Act (as amended by section 201(c)(2) of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act).".

On page 15, lines 11 and 12, strike out "infants at risk with life-threatening congenital impairments" and insert in lieu thereof "disabled infants with life-threatening conditions".

On page 16, lines 20 and 21, strike out "infants at risk with life-threatening congenital impairments" and insert in lieu thereof "disabled infants with life-threatening conditions".

On page 17, lines 9 and 10, strike out "children with life-threatening congenital impairments" and insert in lieu thereof "disabled infants with life-threatening conditions".

On page 19, beginning with line 9, strike out all through line 20 on page 22 and insert in lieu thereof the following new title:

TITLE II—SERVICES AND TREATMENT FOR DISABLED INFANTS

SEC. 201. (a) Section 4(b)(2) of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (42 U.S.C. 5103(b)(2), hereinafter in this title referred to as "the Act") is amended by—

(1) striking out "and" at the end of clause (I);

(2) striking out the period at the end of clause (J) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and the word "and"; and

(3) Inserting after clause (J) the following new clause:

"(K) have in place for the purpose of responding to the reporting of medical neglect (including instances of withholding of medically indicated treatment from disabled infants with life-threatening conditions), procedures or programs, or both (within the state child protective services system), to provide for (1) coordination and consultation with individuals designated by and within appropriate health-care facilities, (ii) prompt notification by individuals designated by and within appropriate health-care facilities of cases of suspected medical neglect (including instances of withholding of medically indicated treatment from disabled infants with life-threatening conditions), and (iii) authority, under State law, for the State child protective service system to pursue any legal remedies, including the authority to initiate legal proceedings in a court of competent jurisdiction, as may be necessary to prevent the withholding of medically indicated treatment from disabled infants with life-threatening conditions.".

(b) Section 4(b)(3) of the Act is amended by striking out "and (F)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(F), and (K)".

(c) Section 4 of the Act is further amended by—

(1) redesignating subsection (c) as subsection (d), subsection (d) as subsection (e), and subsection (e) as subsection (f); and

(2) inserting after subsection (b) the following new subsection (c):

"(C) The Secretary is authorized to make additional grants to the States for the purpose of developing, establishing, and operating or implementing—

"(1) the procedures or programs required under clause (K) of subsection (d)(2);

"(2) information and education programs or training programs for the purpose of improving the provisions of services to disabled infants with life-threatening conditions for (i) professional and paraprofessional personnel concerned with the welfare of disabled infants with life-threatening conditions, including personnel employed in child protective services programs and health-care facilities, and (ii) the parents of such infants; and

"(3) programs to help in obtaining or coordinating necessary services, including existing social and health services and financial assistance for families with disabled infants with life-threatening conditions, and those services necessary to facilitate adoptive placement of such infants who have been relinquished for adoption.".

REGULATIONS AND GUIDELINES

SEC. 202. (a)(1) Not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services (hereinafter in this title referred to as the "Secretary") shall publish proposed regulations to implement the requirements of section 4(b)(2)(K) of the Act (as amended by section 201(a)(3) of this Act).

(2) Not later than 100 days after the date of the enactment of this Act and after notice and opportunity for public comment, the Secretary shall publish final regulations under this subsection.

(b)(1) Not later than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall publish interim model guidelines to encourage the establishment within health-care facilities of commmittee which would serve the purpose of educating hospital personnel and families of disabled infants with life-threatening conditions, recommending institutional policies and guidelines concerning the withholding of medically indicated treatment from such infants, and offering counsel and review in cases involving disabled infants with life-threatening conditions.

(2) Not later than 150 days after the date of the enactment of this Act and after notice and opportunity for public comment, the Secretary shall publish the model guidelines.

REPORT ON FINANCIAL RESOURCES

SEC. 203. The Secretary shall conduct a study to determine the most effective means of providing Federal financial support, other than the use of funds provided through the Social Security Act, for the provision of medical treatment, general care, and appropriate social services for disabled infants with life-threatening conditions. The Secretary shall report the results of the study to the appropriate Committees of the Congress not later than 270 days after the date of the enactment of this Act and shall include in the report such recommendations for legislation to provide such financial support as the Secretary considers appropriate.

TRAINING, TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE, AND CLEARINGHOUSE ACTIVITIES

SEC. 204. The Secretary shall provide, directly or through grants or contracts with public or private nonprofit organizations, for (1) training and technical assistance programs to assist States in developing, establishing, and operating or implementing programs and procedures meeting the requirements of section 4(b)(2)(K) of the Act (as amended by section 201(a)(3) of this Act); and (2) for the establishment and operation of national and regional information and resource clearinghouses for the purpose of providing the most current and complete information regarding medical treatment procedures and resources and community resources for the provision of services and treatment for disabled infants with life-threatening conditions

STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION

SEC. 205. (a) No provision of this Act or any amendment made by this Act is intended to affect any right or protection under section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973.

(b) No provision of this Act or any amendment made by this Act may be so construed as to authorize the Secretary or any other governmental entity to establish standards prescribing specific medical treatments for specific conditions, except to the extent that such standards are authorized by other laws.

(c) If the provisions of any part of this Act or any amendment made by this Act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances be held invalid, the provisions of the other parts and their application to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

EFFECTIVE DATES

SEC. 207. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b), the provisions of this act or any amendment made by this Act shall be effective on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendment made by section 201(a)(3) of this Act shall become effective one year after the date of such enactment.

(2) In the event that, prior to such effective date, funds have not been appropriated pursuant to section 5 of the Act (as amended by section 104 of this Act) for the purpose of grants under section 4(c) of the Act (as amended by section 201(c) of this Act), the Secretary may grant to any State which has not met the requirements of section 4(b)(2)(K) of the Act (as amended by section 201(a)(3) of this Act) a waiver of such requirements for a period of not more than one year, if the Secretary finds that such State is making a good faith effort to comply with such requirements.

HATCH AMENDMENT NO. 3422

Mr. HATCH proposed an amendment to the bill S. 1003, supra; as follows:

On page 14, strike out lines 9 through 16.

At the end of the bill add the following new title:

TITLE IV—REPORT

SEC. 401. Not later than October 1, 1987, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall submit to the Congress a detailed report on the implementation and the effects of the provisions of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act Amendments of 1983 and the amendments made by it.

RELIEF OF THE ESTATE OF NELL J. REDFIELD

MOYNIHAN (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 3423

Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself, Mr. DOLE, and Mr. BRADLEY) proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 1428) for the relief of the estate of Nell J. Redfield; as follows:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert: (a) in determining whether the base quarter ending on September 30, 1984 is a cost-of-living computation quarter for the purposes of the cost-of-living increases under sections 215(i) and 1617 of the Social Security Act, the phrase "is 3 percent or more"; appearing in section 215(i)(1)(B) of such Act shall be deemed to read "is greater than zero".

(b) For purposes of section 215(i) of such Act, the provisions of subsection (a) shall not constitute a "general benefit increase".

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I would like to announce that the Senate Small Business Committee's Subcommittee on Small Business: Family Farm, will hold a hearing on August 1, 1984, to examine the issue of corporate buyouts of family farms. The hearing will begin at 10 a.m. in room 428A of the Russell Senate Office Building. Senator PRESSLER will chair the hearing. For further information, please contact Mike Haynes, chief counsel of the committee, at 224-8487.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

SUBCOMMITTEE ON SURFACE TRANSPORTATION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Surface Transportation of the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Thursday, July 26, 1984, to hold a hearing on Amtrak's safety record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Foreign Relations be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Thursday, July 26, at 2 p.m., to hold a hearing to consider the nomination of Richard Wood Boehm, to be Ambassador to the Republic of Cyprus.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT AFFAIRS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Governmental Affairs be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Thursday, July 26, to hold a markup on the following bills:

S. 1858—DC Home Rule Act; and

S. 2438—Paperwork Reduction Act Amendments of 1984.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

PELL SUPPORTS SBA SECONDARY MARKET LEGISLATION

● Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, last February, Senator WEICKER and I introduced S. 2375, the "Small Business Secondary Market Improvements Act of 1984." That bill is designed to improve the operation of SBA's secondary market, and increase small business access to capital. On July 10, the President signed that bill into law—Public Law 98-352. Last April, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL] asked to be added as a cosponsor of this bill. Through an oversight, that action was not taken until this past Monday. While I have added the Senator as a cosponsor of this bill, as the ranking Democratic member of the Senate Small Business Committee, I want the record to reflect Senator PELL's early and strong support for this specific legislation.●

SSBN—HENRY M. JACKSON

● Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I have received a letter from Adm. Kinnaird R. NcKee, in which he tells of the excellent performance of the U.S. Navy's fifth Trident strategic ballistic missile submarine. Admiral McKee's admiration and words of praise also focus on the man for whom the submarine is named, the man Admiral McKee calls the patron saint of the Naval Nuclear Propulsion Program—Henry M. Jackson.

McKee notes that early in his congressional career, Senator Jackson recognized the vast potential of nuclear propulsion for warships, particularly submarines, and the importance of doing the job right. With his vision and commitment, Scoop played a major role in building a navy in which 40 percent of our ships are nuclear powered and can travel the globe independent of fuel supplies. Scoop Jackson saw the need for these submarines and surface warships, and helped to make them possible.

According to the admiral, Scoop derived great satisfaction from the accomplishments of the Naval Nuclear Propulsion Program. He quotes the Senator as pointing out that:

> The Navy today has operational about 161 naval reactors without an incident occurring that would cause any problems for the Navy, for those aboard, for the public.

Senator Jackson's commitment to the pursuit of world peace was based on the recognition that such peace comes through preparedness. And, he also, played a major role in making possible the development of atomic energy for peaceful purposes as well as national defense. His insight and support in this new field of technology was pivotal.

Mr. President, I submit Admiral McKee's letter for the RECORD:

NAVAL REACTORS,
July 2, 1984.

Hon. JAMES A. MCCLURE,
Chairman, Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I have just returned from a successful initial sea trial of Henry M. Jackson—our fifth Trident strategic ballistic missile submarine. The Senator would have been proud of the way both ship and crew performed.

To those of us who have grown up in the Naval Nuclear Propulsion Program, Senator Jackson was and is something of a patron saint. His association with our work began in 1949 when, as a young Congressman from the Second District of Washington, he was appointed to the newly established Joint Committee on Atomic Energy. From the outset he recognized the vast potential of nuclear propulsion for warships—particularly submarines—and the importance of doing the job right.

He retained his seat on the committee when he was elected to the Senate. There, he continued to play a major role in making possible the development of atomic energy for peaceful purposes as well as for national defense. It is hard to imagine where we would be now were it not for his insight and support in this entirely new field of technology.

Today 40 percent of our naval combatants are nuclear powered—submarines that are able to operate alone and unsupported in the most hostile areas of the globe, and surface warships that patrol the world's oceans unconstrained by uncertain fuel supplies. In the past two decades these ships have assumed a vitally important place in our naval strategy, playing a role which Senator Jackson foresaw and helped make possible.

The influence and the respect that Senator Jackson commanded among his fellow citizens and in Congress stemmed from his knowledge, good judgment, and integrity. His contributions to this nation extend far beyond those related to the Naval Nuclear Propulsion Program, but there was never any doubt of the satisfaction he derived from the Program's accomplishments. His comments during a hearing two years ago are illustrative:

I would point out, as the chairman alluded to indirectly, that the Navy today has operational about 161 naval reactors without an incident occurring that would cause any problem for the Navy or for those aboard or for the public. That is a phenomenal record. That's far more reactors, as the chairman knows, than in the private sector. Every one of them have functioned with great precision and to the enduring benefit of the Navy. It's the most revolutionary thing that's ever happened to the U.S. Navy.

Senator Jackson devoted his life to the pursuit of world peace, but he fully understood that security and peace are not separable issues to be debated one at the expense of the other. He also knew that in the presence of a heavily armed antagonist, weakness is an invitation to conflict.

The Senator recognized early on that Trident submarines would become our most effective deterrent to conflict. It is only fitting that the newest ship of this class carry his name. He left a remarkable legacy of public service. We have a responsibility to share his commitment. The Henry M. Jackson crew understands that responsibility, and is off to a fine start.

Sincerely,

KINNAIRD R. MCKEE,
Admiral, U.S. Navy.●

OUTLOOK FOR U.S. STEEL INDUSTRY

● Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I was pleased to read the conclusions of a study on the U.S. steel industry undertaken by the Congressional Research Service. That study entitled, "America's Steel Industry: Modernizing to Compete," concludes that America's steel industry is hardly a dying industry, despite foreign competition and sluggish domestic demand. If anything, foreign inroads into the American market and shifts in American patterns of steel consumption have inspired the industry finally to address its obsolescence, declining productivity, high labor costs, poor labor-management relations, and other factors which have hampered its competitiveness in world markets.

According to CRS the industry is:

> Aggressively implementing programs of rationalization and modernization to maintain or increase its stature among the world's steel industries, especially in the U.S. market, where import penetration has reached levels of about 20 percent.

Generally the outlook for the steel industry's future in America is encouraging. CRS does not overlook the need for continued attention to the problem areas in steel production, but, overall, its report gives us a positive assessment of recent trends in the industry and its prospects for future competitiveness.

Specifically the report, authored by David Cantor and dated April 23, 1984, made the following findings:

First, competition in the steel industry is and will likely be for market share of a sluggish and declining market. Thus, modernization will be motivated more by the need to achieve greater efficiencies in steel production to be able to compete with foreign producers rather than for growth.

Second, a major thrust in the modernization of America's steel industry has been the replacement of much of its obsolete open-hearth and older basic oxygen capacity. This rationalization, prompted by the declining trend in steel demand, has been pursued, also, in other industrial countries, and at a faster pace than in the United States.

Third, a second facet of modernization in America's steel industry has been the relatively rapid expansion of the electric furnace. Indeed, the United States is the world leader in the use of this process, and is continuing to install new electric steelmaking capability faster than any other country.

Fourth, the third emphasis in the modernization process is the rapid expansion and use of new technologies to increase efficiency and lower production costs of steel products. America's steel industry enjoys a relatively high rate of growth in the use of the continuous casting process vis-a-vis other industrial countries, even during the recent period of recession in 1981 and 1982. Ladle technology, quality control techniques and methods for direct casting of finished steel products are receiving greater attention in the United States and elsewhere. These measures do not increase the total quantity of raw steel produced; instead, they represent efforts to produce better quality finished steel products and at lower costs.

Fifth, despite improvements in and the modernization of steelmaking in the United States, there remains areas of concern, if the U.S. steel industry is to attain a level of international competitiveness. First America's steel industry is slow in eliminating its obsolete open-hearth capacity in relation to other countries, and is likely to use this process intensively. Second, U.S. steel labor costs continue to be high relative to other major steel-producing countries, especially in the Third World. Achieving international competitiveness will require modernization to be pursued aggressively in the United States to attain higher levels of technical efficiency and lower unit costs of production on a par with other countries.

Why should an industry making this kind of progress finally after nearly 7 years of some form of import protection be entitled to more protection? Shouldn't we rather encourage even greater efforts toward modernization so that steelmakers won't rest on their recent progress, while foreign producers continue to make innovations?

We can do more for the industry by refusing import relief and thereby forcing necessary, though sometimes unpleasant, restructuring. More import relief for steel will, in addition, do great harm to the world trading system. It is hardly justifiable to risk a trade war with the Europeans, the alienation of trading partners like Canada which trade steel with us fairly and on a daily basis, or further harm to the fragile balance of payments situation of some LDC steel exporters, all to protect an industry now on an upswing.

An article in the June 25 issue of Business Week suggested that the ITC decision on steel signals more than ever the distinct possibility of a trade war. Mr. President, I request that this Business Week article, along with others from the Boston Globe, Barrons, the Los Angeles Times, and the Wall Street Journal be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From Business Week, June 25, 1984]

SUDDENLY, A NEW TRADE WAR LOOMS: AN ITC RULING ON STEEL HEIGHTENS PROTECTIONISM AS A CAMPAIGN ISSUE

For a brief sunny period this spring, the Reagan Administration's trade officials had a respite from their fears that election-year political pressures would push the U.S. into a protectionist shootout with its trading partners. It seemed unlikely that Congress would pass restrictive trade legislation before the election. And the International Trade Commission had found in two unanimous rulings that the stainless-steel-flatware and shoe industries had not been injured by imports. President Reagan, it appeared, might not have to make a preelection choice after all on whether to curb imports or risk losing votes.

But chances for finessing protectionism as a campaign issue were dashed by the ITC's June 12 finding that imports of five categories of steel products—accounting for 70% of U.S. imports, worth $4.2 billion last year—are injuring domestic steelmakers. Now the problem of balancing worldwide U.S. economic relations against ailing domestic industries and jobs is headed squarely for Reagan's desk, just as the Presidential campaign heats up. The ITC must recommend by July 24 some combination of tariffs or quotas on steel imports to remedy the injury to U.S. steelmakers. Reagan will have to decide by Sept. 26 whether to accept, reject, or modify that recommendation—and he may be faced with a similar decision on copper. The shock waves could spread quickly through the global trading system.

VIDEO SPECTACULAR

"The trade-war trigger is half-cocked," warns a high Reagan Administration trade official. "The Democratic convention will make a video spectacular of empty factories and jobless lines caused by imports. If [the Democrats] end their disarray and the economy is beginning to go soft by late September, the President may have to scuttle his free-trade principles or face the fate of that statesman Jerry Ford." The nine largest steel-producing states—California, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Michigan, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Texas—together have 225 of the 270 Electoral College votes Reagan needs to be reelected.

Dismayed steel-exporting nations read the political equation the same way. "It is traumatic," says Adamo Adani, president of ASSIDER, Italy's national steel producers' association. Adani notes that steel cannot be dealt with in a vacuum. "We have to look at the whole import sector," he says. "We import added-value U.S. high tech. The [European Community] and the U.S. have to look at the global picture in any negotiations."

What the ITC found was that U.S. makers of semifinished steel, plates, sheet and strip, wire and wire products, and structural shapes are being hurt by imports. No injury was found in four other categories. But far more than steel imports or the fate of the U.S. steel industry will be involved in Reagan's decision. If he cuts back steel imports to anything like the 15% of U.S. consumption demanded by the steel industry—down from imports' present market share of more than 25%—steel-exporting countries would be entitled under rules of the General Agreement on Tariffs & Trade (GATT) to demand compensation for lost exports to the U.S. worth as much as several billion dollars. That would force the U.S. to cut tariffs on imports of other products, shifting the burden of import injury from steel to other U.S. industries.

COUNTERFIRE

Just finding where to offer tariff cuts of that scope would be difficult. If the U.S. offer did not satisfy its injured trading partners, they could—and almost certainly would—retaliate by curbing an equal amount of imports from the U.S. That, in turn, would be sure to draw heavy protectionist counterfire from Congress.

Only the opening shots in such a world trade war would be fired before the Nov. 6 election. But once hostilities started they would be hard to stop—particularly if the economic recovery were faltering in the U.S. and abroad. And that kind of trade war would in itself pose a massive threat to continued growth of the world economy and to international financial stability.

A more immediate question the ITC and the President will have to face is what kind of restrictions to impose, and on which exporting countries. At this stage, Administration officials hope that, in the interest of avoiding a transatlantic confrontation over trade, any new restrictions on steel imports can be crafted so that imports of EC steel will not be cut any further than the levels agreed to by the U.S. and the EC in October, 1982. That hope is shared by such industry leaders as Bethlehem Steel Corp. Chairman Donald H. Trautlein, by at least some ITC commissioners, and most fervently by European steelmakers.

EXEMPTING THE EC

"This is troubling," says an official of the French Steelmakers Assn. 'We've done our part to limit exports [to the U.S.], and it is unfair to pin the blame on Eurpoe." He stresses that the five products covered by the ITC represent two-thirds of European exports to the U.S., "so the effect could be great." A spokesman for the West German Iron & Steel Makers Assn. puts the European view more bluntly. "European countries have a restrictive agreement on imports to the U.S. that runs to 1985," he says. "As far as we are concerned, this agreement is still valid, and we are not subject to any other restrictive measures." But exempting EC steel from additional curbs could be difficult. Even if the levels of imports from the EC are left unchanged, imposition of import quotas for five years—a likely outcome—would amount to a unilateral two-year extension of the 1982 agreement, which Brussels could reject.

Canadian producers, stunned by the ITC ruling, are urging Ottawa to retaliate dollar for dollar against U.S. exports to Canada if the ITC curbs imports of Canadian steel. Canada last year exported $1 billion worth of steel to the U.S., against $430 billion worth of steel imports from the U.S. But Canadian steelmakers also buy one-third of their coal and iron ore from their neighbor. "We have no objection to the U.S. attacking the problem, but we aren't part of the problem," says James T. Melville, secretary of Algoma Steel Corp. Donald K. Belch, marketing manager of Stelco Inc., says Canada is different from other steel suppliers. "With the Brazilians, Koreans, and Japanese, it's a case of unloading their surplus production in the U.S. We don't do that. Our purchases don't vary in good times or bad." Canadian steelmakers believe their behavior could effectively exempt them from restrictions if the ITC recommends negotiations for orderly marketing agreements or "voluntary restraints" by suppliers.

But if imports of steel from Europe are also excluded from further curbs—and presumably imports from Japan as well, so long as it sticks to its informal agreement to restrain exports to the U.S.—the full brunt of any new restrictions would fall on such developing countries as Mexico, South Korea, and Taiwan. That could touch off a major north-south crisis, at a time when uncertainty about many countries' ability to service their staggering debt is threatening the stability of the international financial system.

Their reaction would be the more bitter because at least some of them—led by Mexico, Brazil, and South Africa—have pledged to restrict reports to the U.S. unilaterally. "Our steel industry is just growing," complains a spokesman for the Korea Trade Promotion Corp. "If Reagan imposes any tariff restriction on our products we will have big problems." Warning against steel curbs in a fiery speech prior to the ITC decision, Brazilian Minister of Industry & Commerce João Camilo Penna declared: "If the U.S. insists, we will not pay our debt to them." While Penna may have exaggerated Brazil's reaction, U.S. protectionism will be a prime target of protests, along with high interest rates, at the planned meeting of seven leading Latin American debtor countries in Cartagena, Colombia, on June 21 and 22.

A NO-WIN CHOICE

What the ITC injury decision does accomplish, at least temporarily, is to reduce protectionist pressure on Capitol Hill. It makes less likely any immediate congressional action on an industry-backed bill, pending before both houses, to impose quotas limiting steel imports to 15% of domestic consumption for five years. But steel-state congressmen make clear they will use the threat of such legislation to pressure Reagan to accept substantial restraints on imports. Representative Joseph M. Gaydos (D-Pa.), chairman of the executive committee of the Congressional Steel Caucus, says, "We feel we can have an impact on the President's decision."

That will leave Reagan little maneuvering room. "The President will face a no-win choice," says an Administration official. "If he hits the EC, he starts a trade war with our allies. If he spares it, he risks exploding the LDC debt bomb." And if the election is close, he has those 225 electoral votes to worry about.

GOING SOFT ON STEEL

A new array of quotas on steel imports recommended by the International Trade Commission cannot really protect the domestic industry from its worst problems and fails to take into account one of the basic difficulties facing this basic industry: the competitive disadvantage imposed by an unrealistic exchange rate for the dollar. President Reagan should reject the proposal.

No one can deny that the industry has problems. It is still plagued by the long-term effects of poor planning and investment by managements that failed to adjust to new technologies. It postponed until too late negotiations with a labor force that was shortsighted in its approach to work-rule changes. It became the victim of dumping practices by foreign competitors subsidized by their governments. It must now sell into markets saturated by excess production around the world—in many cases supplied by highly efficient new mills in countries such as Mexico, Brazil and South Korea that have low labor costs.

The U.S. industry nevertheless possesses strengths and advantages. Some producers of specialty steels can compete effectively with producers all over the world on price and quality. Small mills using bountiful supplies of scrap are highly efficient—and profitable. They benefit from the fact that U.S. prices for scrap steel remain the lowest in the world. Many buyers remain willing to pay small premiums for domestic steel for the sake of preserving certainty of supply.

More recently, the industry has benefited from agreements with its competitors in the industrial world that impose voluntary limits on exports to the United States. Imposition of the new limits threatens revival of countermeasures in other trade areas, as the European Common Market was quick to point out in its response to the new proposals.

Quotas often work to the disadvantage of other sectors of the economy. In the case of automobile import quotas, they have tended to drive up the prices of all cars, to the direct disadvantage of consumers. The steel quotas will probably increase prices for all steel users, further reducing the competitiveness of American goods in marginal markets.

Finally, the proposals come just as the dollar is surging once again in international exchange markets. Dollar exchange rates are setting decade-old records against the German mark, the French franc, the British pound, the Japanese yen—to name only the most prominent currencies. While it may be argued that the dollar will continue strong indefinitely, serious efforts to reduce the federal deficit are under way, and these efforts ought to help reduce U.S. interest rates, cutting the floor into the dollar. Such adjustments will do more for all parties, and especially the steel industry, than the proposed new quotas.

LOOK AT THE MINI-MILLS, STEEL'S FUTURE LIES IN THE MARKETPLACE, NOT PROTECTIONISM

(By Michael Brody)

It's spring, it's an election year, and the big steel companies are playing politics, as usual. After fighting the Justice Department's Antitrust Division over the LTV-Republic merger, industry lobbyists are now trying to bring election-year pressure to bear on the beleaguered handful of free traders at the Commerce Department, who are opposing stricter import quotas.

The politicization of the steel industry since World War II has gone hand in hand with disastrous mismanagement. Across western Pennsylvania, the Monongahela Valley is a landscape of junked mills and shuttered company towns: the legacy of the executives who have run most of the major integrated producers into the ground. The federal government's assaults on Big Steel's price-setting role, which reached their nadir in President Kennedy's 1962 showdown with U.S. Steel's Roger Blough, helped turn the industry into a political battleground. Today, with foreign competition undercutting Pittsburgh's market power, it is the steelmakers who are besieging the government with demands for federal protection of what is left of their turf.

Pittsburgh, needless to say, blames political interference and "unfair competition" for all of its woes. Unfortunately, however, it's difficult for foreign steelmakers to avoid taking "unfair" advantage of an industry which dragged its heels for decades over replacing ancient open hearths with modern basic oxygen furnaces, and ingot-pouring with expensive new continuous casters, which make possible far higher levels of productivity and quality.

Like other companies that have hung on to aging plants too long, and invested too little, too late in the new technology needed to remain competitive in increasingly cut-throat global markets, the major steel producers have invested heavily in Washington lobbyists instead. The long-run rate of return on such investment may well be negative. Like the prospect of being hanged, the threat of Chapter II concentrates the mind wonderfully on the business at hand. Protectionist nostrums have been defended on the pretext that they provide domestic industry with the time it needs for major restructuring. In steel, all they have done is erode the industry's sense of urgency and allow reluctant companies to avoid taking painful write-offs until the sands were running out. Over the last 10 years, in the teeth of "trigger-price" agreements and "voluntary" quotas, imports' share of the U.S. market has climbed to more than 20% from around 13%.

The year-end bloodletting at U.S. Steel—a $1.2 billion pre-tax charge for the closing of 23 finishing and fabricating mills—has at least helped to bring a note of realism into the executive suite. That write-off, of course, comes on top of a $930 million charge by Bethlehem Steel at the end of 1982, and of Big Steel's previous $809 million capacity cut-back at the end of 1979—which clearly didn't go deep enough. But to old-line company men (and United Steelworkers Union officials), who have resisted every plant closing, lobbying the government to seek to stave off the need for cuts always seems like money well spent. Especially when the short-term price is paid not by the steel companies themselves, but by U.S. consumers forced to buy higher-cost, lower-quality steel (and autos, and refrigerators, and a great many other things), as well as by American workers in agribusiness, petrochemicals and other industries targeted for retaliation by angry foreign governments.

The Reagan Administration, under pressure from political allies in Congress, has already backed away from its commitments for free markets and free trade by imposing steeper tariffs and import quotas on everything from Chinese textiles to Japanese cars and motorcycles to European specialty steels. In January, Bethlehem Steel went far beyond existing quota arrangements by filing a complaint with the U.S. International Trade Commission demanding that all carbon steel imports be limited to 15% of the domestic market for the next five years.

The demand was made not under section 301 of the 1974 Trade Act, which provides for countervailing duties if there is proof that foreign producers have engaged in illegal trade practices, but under section 201, which invites the Chief Executive to take protectionist action whenever imports are found to be hurting U.S. companies, even if no law is broken in the process. The attack on lower-cost foreign steelmakers is aimed at compelling the ITC, which has just six months to make a recommendation on the complaint, to dump the issue in the President's lap by the end of July, thereby forcing him to make a decision by the end of September, just as the election campaign gets into full swing.

All of which has the makings of both a domestic political squabble and another international trade row—especially as the politicization of steel is far more advanced in Europe than here. In France, the announcement of up to 25,000 job losses over the next four years at state-controlled steelworks has triggered rioting throughout Lorraine. Outraged steelworkers have blocked roads and rail lines, thrown rocks and bottles of acid at riot police, sacked local Socialist party offices, and are threatening a march on Paris. By the same token, Italy is currently at war with the Common Market steel cartel over production quotas. State-owned British Steel, subsidies to which fail to compensate for the excess capacity it must keep open, the restrictive union work rules it must accept, and the high-cost British coal it must buy, is suffering further damage from a strike by miners trying to block the closing of money-losing, state-owned coal pits.

Pleas for across-the-board restrictions on imports also strike a jarring note in view of the fact that the industry itself is becoming an importer of lower-cost unfinished steel slabs from countries like Brazil, South Korea and Taiwan. These slabs can then be finished and fabricated in American mills to the specifications of local customers—an international division of labor which could make a lot of sense for everyone.

But attempts to halt the decline of the old-line U.S. steelmakers through political pressure suffer from an even greater defect: half of the industry's competition is already inside the gates. The domestic steel industry today is in fact two industries: the big integrated producers, which turn iron ore into raw steel and then into finished sheets and bars, and the tiny, non-union "minimills," which use electric furnaces to melt down steel scrap from junkyards, get rid of the impurities, and then use it to turn out a relatively narrow range of low-cost, high-profit-margin products.

Unburdened by the enormous capital and energy costs that blast furnaces involve, the mini-mills have been able to undercut dramatically the majors' prices on rod, wire and bar lines. Though relatively small companies like Florida Steel and Nucor cannot produce flat-rolled sheet for GM and GE, or massive I-beams for construction projects, they nonetheless have succeeded in capturing 20% of the domestic steel market—matching the share taken by foreign steelmakers. They were, moreover, the first U.S. steelmakers to install modern continuous casters. And the quickness of their footwork in the marketplace stands in stark contrast to the interminable delays of giants like Big Steel—at which the latest flood of red ink largely reflects the closing of a host of mills which the minis years ago had rendered hopelessly uncompetitive.

The spectacular growth of the mini-mills plainly undercuts the integrated producers' claim that steel is an industry in crisis and in need of a kind of subsidy. The majors may have lost $6 billion over the last two years; the minis are still making hefty profits. But their success in closing many of the big steelmakers' rolling mills has also earned them the political enmity of the United Steelworkers Union. Though whopping productivity bonuses may boost the total compensation of the mini-mills' non-union workforces above USW levels, base wages and fringes average roughly half union rates—and the restrictive union work rules that hamper productivity gains at the integrated producers simply don't exist.

The management approach of mini-mills like Nucor is one of minimal white-collar bureaucracy, few management perquisites, and salary levels sharply below Pittsburgh's well-padded standard. That may not appeal much to the executives who are trooping down to Washington to demand what amount to government bailouts for the firms they have mismanaged—any more than the minis' blue-collar wage scales and strict productivity standards appeal to the shell-shocked remains of the once-mighty USW. (The union, which has seen its active membership cut in half over the past 10 years, and is still embroiled in the disastrous Phelps Dodge copper strike, has just survived a bruising election campaign in which acting president Lynn Williams, a Canadian, won out over a rival who urged steelworkers to vote American as well as buy American.)

But with new mini-mills springing up literally within the walls of frostbelt plants abandoned by the big steelmakers, it is clear that the pleas of the old guard don't reflect what is really going on in the industry. This country has a healthy, dynamic steel industry—it just isn't the one screaming for political protection. Pittsburgh and Chicago, please copy.

UNITED STATES SHOULD LOOK WITHIN, NOT ABROAD, FOR CAUSE OF ITS STEEL INDUSTRY ILLS

(By Murray L. Weidenbaum)

The rapid rise of imports into the United States has led to pleas for restrictions on international trade to "protect" American industry. Such moves are misguided from the viewpoint of American business as well as consumers.

First of all, the companies and unions that are urging the government to intervene have not faced up to their own shortcomings. Higher absenteeism and labor turnover among U.S. auto workers, for example, are not the fault of the Japanese, who have adopted our Puritan work ethic with a vengeance.

From 1950 to 1980, the steel industry's wages and fringe benefits rose far more rapidly than those of other manufacturing industries or those of Western European competitors. The resultant high cost of American production was bound to adversely affect competitiveness. To restrict foreign competition only shifts the burden to American consumers of steel, including the hard-pressed auto industry.

The steel industry complains, quite properly, about subsidies granted by foreign governments to their steel producers. Yet our industry does not support the preferred remedy that the law provides—a special tariff on foreign steel to offset the foreign subsidy. Instead, steelmakers use the subsidy issue to advocate import quotas. Apparently, the industry is more interested in avoiding competition than in combating subsidies.

Since 1980, the labor cost gap between steel and other U.S. manufacturing industries has been narrowing. That is to say, the adjustment process is properly at work and "protectionism" would only delay it. Perhaps as the U.S. steel industry controls its operating costs more effectively, it will reconsider its historically low commitment to new technology.

When we rank industries by their ratios of research and development to sales (a rough measure of technological orientation), steel is near the bottom.

Another reason why so many U.S. companies have lost market shares to foreign producers in the last three years is the run-up in the value of the dollar in relation to foreign currencies. For every company competing against foreign producers, whether at home or abroad, the strengthening of the dollar means that foreign goods are becoming cheaper than American products. For specific American producers, these esoteric exchange rate movements have generated the equivalent of a 20% to 40% price increase in relation to goods produced overseas.

Who or what is to blame? There are many factors, some that we really cannot or should not do much about. For instance, many foreign investors send their money to the United States because this country is considered to be a safe haven. But another reason for the super-strong dollar is our own doing—those large budget deficits that are pushing up interest rates. That $200-billion-a-year tide of red ink has a distinct made-in-Washington label. It cannot be blamed on foreigners.

There is an even more basic reason to oppose protectionist moves, however. The United States is the world's largest exporter. When we impose trade restraints, we set ourselves up for retaliation. When the federal government recently established limits on textile imports from China, that country quickly responded by canceling contracts for U.S. cotton, soybeans and synthetic fibers.

The European Common Market is trying to "compensate" for the quotas we imposed last July against European specialty steels by putting tight limits on imports of U.S. chemicals, plastics, skis, rifles and burglar alarms.

It would also help to clear the air if we acknowledged that the United States does not have clean hands. It is not shy in erecting its own trade obstacles, such as "Buy American" statutes. All state cars in New Jersey, for example, must be produced domestically.

Foreign ships are prohibited by law from engaging in commerce between American ports. Our agricultural laws authorize import restraints on sugar, beef, dairy products and mandarin oranges.

If we are truly concerned about the U.S. trade deficit, we should also focus on self-inflicted wounds, the many barriers our government erects to our own exports.

For example, the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act prohibits the export of oil from North Slope fields. A rider to an appropriations act for the Interior Department bans timber exports from federal land west of the 100th meridian. When trade barriers get that specific, you can detect the rich aroma of special interests of plain, old misguided chauvinism.

How should we respond to continuing pressures for protection? First, we should realize that a healthy economy nips protectionist sentiment in the bud. Second, smaller budget deficits would alleviate pressures on interest rates and the dollar. Third, we should remove or at least curb the many restraints on our own exports. Fourth, we should avoid propping up industries with unjustifiably high cost levels.

Fifth, we should acknowledge the positive role of multinational companies. They are less likely to plead for protection than other companies and also are the private-sector alternative to foreign aid in promoting developing nations' economies.

Finally, we should focus on improving the productivity of our own industries. Labor and management in each company need to face the challenge of greater productivity and enhanced competitiveness. We should not look to Washington when the answer is to be found in company and union offices in Detroit, Chicago, St. Louis, Pittsburgh and Los Angeles.

THE CASE FOR FREE TRADE STILL HASN'T BEEN MADE

(By Lindley H. Clark, Jr.)

Adam Smith, the Scottish philosopher who more or less invented economics more than 200 years ago, has often been attacked as an impractical visionary. Nothing could be further from the truth. Mr. Smith knew exactly what the world was like.

As much as he admired the virtues of free trade, for instance, he was realistic enough to doubt that he would ever be able to completely convert all his fellow men. "To expect," he wrote, "that the freedom of trade should ever be entirely restored in Great Britain, is as absurd as to expect that an Oceana or Utopia should ever be established in it.

"Not only the prejudices of the public, but what is much more unconquerable, the private interests of many individuals, irresistibly oppose it."

Over the past two centuries, free trade has had its ups and downs. There was a time in the 19th century when the British seemed determined to prove Mr. Smith wrong, but other notions intervened.

Here in the U.S., there have been real gains, and tariffs are lower than they once were. But now, in 1984, with the economy in a roaring boom, protectionism is still alive and well. During the 1981-82 recession, the administration gave a lot of ground to protectionists by persuading other countries to limit or to continue limiting exports of such items as autos and textiles to the U.S. But there seemed to be reason to hope that such aberrant behavior reflected bad times, not ideology.

After all, the Reagan administration was chockablock with men who wore Adam Smith neckties and, more important, seemed to know what Mr. Smith really said.

But, amid the expansion, the administration has continued to negotiate limits on imports. A frequent administration comment is that if it didn't act, Congress would do something much worse. Sometime it would be interesting to find out whether Congress really is as silly as it's made out to be.

Well, now the administration has a chance—really, two chances—to show its true colors.

On June 12 the International Trade Commission ruled that U.S. steelmakers are being seriously injured by five major types of imported steel products. The best thing you can say about the ITC on this one is that they had to wrestle over the decision: It was a 3-2 vote and the steel companies and the steel union didn't get absolutely everything they wanted.

There had been reason to hope for better. A few days earlier the commission had turned down a similar plea from the shoe industry.

But things now went from bad to worse. A couple of days after the steel decision, the ITC ruled, 5-0, that U.S. copper producers are being seriously injured by imports and deserve protection.

What both the steel and copper companies would like is import quotas, low import quotas. The trouble with tariffs is that those tricky foreigners can become more efficient, cut their prices and maybe even sell more to the U.S. despite the higher tariffs. The ITC hasn't decided what to recommend to President Reagan, which is where the buck stops.

Mr. Reagan can, if he chooses, simply say no, which would be wonderful. But the pressures on him are considerable. The copper producers operate in the West, where there normally are a large number of Reagan voters. The steel companies and especially the steel union have a lot of friends in Congress, which conceivably could do by legislation anything that the president refused to do by fiat.

Adam Smith, who believed in calling a spade a spade, said that those who contrived to restrict entry to markets were monopolists. But recognition of that didn't seem to bring public opprobrium then, any more than it does now.

Quite the reverse. "The member of parliament who supports every proposal for strengthening this monopoly," Mr. Smith wrote, "is sure to acquire not only the reputation of understanding trade, but great popularity and influence with an order of men whose numbers and wealth render them of great importance.

"If he opposes them, on the contrary, and still more if he has authority enough to be able to thwart them, neither the most acknowledged probity, nor the highest rank, nor the greatest public services, can protect him from the most infamous abuse and detraction, from personal insults, nor sometimes from real danger, arising from the insolent outrage of furious and disappointed monopolists."

The aim of any monopolist is higher prices, and the steel and cooper companies aren't exceptions. The result would be that American consumers and businessmen would be paying a large subsidy to steel and copper companies. The advantage of this sort of subsidy, from the companies' standpoint, is that it's hard to measure. A straight cash payment would be better from the public's standpoint, since its size would be apparent.

What would the subsidy buy? One thing it would buy is more trouble with less developed countries, which are hoping through increased exports of such things as copper and steel to earn funds to service those debts to U.S. banks. There is no reason to be confident that the U.S. industries would become more efficient; with protection, there would be less need for any such action. The pleas for protection would be followed by fresh pleas later on.

Leland B. Yeager of the University of Virginia and David G. Tuerck of Suffolk University write of such matters in "Realism and Free-Trade Policy," an article in The Cato Journal, published by Washington's Cato Institute.

They argue that the purpose of trade, in international markets or at the corner grocery, is to get the best possible products at the lowest possible prices. There it is, in simple language. Economists can and do talk about division of labor and comparative advantage, and the concepts have meaning. But the ultimate question is, why should we do something expensively when we can do it cheaply?

If foreign countries choose to burden their economies by selling goods in the U.S. at uneconomic prices, why not let them? Let the seller beware.

Sure, free trade can lead to displacement of U.S. workers; change always does that, no matter what causes it. It would make more sense for government to subsidize retraining and placement of such workers instead of subsidizing the stagnation of domestic industries.

The idea that the government can construct a sensible program to save steel, copper, autos, textiles and other industries is ridiculous. Profs. Yeager and Tuerck put it this way:

"Can anyone seriously believe, in this day and age, that the governmental process as it operates in the United States and other democratic countries is capable of producing a coherent program of detailed interventions effectively oriented toward nationally sensible economic objectives?"

The ITC has until July 24 to submit its steel recommendation to President Reagan, who must act on it within 60 days. The commission will notify Mr. Reagan of its copper decision on July 9, and the president again has 60 days to act.

The best decision Mr. Reagan could make would be to do nothing at all. In that way he could show the sort of wisdom that would have surprised Adam Smith.●

THE 10TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE TURKISH INVASION OF CYPRUS

● Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, it is with great sadness that we mark the tragic event which, one decade ago, brought great suffering and hardship to the people of Cyprus. The invasion of 40,000 Turkish troops has left a wound which has still not been allowed to heal.

For 10 years, Cyprus has existed as a divided nation, its people living with the memory of that terrible day in 1974 when humanitarian and economic chaos was inflicted on them by the invading Turks. Along with the survivors of the invasion, we remember the 200,000 Greek Cypriots who were forced to flee from their homes as their property and belongings were confiscated.

Today, our hearts go out to those who must live as refugees in their own land—their ancestral homes lying out of reach behind the lines of the Turkish occupation army.

Today we grieve with them for the thousands of their country men and women who died, and for the thousands of others whose fate is still unknown.

The human tragedy of the past decade, which we commemorate today, is inextricably linked to the political questions to which no resolution has been found. The effort to achieve a just and lasting solution to the Cyprus dispute is just as elusive in 1984 as it was 10 years ago.

Negotiations to resolve the conflict through intercommunal talks between the Greek and Turkish Cypriots and efforts to trace the missing Cypriots have progressed slowly.

The refusal of Turkish Cypriots to comply with U.N. resolutions calling for the removal of all troops from Cyprus and their unwillingness to respond to allegations concerning the several thousand Greek Cypriots who disappeared during the occupation have impeded progress toward a negotiated settlement.

With the passage of time, we have seen the walls of partition grow higher, as the injustices inflicted on the Greek Cypriots by their Turkish neighbors increase.

Today, in blatant violation of international law, the Turkish Cypriot Government seeks to legitimize itself by officially declaring the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus as an independent state. The international community has forcefully condemned this move by refusing to recognize this illegal and provocative act.

The effect of this forced division of the island is to prevent the peaceful coexistence of Greek and Turkish Cypriots. The present environment breeds hatred, prejudice, and intolerance and makes more difficult the achievement of peace through trust and understanding.

The solution to the wrenching problems of a divided Cyprus will not be found in deeper divisions. A policy of partition is no solution for the troubles that beset the island and makes the prospect for a negotiated settlement even more elusive.

All too often, unjustified actions of this kind are accepted by the international community with the passage of time. As the world's attention becomes diverted by other events, the original misdeeds are forgotten and the injustice seems not quite so outrageous as it once did.

Our task is to ensure that, until a just political solution to this conflict is achieved, the world will not be permitted to forget.

The United States must generously exercise its powers of persuasiveness to convince Turkey that its aggressive policies will never bring it victory and that the price of continued unwillingness to negotiate a settlement will be high.

Along with other nations of the free world, the United States must intensify its efforts to bring a just and lasting solution to the violations of international justice which have been allowed to continue for too long. Pursuit of that goal not only pays tribute to those who died and those who continue to suffer from this decade of conflict, it also honors the principles of human rights, justice, and international law to which the United States has always been committed.

And so, today, let us pledge to work to ensure that next year the words of sympathy with the people of Cyprus which we express here today will be replaced with words of joy as we celebrate the restoration of unity and independence to the Republic of Cyprus.●

BALTIC FREEDOM

● Mr. PELL. Mr. President, last month, for the third consecutive year, the Congress passed legislation designating June 14 as "Baltic Freedom Day." Although the independence of the Baltic States was tragically and illegally ended by the Soviet Union during the Second World War, time has not diminished their desire for political autonomy nor the commitment of the United States to their noble cause. Today, on the 62d anniversary of our de jure recognition of the sovereign nations of Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia, I want to reaffirm this commitment and honor the Baltic peoples' struggle for freedom.

In 1918, after more than a century of Russian rule and czarist oppression, the Baltic republics triumphantly declared their independence. Fortified by their rich and diverse cultural heritage, these young democratic nations withstood Bolshevik challenges to their sovereignty, negotiated nonaggression pacts with their neighbor to the east, and enjoyed full membership in the League of Nations. Their bright future was an inspiration to all emerging nations after the ravages of the First World War.

In the regional power struggle of the late 1930's, the Baltic States tried to maintain absolute neutrality. They became victims, however, of a secret protocol to the German-Soviet pact of 1939 under which they were relegated to the Soviet "sphere of influence." Once Moscow demanded that the three strategic countries sign mutual assistance treaties with the Soviet Union, their fate had been sealed. In rapid succession, Red Army troops were stationed on Baltic soil, the national governments were replaced with pro-Soviet regimes, and the new "parliaments," in flagrant violation of the Baltic constitutions and against the will of the Baltic peoples, voted for incorporation into the Soviet Union by a mere show of hands. Because of the Soviet Union's disrespect for the principle of national self-determination, Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia became the only members of the League of Nations unable to join the United Nations. To this day, the United States has consistently refused to recognize the Soviet Union's unlawful annexation of the Baltic States.

Since 1940, the Soviet Union has pursued a policy of russification designed to eliminate independent religious, political and cultural activities in the Baltic States. While the Stalinist practice of mass deportations and arbitrary murder has ended, the repression continues. In Lithuania, where Catholicism is deeply rooted, worshippers have been intimidated and harassed, and Catholic priests have been detained, brought to trial and convicted on charges of "anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda." The Lithuanian Helsinki Monitoring Group, another target of the Government's campaign, has been severely shattered by the imprisonment and involuntary exile of some of its members. In Latvia and Estonia, in addition to individual cases of human rights violations, evidence of cultural repression is starkly provided by demographic statistics; in both states, the proportion of native citizens continues to decline.

In spite of such formidable obstacles, the people of the Baltic States continue to strive to protect their national identities. As a member of the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe, I am heartened by their courage and vitality, but I am also deeply concerned about recurring violations of their human rights. The Soviet Union has pledged respect for these rights and as a party to the United Nations Charter and a signatory of the Helsinki accords, it has accepted political and legal obligations in these areas. We must take every opportunity to remind the Soviet Union of these obligations and, as we do today, continue to pledge our support for the Baltic peoples' historic struggle for freedom.●

A TRIBUTE TO GOV. MARIO CUOMO'S KEYNOTE ADDRESS

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, a week has passed since the close of the Democratic National Convention in San Francisco. Some of the events have already begun to recede from memory; others grow stronger. I expect one to linger longest: the keynote address delivered by Gov. Mario Cuomo of New York on July 16. It was, I believe, the greatest keynote of our age, an eloquent reminder of what we as a party—and as a nation—stand for. I do not expect to hear its equal.

Mr. President, I ask that the text of Governor Cuomo's address be printed in the RECORD.

The material follows:

TEXT OF GOVERNOR CUOMO'S KEYNOTE ADDRESS

On behalf of the Empire State and the family of New York, I thank you for the great privilege of being able to address this convention.

Please allow me to skip the stories and the poetry and the temptation to deal in nice but vague rhetoric.

Let me instead use this valuable opportunity to deal immediately with questions that should determine this election and that we all know are vital to the American people.

TALE OF TWO CITIES

Ten days ago, President Reagan admitted that although some people in this country seemed to be doing well nowadays, others were unhappy, even worried, about themselves, their families and their futures.

The president said that he didn't understand that fear. He said, "Why, this country is a shining city on a hill."

And the president is right. In many ways we are "a shining city on a hill."

But the hard truth is that not everyone is sharing in this city's splendor and glory.

A shining city is perhaps all the president sees from the portico of the White House and the veranda of his ranch, where everyone seems to be doing well.

But there's another city, another part of the city, the part where some people can't pay their mortgages and most young people can't afford one, where students can't afford the education they need and middle-class parents watch the dreams they hold for their children evaporate.

In this part of the city there are more poor than ever, more families in trouble, more and more people who need help but can't find it.

Even worse: There are elderly people who tremble in the basements of the houses there.

And there are people who sleep in the city streets, in the gutter, where the glitter doesn't show.

There are ghettos where thousands of young people, without a job or an education, give their lives away to drug dealers every day.

There is despair, Mr. President, in the faces that you don't see, in the places that you don't visit in your shining city.

In fact, you ought to know Mr. President, that this nation is more a "Tale of Two Cities" than it is just a "Shining City on a Hill."

Maybe, maybe, Mr. President, if you visited more places.

Maybe if you went to Appalachia where some people still live in sheds, maybe if you went to Lackawanna where thousands of unemployed steel workers wonder why we subsidized foreign steel.

Maybe, maybe, Mr. President, if you stopped into a shelter in Chicago and talked with some of the homeless there; maybe, Mr. President, if you asked a woman who'd been denied the help she needs to feed her children because you said we needed the money for a tax break to a millionaire or to build a missile we can't even afford to use—maybe then you'd understand.

Maybe, maybe, Mr. President.

But I'm afraid not.

Because, the truth is, ladies and gentlemen, that this is how we were warned it would be.

President Reagan told us from the beginning that he believed in a kind of social Darwinism. Survival of the fittest. "Government can't do everything," we were told. "So it should settle for taking care of the strong and hope that economic ambition and charity will do the rest. Make the rich richer and what falls from their table will be enough for the middle class and those who are trying desperately to work their way into the middle class."

You know, the Republicans called it trickle-down when Hoover tried it. Now they call it supply side. But, it's the same shining city for those relative few who are lucky enough to live in its good neighborhoods.

But for the people who are excluded—for the people who are locked out—all they can do is to stare from a distance at that city's glimmering towers.

It's an old story. It's as old as our history.

DEMOCRATS AND REPUBLICANS

The difference between Democrats and Republicans has always been measured in courage and confidence. The Republicans believe that the wagon train will not make it to the frontier unless some of the old, some of the young and some of the weak are left behind by the side of the trail.

The strong, the strong they tell us will inherit the land!

We Democrats believe that we can make it all the way with the whole family intact.

And, we have more than once.

Ever since Franklin Roosevelt lifted himself from his wheelchair to lift this nation from its knees. Wagon train after wagon train. To new frontiers of education, housing, peace. The whole family aboard. Constantly reaching out to extend and enlarge that family. Lifting them up into the wagon on the way. Blacks and Hispanics, and people of every ethnic group, and native Americans—all those struggling to build their families and claim some small share of America.

For nearly 50 years we carried them all to new levels of comfort, security, dignity, even affluence.

And remember this, some of us are in this room today only because this nation had that kind of confidence.

And it would be wrong to forget that.

CLAIMING THE FUTURE

So, here we are at this convention to remind ourselves where we come from and to claim the future for ourselves and for our children.

Today our great Democratic Party, which has saved this nation from depression, from fascism, from racism, from corruption, is called upon to do it again—this time to save the nation from confusion and division, from the threat of eventual fiscal disaster and most of all from the fear of a nuclear holocaust.

That's not going to be easy. Mo Udall is exactly right, it's not going to be easy.

In order to succeed, we must answer our opponent's polished and appealing rhetoric with a more telling reasonableness and rationality.

We must win this case on the merits.

We must get the American public to look past the glitter, beyond the showmanship—to reality, to the hard substance of things. And we will do that not so much with speeches that sound good as with speeches that are good and sound.

Not so much with speeches that will bring people to their feet as with speeches that bring people to their senses.

We must make the American people hear our "Tale of Two Cities."

We must convince them that we don't have to settle for two cities, that we can have one city, indivisible, shining for all of its people.

Now we will have no chance to do that if what comes out of this convention is a babel of arguing voices. If that's what's heard throughout the campaign—dissident voices from all sides—we will have no chance to tell our message.

To succeed we will have to surrender small parts of our individual interest, to build a platform we can all stand on, at once, comfortably—proudly singing out the truth for the nation to hear, in chorus, its logic so clear and commanding that no slick commercial, no amount of geniality, no martial music will be able to muffle the sound of the truth.

UNITING THE PARTY AND THE NATION

We Democrats must unite.

We Democrats must unite so that the entire nation can unite because surely the Republicans won't bring this country together. Their policies divide the nation—into the lucky and the left-out, into the royalty and the rabble.

The Republicans are willing to treat that division as victory. They would cut this nation in half, into those temporarily better off and those worse off than before, and they would call that division recovery.

Now we should not be embarrassed, we should not be embarrassed or dismayed or chagrined if the process of unifying is difficult, even wrenching at times.

Remember that, unlike any other party, we embrace men and women of every color, every creed, every orientation, every economic class. In our family are gathered everyone from the abject poor of Essex County in New York, to the enlightened affluent of the gold coasts at both ends of our nation. And in between is the heart of our constituency. The middle class—the people not rich enough to be worry-free but not poor enough to be on welfare. The middle class, those who work for a living because they have to. White collar and blue collar. Young professionals. Men and women in small business desperate for the capital and contracts they need to prove their worth.

We speak for the minorities who have not yet entered the main stream.

We speak for ethnics who want to add their culture to the magnificent mosaic that is America.

We speak for women who are indignant that we refuse to etch into our governmental commandments the simple rule "thou shalt not sin against equality," a rule so simple—

I was going to say, and I perhaps dare not but I will, it's a commandment so simple it can be spelled in three letters—E.R.A.!

We speak for young people demanding an education and a future.

We speak for senior citizens who are terrorized by the idea that their only security—their Social Security—is being threatened.
